NEW CORPORATION

Big Bone Springs Mineral Water Co., Formed With a Capital Stock of $10.000.

The Big Bone Springs Water Co., the incorporation of which the Recorder had only time to make mention last week, is now ready for business which is the buying, selling and bottling and dealing generally in spring waters and other waters. The company is authorized to buy, rent or lease such real estate as may be desired for its business. The incorporators are Wm. B. O'Neal, of Covington, and Edward H. Thompson and Joseph Segmeister, of Cincinnati. The incorporation began business Jan. 1, 1916, and will continue 50 years. The capital stock is $10,000 divided into 100 shares, the par value of a share being $100.

This company believes it will be able to build up a good business handling the famous Big Bone water, besides bringing Big Bone to the front as a health resort in attempting which it expects to invest considerable money in the improvement of the springs and providing up-to-date accommodations for those who desire to remain there any length of time. To accomplish what the incorporation desires will require considerable money and if it is accomplished it will be a blessing to the Big Bone neighborhood. One disadvantage under which the company now labors is the lack of a good road from either Walton or Richwood to the springs, but it is believed that this handicap will be removed in the next few years at least. Big Bone Springs should have been a big resort many years ago, but its unfortunate location, which, with good roads, will no longer be a drawback because of the motor car.

WHAT THE GRANGE STANDS FOR.

Our Declaration of Purposes issued in the early days of the Order declared it as our purpose "To develop a higher and better manhood and womanhood among ourselves. To enhance the comforts and attractions of our homes and strengthen our attachments to our pursuits."

These purposes are being fulfilled in thousands of communities. The moral, social and educational uplift given in a community by an active Grange cannot be measured. The material benefits may be traced in part, at least. In matters of legislation the Grange counts many victories. Through its efforts the agricultural colleges of the country now teach agriculture. Before the Grange turned its attention to them they were agricultural only in name. It was a Grange demand that defeated the bill to reissue the patents on sewing machines, thereby reducing the cost from $100 to $25. The Grange made possible the "Hatch act," for the establishment of experiment stations.

The Agricultural Departments at Washington and Lexington owe their existence to the Grange. It was a persistent Grange demand and leadership that established the Rural Free Mail Carrier on his daily rounds over country roads. It was also largely thru persistent efforts of the Grange the parcel post, postal savings banks and election of U. S. Senators by direct vote of the people were secured.

Not only have those and many other laws been enacted through Grange efforts, but what is no less important, much bad legislation has been prevented. The National Grange at its last session, advocates uniform tax laws, a non-partisan commission to settle the tariff question, government ownership of electrical means of communication, and denounces the free seeds farce. These and other items should impress upon all the importance of getting together. In order to keep what we have we must stand together. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

BODIES OF TWO BOYS

Are Found Along Railroad Track at Lagrange, Ky.

Lagrange, Jan. 2.—The bodies of two boys, apparently 15 years old, who had been struck and killed by a train, were discovered lying beside the track of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Co., here today. A dog, which accompanied the ads, also was killed.

No marks on the clothing or other means of identification were found. Residents of this neighborhood who have viewed the bodies never saw the boys before.

In a pocket of one a note was found, which said: "On January 6, 1916, there will be $1,500 in a Frankfort bank for R. Brown."

Both boys had their shoes and stockings off, and it is presumed that they had tried to dry them by a small fire which had been out for several hours.

Found—Small gold watch, owner can have same by proving property and paying cost of advertising, &c. Marshall Hall, Burlington, Ky.

SYSTEM FOR FEEDING FOWLS.

Grain, Green Food, Grubs, Grit and Shell Are Necessary In Chicken Diet—Dry Mash Best.

For the hen that is manufacturing an egg every day, or one in two days, it is impossible to get the required nourishment fast enough unless it is taken into the body already ground. The best system of feeding, then, as recognized the country over, is to give one or more of the varieties of whole grain as a means of exercise; that is, fed in a deep litter so the fowls will have to work for it. Then use a variety of ground foods to supply the nourishment, heat and energy of the bird.

The four "g's" give us a cue as to what is necessary in the chicken diet—grain, green food, grubs, grit and shell. Whole grain gives the best results when two or more forms are mixed and fed twice daily in a deep litter. Three parts wheat, three parts cracked corn and one part oats or equal parts wheat and cracked corn and kafir, makes a good combination. One pint to ten fowls is about the right amount, with the heaviest feed at night.

Ground food may be fed in either a dry wet form, but for breeders and layers, dry mash is best, while for fattening poultry it is better to use wet mash. The dry form may be supplied in self-feeding hoppers. A good mixture would be:

Seven pounds mill run, seven pounds cornmeal, three lbs. beet scrap, two pounds alfalfa leaves one-half pound charcoal.

COLONEL ROOSEVELT

Awaiting a Call From United Republican Party, It Is Said.

New York, Jan. 3.—The Herald this morning prints the following from Washington:

"Theodore Roosevelt now a passive candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, is likely to become an active candidate. He only awaits the 'call' of a reunited Republican party.

"This is the interpretation which Republicans and Progressives in Washington place upon a circular letter which was mailed from New York to about 250 politicians thru out the country, on December 29, by George W. Perkins, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Progressive National Committee. Mr. Perkins says that the New York newspapers are awakening to the fact 'that Mr. Roosevelt is, after all, the one great American statesman in whom a majority of the people can have the greatest confidence.' The same story, he says, comes to him from persons who drop into his office on their way thru New York. He adds significantly that he would like the recipient of the letter to report whether or not there is a similar sentiment for Mr. Roosevelt in his part of the country.

"Republicans in Washington are far from believing Mr. Roosevelt can capture the Republican nomination. Old-line Republicans, the men who have stood by the sinking ship and never flinched, will on no condition support Mr. Roosevelt. If such should continue to be their feeling it is easy to see that a reunion of Republicans and Progressives will be impossible if Mr. Roosevelt is to be the rallying point. There must be some other nominee who would not bring to memory the bitterness of the 1912 campaign and the troublous days at Chicago, where Mr. Roosevelt bolted the party and elected Mr. Wilson."

WHERE THE STEERS GO TO.

Little Of It Is Wasted By the Packing Company.

The Traffic Club is composed of men in all kinds of business, men who would reel off many statistics to prove Kansas City's greatness. Yet at the last Traffic Club dinner the members all were astounded by some of the details of the packing industry told by W. L. Eastlake formerly woth the Armor Co.

Blood from the slaughtered animals, he pointed out, escapes over a clean floor to a reservoir where it is allowed to coagulate. The fluid portion is then liberated and used in the sizing of paper, and in fixing the coloring of paper. The solid portion is used for glue or fertilizer. Some of the best blood is used in the refining of sugar, the albumen being made to carry off the impurities of the syrup. It is then skimmed and the syrup filtered through the calcine bones.

Poor qualities of blood may be thickened and pressed into buttons or manufactured into imitation tortoise shell.

Internal organs of a steer are passed mechanically to the various departments to be prepared for food, soap, medicine or fertilizer or grease.

The stomach is prepared as tripe. Bladders are dried for use by snuff makers and gold beaters. Brewers use certain of the intestines as lining for beer pipes to prevent corrosion. Ears, parts of tails, bones or head and jaw, and interior of horns are used in making glue and gelatan.

The hair is used as binder on plastering houses; curled it is used in upholstering, and in the case of the fine hair from the interior of the ears, for camel's hair brushes.

Neatsfoot oil for softening leather and harness is made from the feet. Hoofs are made into combs and buttons. Horns are hearted, split open and flattened into plates from which combs, hairpins, knife and umbrella handles napkin rings, tobacco boxes and many other articles can be made by softening and pressing the plates. Horn also is used as a substitute for whalebone, which is becoming scarce.

Bones, make knife handles, pipe stems, buttons and crochet needles, fine charcoal, glue, fertilizer and various chemical substitutes. The gall removed from a little sack on the liver becomes commercial ox gall. Gall stones are saved and sold abroad for medical purposes. A calf's stomach furnishes rennet for cheese making and pepsin comes from the stomach of a hog.

In the meat packing products are 61 varieties of canned meat; 22 grades of oils and greases; 13 varieties of casings for sausage, putty and other containers; thirty-eight kinds of dry sausage; 47 of fresh; six grades of butterine; five grades of oleo oil and ten grades of beef extract. There are about 75 cuts of fresh edible meats or primary parts.

For the medical trade only 48 products are made, glands and membranes being packed while perfectly fresh in the plant laboratories. The gut strings department makes violin strings, clock cord, drum snares, belt lacing and other products. The scrap department of one company makes about 60 kinds of laundry soap and toilet soaps, as well as cleansers, washing powders, talcum powder, tooth paste, face cream and also smelling salts.

The fertilizer department is continually analyzing soil samples and providing the kind of plant food most needed by farmers and horticulturists.

Miscellaneous products of common use are stock foods, sand and emery paper, anhydrous ammonia cottonseed oil, lard compounds and mincemeat.

A special building is devoted to the treatment of sheepskins, pulling the wool and preparing it for market.

So that employes will not be idle the packers also handle butter, eggs, cheese and poultry. Mr. Eastlake told how difficult it was to stop this extension of activities. For example the packer sold beef extract for making hot drinks. Then they had to keep their salesmen busy in the summer, so went into the business of making grape juice and other soda water fountain supplies, including crushed fruits, syrups, jams maraschino cherries and flavoring Kansas City Times.

VERY SOUR SILAGE IS NOT PALATABLE

It Is Not Rich Food and Animals Are Therefore Compelled to Eat Much of It.

Silage is palatable because it is green forage preserved with the exception that the sugar has been converted into agreeable acids that stimulate appetite and give a good flavor. It is possible to have too much acid in the silage. A very sour silage is not palatable. If the plant should contains too much sugar too much acid will be produced. If it does not contain much sugar, not enough acid will be produced to give the desired flavor and aroma to the silage.

Silage is not a magic food-stuff. There is not quite as much food value in it as there was in the plant from which it came. It is not a rich food and stock is therefore compelled to eat a rather good quantity of it. A good sized cow may safely eat 40 pounds of it in a day. Combined with some feeeds richer in protein, it meets the needs of the animal. Too great things must not be expected of it. It is fair to expect that an acre of corn put through the silo will have a greater feeding value than the same acre handled in the usual way. But the added feeding value will usually not be more than a third or a fourth.

TIMELY TIPS.

Stains that have been of long standing may be removed by the application of peroxide with soap, rubbing the spots well; then let them lie in the sun. This process may have to be repeated, but it will get the stain after a few applications. For ordinary stains the peroxide may be put on the wet clothing as it hangs on the line. As it does not injure the fabric it is not necessary to be washed out.

Stains on the hands may be removed by the application of oxalic acid. Get an ounce of the crystals, put them into a bottle, add water as it is used and you will always have a stain remover.

If grease is spilled on the floor, dash on cold water at once to prevent its sinking into the wood. A knife will scrape it away and the spot can then be more easily removed by scrubbing.

A common way to clean chimneys is to lower a brick tied to a rope. Pass it up and down scraping off the soot, afterward collecting the soot from below. Soot in stoveplipes may be removed by burning zinc scraps, which may be purchased. Throw the zinc in on a bed of coals and the fumes will clean the chimney.

Those who have no gas in the home may raise hyacinths with good success. Place them in pots in the fall and at Thanksgiving and Christmas you will have beautiful blooms. Placed in glasses where the roots are seen, they make a most interesting study.

To prevent the drops of liquid forming on a meringue, let the pie or pudding cool before putting on the meringue.

Cook strong-flavored vegetables uncovered. All a little soda to cabbage or onions when cooking, as they are thus rendered more digestible.

When baking in a gas oven which is hard to keep from burning things on the bottom, bake cookies on an inverted dripping pan.

Cheese grated and placed on slices of tomato which are placed on rounds of buttered toast are delicious. Set in the oven long enough to melt the cheese.

GOOD THINGS FOR THE TABLE.

Bananas are always in the market, and this dish is worth the trouble in making if one is fond of bananas. Rub through a sieve, dissolve two and a half tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one and a half cupfuls of milk, add six tablespoonfuls of sugar and the softened gelatin to the banana pulp, also the juice of a lemon strained, one tablespoonful of other fruit juice. Chill, then stir in a cupful of cream whipped. As soon as it begins to set, pour the mixture into a ring mold. When unmolded fill the center with whipped cream, garnished with thinly sliced bananas.

Grape Sherbet.—This is another dish that may be made any time of the year. Boil four cupfuls of water with two cupfuls of sugar for 20 minutes, add the juice of two lemons and two cupfuls of grape juice. Soften one and a half tablespoonfuls of gelatin in a cupful of water; add to the other mixture, cool and strain into a freezer. Freeze and serve in sherbet cups with a spoonful of whipped cream on top.

Date Cookies.—Cream one cupful of butter, add two cupfuls of brown sugar, add a teaspoonful of salt, three eggs, well beaten, a half teaspoonful of soda, mixed with two tablespoonfuls of sour milk, add a teaspoonful of cinnamon, ginger, allspice, and between four and five cupfuls of flour. Add a cupful and a half of chopped dates, mixed with some flour, roll out and cut with a cooky cutter. Bake ten to twelve minutes in a moderate oven.

Raisin Fritters.—Mix together a fourth of a cupful each of cornstarch and flour, add a half cupful of sugar, a fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, two and a quarter cupfuls of milk and the beaten yolks of three eggs; cook in a double boiler 15 minutes, then add a half cupful of raisins and pour into a shallow buttered tin to cool. Turn on a board and cut in squares, dip in egg, crumbs and fry in hot fat. Serve with a hard sauce or with a lemon sauce, if preferred.

Tomato sliced, placed on buttered toast, sprinkle with grated cheese, then placed in the oven long enough to melt the cheese is an appetizing dish to serve for lunch or supper.

RESTING IN OLD CEMETERY.

Boone's Great Grandson Says Body Not Moved from Old Burial Ground

"It is very uncertain whether the body of Daniel Boone was ever removed from the old Boone cemetery at Marthasville, Saint Charles county, Mo., to Frankfort, Ky." said John S. Jones, of this city, the great grandson of Boone and father of Lan Jones, of this city. Mr. Jones who is 88 years old and has a very active mind, spoke of incidents surrounding the burial place of Boone and his wife only as one can who is intimate with the circumstances and as one relating a family tradition. His father, Dr. John Jones, was Daniel Boone's physician during his declining years and was the source of much of the information we have concerning the pioneer.

"I believe these are grandfather's and grandmother's graves" said Susan Bryant to John S. Wyatt, who placed the marker over the spot 16 years after Boone died. A body was removed from this marked mound and placed in the Frankfort, Ky., cemetery in 1848. But still doubters, and I am one of them believe that Boone's body was never taken to Frankfort.

"John S. Wyatt, a blacksmith and pioneer of St. Charles county, and a man in whom I have the utmost confidence told me the day they removed my great grandfather's body "they think they have Boone's body but they don't know."

"For sixteen years his body had laid in the old Boone cemetery about a mile from Marthasville, unmarked," says Mr. Wyatt to David B ryant, Boone's son-in-law, sent for a stone mason from St Charles to mark the grave. Watson, the stone mason, came up here Saturday, but forgot his chisel to carve the D. B. on the headstone. He came to me to get me to make it rather than make the extra trip to St. Charles I suggested that I should make the chisel and do the work for him so that he could return home. Monday I went to Bryant to have him point out the grave.

He was ill and sent his daughter Susie, with me to the old burial ground. It had been the Boone cemetery for years and many unmarked mounds were in the place. After deliberating for some time Susie pointed to the graves, side by side, and said, 'I believe grand father and grandmother are buried here. So I put up these stones.'

"This is Wyatt's story—the man who should know and doesn't—and I think that it is good grounds for my belief that Daniel Boone is resting in the old Boone burial place at Marthasville," said Mr. Jones in concluding.

History has it that Daniel Boone was born in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, but Mr. Jones says this is a mistake. According to the records kept by his father—which were later burned by Mr. Jones', brother "to keep someone from making a fortune from them"—Boone was born in Virginia and while a small boy his father moved to North Carolina.—Mexico Ledger.

A Substitute for Cotton In Powder Making.

Germany's experiments with substitutes for cotton in making gun powder, have been so successful that for eight months no cotton has been used. This statement was made by the President of the Bremen Chamber of Commerce to a convention of merchants.

"I have had the opportunity to establish officially that for eight months not a kilogram of cotton has been used for making powder," he said. "Thanks to German science and industry, we have succeeded in winning from the immeasurable supply of German forests a cellular material which is cheaper and better suited for powder making than cotton. Even after the war German ammunition factories will not buy another bale of cotton from America.

"The second important ingredient—saltpeter—now is manufactured exclusively in Germany from the air. Our factories already are so advanced that in the spring they will be able to cover the entire requirements for nitrogen and if the war lasts longer they will even be able to export this product."

The speaker also asserted that camphor, for seven years, produced synthetically from American turpentine, now is obtained by chemical means from synthetic turpentine. After the war, he said, there will be no more importation of camphor from Japan or turpentine from America.

Carlisle.—Nicholas county farm lands continue in demand. A. B. Campbell has just sold his farm three miles from Carlisle on the Maysville and Lexington turnpike, for $185 per acre. The farm contains fifty-six acres and he purchased it a few months ago at $159.60 per acre.

Here is what we consider the best sale of turkeys made this year in Robertson county. Mrs. Walter Linville sold 57 turkeys last week to Maysville parties at the fancy price of $143.44. She kept six hens and a gobbler out of this year's flock. The sale price was 14 cents a pound and the turkeys averaged a little to the rise of thirteen pounds. This looks to us like a bettter proposition than raising tobacco, but her husband raised the latter, so we'll have to wait and see what the result of his sale shows.—Robertson Advance.

Owensboro, Ky.—The report of a Government drainage expert who is here from Washington, is today before the drainage commissioners of Daviess county and proposes a plan for the drainage of a large section of Daviess county lands that have been valueless in the past because they are subject to periodical overflow by Panther Creek. The report of the Government recommends that the work outlined by the engineer be done, providing the plan feasible in a district outlined that includes 42,000 acres of land. The estimated cost of the work is $380,150, $9.26 an acre, if only the 42,000 acres are redeemed. Much of this land could recently have been bought for $40 and $50 an acre, which when drained and improved will be as productive as higher land in its vicinity that sells for $200 an acre and more.

WASHING MACHINE FOR EGGS

Increased Profits Made by Putting Product of Hens in Neat and Attractive Packages.

It has been found by those who handle foodstuffs that it pays to put the goods up in attractive shape or packages. It is no uncommon thing to see vegetables tied up in ribbons, and fruit, which formerly traveled in barrels, is now packed in small boxes resembling confectionery in the way they are handled. The same applies to the fruit of the hennery. An egg farmer who gets a reputation for the quality and appearance of his eggs will always get a premium above the price for his product, and this increased price makes it worth while for him to exercise the necessary care. Such persons not only examine each egg before it is shipped, but they are also washed by hand, in order that they present an immaculate appearance when placed on view. The machine shown in the accompanying cut has been recently patented for the purpose of washing eggs. It does the work as well as if done by hand and much more rapidly.

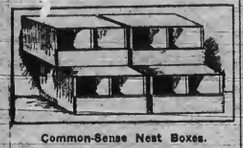
FOWL WITH LARGE APPETITE

May Be Picked Out on Roost at Night by Size of Crop—Judge Capacity by Shape of Body.

The hen with a large appetite can be picked out on the roost at night by the size of the crop. The capacity of a bird may be judged by the shape of the body. The jointed ribs allow the rear part of the body to expand downward, taking on a wedge-shape, as the digestive system and reproductive organs demand more room. This spread may be judged by the distance between the rear end of the breast bone and the pelvic bones. A bird spread from heavy production should not be confused with one spread from being overfat.

The high producer invariably shows what we might term as quality, that is, soft, pliable skin over breast bone and abdominal cavity.

The skin of the nonproducer or the bird out of condition will have a hard leathery or drawn feeling.



While the shape of the overfat hen may indicate capacity, the body cavity is filled with fat rather than organs of digestion and production, and the skin is lacking in that quality which appears in the high producer.

MAKE NEST BOXES MOVABLE

Easy Opportunity Afforded to Give House Thorough Cleaning and Fight Injurious Vermin.

Everything in the henhouse should be movable—nests, roosts, dust boxes, etc. This gives an easy chance to fight vermin, and also to give the house a thorough cleaning. The old practice of nailing nests, roosts and all fixtures to the building was a bad mistake, and there is no wonder that lice reigned supreme.

T. W. Vare, Hammonton, N. J., has a novel nest method. Ordinary boxes are used; these are so placed that the lower box provides a platform for the upper nest, upon which the hens can easily alight. These nests are readily taken outdoors and thoroughly cleaned. The illustration gives the idea very clearly.—Farm Journal.

HARD WORK HANDLING DUCKS

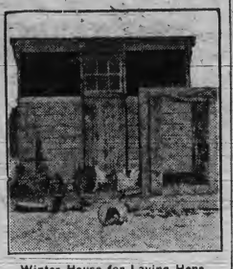
Easier to Care for Fowls in Large Flocks Than Small—Grower Turns His Money Quickly.

Ducks can be handled in large numbers better than most other fowls and the grower turns his money quickly, for by the end of summer he is cleaned out, having only a few scores or many hundreds of breeders to carry through the winter, the number depending on the size of his business. Yet the work is exceedingly exacting and most arduous while the busy season lasts.

Pelvic Bones of Best Layers.

The best layers usually have slender, pliable pelvic bones, while the poor layers have hard, rigid bones even though they are spread during production.

SECURING EGGS DURING WINTER SEASON



Well-Arranged Colony Houses on Poultry Farm.

A good poultry house is what you need, Mr. Farmer, if you are going to have plenty of eggs to sell this winter.

Some farmers feel that winter eggs are too hard to get to make it worth while to try to produce them. This is a mistake, according to R. M. Sherwood, poultry specialist in the extension division of the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"If one has a good poultry house," commented Mr. Sherwood, "he should have little trouble. Early matured pullets properly housed and fed should produce a large number of eggs."

The house, points out this expert, need not be an expensive one. It should furnish the fowls protection from the winds and storms and should be so constructed that it will have proper ventilation. A chicken breathes three or four times as much air in proportion to its weight as a human being. Ventilation makes a house somewhat colder, but dryer, and dry, cold air is much better for the fowls than moist warm air.

The house should be built with the west, north and east sides tight during the winter months, while the south side should furnish the ventilation. There may be a few glass windows on the south side, but more space should be left open, except that curtains may be dropped down for the nights, and on a few very stormy days. On some occasions these openings may be left uncovered during the night. Sometimes curtains do not allow enough air to circulate. In these cases openings may be made just under the roof to allow the air to circulate more freely. Whatever the system of ventilation may be, it is essential that the house should be dry and free from bad odors.

The house should be so constructed that it can be easily cleaned. The floor should be smooth. Concrete is good for this reason. It is true, however, that concrete floors built on damp ground are damp. To avoid this trouble a concrete floor may be built on a layer of eight or ten inches of rock or other material which will not carry the moisture from the ground. Some poultrymen use floors made of hollow building tile, and find them very satisfactory. Where these are used the tile are laid on a smooth surface and the crevices filled with cement.

The perches should be built so that there will be as few places for mites to breed as possible. If perches are removable, so much the better. A board platform should be placed about eight inches below the perches to catch the droppings. This makes a cleaner floor, and thus adds to the capacity of the henhouse. It makes it easier to clean the house, and aids in keeping the mites in check.

The nests also should be built so that the mites can easily be combated. They could be covered or protected so that the fowls cannot roost on them. This is necessary in the production of a good grade of market eggs.

RAISING CHICKENS IN FALL

Fowls Are Usually Lacking in Vigor During and Following Period of Excessively Hot Weather.

Layers and breeders, as well as male birds, are usually lacking in vigor during and immediately following long periods of excessively hot weather, and after periods of continuous heavy laying or intensive use in the breeding pen. This may account for the failure of so many birds to begin laying early in the winter and continuing throughout the period of highest prices. It will form one of the reasons why chicken raising cannot be practiced so successfully in the fall of the year aside from the fact that the colder weather would prevent the development of the young chicks. It will be evident that where winter eggs are desired the flock must be brought along in good condition previous to and immediately following the molting season.

Some of the characteristics by which the vitality of the individual bird may be judged are the color of the comb, the brightness of the eyes, the strength of the beak, the shape and width of the head, the breadth of the back, the depth of the body, the color of the shanks and skin, and the activity of the individual.

Easy to Keep Away Lice.

It is surprising how easy it is to prevent lice in the start and also discouraging to note how they will sometimes multiply in a dirty coop even when the birds are occasionally dusted. The remedy is to keep the coop clean and well disinfected and then fight the lice right from the start. It is easy to keep a clean flock clean and it takes a lot of patience to destroy all of the lice in a badly infested poultry plant.

Mark Laying Pullets.

If possible, mark the pullets that lay in the fall, and use them in the breeding pen for the following spring. The trap nest will tell all this.

Feed Variety for Eggs.

No single food contains all the elements in proper proportions for egg production. A variety must be sought.

CHICKENS RESPOND TO CARE

Veteran Poultryman Says Try to Meet Same Conditions in Winter That Obtain During Summer.

Most poultrymen are familiar with the rule of one of the veterans of the business who, when asked how to handle fowls during the winter, replied: "Try and meet the same conditions that obtain during the summer when they are on the range." In other words, provide grain and green food, animal food, grit and lime material with plenty of clean water, as much sun as possible, a clean, dry house free from drafts. The freedom of the range cannot be supplied, but the scratching shed will help mightily in that direction.

Be particularly careful that the houses are dry and that the temperature is comfortable. If the weather threatens to be unusually cold, prepare for it with added protection in the way of covering windows and giving protection by curtains when the fowls are on the roost. Fowls do not need a warm house, that is, a house artificially heated, but it is necessary that the temperature be kept as nearly normal as possible else the egg supply will be shut off by a sudden change in the weather. Care in these respects will do much more than is generally realized toward keeping up the egg supply throughout the winter more or less regardless of weather conditions.

Vegetables for Poultry.

Turnips and cabbage are not difficult crops to grow as a sideline on many farms and a plentiful supply of these vegetables should be raised annually for the poultry. They can be stored in a clean and dry place where they will keep all winter and furnish a portion of the necessary green food.

Keep Fowls Indoors.

Keep the birds indoors these cold mornings until the frost is off the ground. It will save many a chill and prevent many cases of colds and roup.

Clean House in Fall.

Don't forget that you must clean house if you are to have success with the hens this winter.

TOBACCO MARKET

Last Year Good – Satisfactory Increase in Volumn of Trade Shown —Cash Amount of Sales Was $1,922,807 29.

(Cincinnati Enquirer.)

The Cincinnati burley- tobacco market experienced a fairly satisfactory year during 1915. Altho the extent of the transactions on the auction breaks was not as great as in former years when the bulk of the burley tobacco crop was disposed of in this city, nevertheless a good increase was shown over last year, and stocks at the close of the year were heavier than the same time last year, leaving a good working margin for the beginning of 1916.

The trading in the local market fluctuated considerably from time to time during the year. After a good start early in January offerings were maintained on a large scale for several weeks, when there was a general slump, due to the shading of prices by buyers for the large manufacturing concerns. The summer months were fairly active, however, and gradually the market gathered strength, closing the year at perhaps the highest level as regards quotations. Receipts, too, were somewhat of a surprise, showing a big gain over 1914.

Only a small quantity of the new 1915 tobacco has come to the Cincinnati warehouses, of which seven hogsheads have been sold. Prices for these were very satisfactory and indicate a good market for the new crop after the 1st of the year. This is also indicated by the high quotations recorded on the loose leaf warehouse floors in the rural districts. Local warehousemen, however, are optimistic and believe that the Cincinnati market will receive its share of the new crop, notwithstanding the inroads made by the loose leaf warehouses upon the business of the city hogshead market. This opinion is strengthened by the fact that much of the tobacco bought in the country is repacked and shipped to the local warehouses to await a higher market.

100,000 Rabbits Shipped

Shipments of rabbits by the two produce commission firms at Sparta have been very heavy this year, and two weeks ago, it was found on checking up the shipments of the two firms, that 100,000 of the 'Molly Cotton Tails' had left there this fall consigned to the city markets. These rabbits were bought in Owen and Gallatin counties, chiefly, and both the commission houses have kept wagons on the road gathering in the game. We do not know the average price that has prevailed, but taking it at 10 cents per head, and that would be a conservative estimate, the receipts up to that time would total about $10,000, to be distributed over the territory from which the rabbits were gathered. The probability is that 25,000 more have been shipped since then, and the total for the season will probably run to 150,000. This handling and shipping of rabbits has developed into quite a profitable business and provides another source of added revenue to the other products of the farm. There has been noticeable complaint this year on the part of sportsmen as to the scarcity of rabbits, and the above figures tell largely why this is so. The days in which "Brer Rabbit" must be looked upon as just a mere medium for the pleasures of the hunt, have passed, and will likely never come again, for "Brer Rabbit" has taken his place in the commercial world and is now looked upon as a revenue producer with some degree of favor closely akin to that bestowed upon the hogs, sheep and cattle.—Warsaw Independent.

For some time a notice has been going the rounds of the State press to the effect that a bill is to be introduced in the next Legislature making wife and child desertion a gelony. Mr. Geo. L. Sehon, head of the Kentucky Children's Home Society at Louisville, will get behind the proposed bill and he says he is going to urge its passage. This is a very meritorious measure and by all means ought to become a law. There are too many indolent, worthless cusses, who are guilty of this crime, running at large in this country, and if a few of them were made to serve a term in the penitentiary it might have the effect of making others go to work and support their families.

When the Democratic State Convention at Louisville attempted to kick Urey Woodson out as Kentucky's member of the Democratic National Committee it came very nearly kicking the Democratic party out of power in this State instead and was a mistake by which it is hoped party leaders will hereafter profit. The convention had no connection whatever with the party's national affairs, and in the Woodson matter it was a usurper, and the National Committee's swift action in the disposition of the Haldeman contest was a stinging rebuke to the Kentucky State convention and the gentlemen who engineered the attempt to depose Woodson.

Barksdale Hamlett has decided to contest the election of Mr. Lewis, his successful Republican opponent for Secretary of State. Mr. Hamlett should abide by the result of the election, and ought to have pulled off a grand stand play like Mr. Morrow did.

A Few Suggestions.

The Elizabethtown News makes the following suggestions for the benefit of the next General Assembly of Kentucky:

"It should get down to business with the beginning of the session and not fritter away thirty days as is usual before it actually begins work.

"It should pass a sensible revenue and taxation law which will raise enough revenue for the state without increasing the rate of taxation.

"It should pass such a corrupt practice act as will prevent the use of money by candidates in elections.

"It should amend the school laws if possible so that we can have rural consolidated schools.

"It should cut out every wasteful and extravagant use of money in all departments of the State government.

"It should pass a law to work the short term convicts on the public roads in accordance with the Constitutional amendment recently adopted.

"It should set aside by act a definite amount from the road fund for the proper maintenance of roads built under State aid.

"It should pass a law which will render it impossible for a saloon keeper anywhere in the State to keep open on Sunday without forfeiture of his license.

"It should make it a felony for the second conviction for bootlegging.

"It should pass a broad tire law for heavily loaded wagons to save our roads from destruction in the winter.

Idaho Hogs Come East

"It's no wonder hog receipts are increasing!" I heard remarks on this order in Kansas City during the month of October, when to the surprise of hog-trade interests, the state of Idaho made consignments of porkers to the market there. It was the first time in the history of Kansas City that Idaho sent hogs to its yards, hence the astonishment of traders. Besides, the initial shipment from Idaho consisted of a train of seventeen carloads containing 1750 head—the largest individual consignment ever reported by Kansas City. It was made by H. N. Fike, who operates in Cassia, Lincoln and Twin Falls counties of the Snake River Valley of Idaho, and was unloaded for feed and rest three times on the trip of nearly 1600 miles. Not one hog was crippled or killed on the long journey. Kansas City has since received other shipments of Idaho hogs, and may soon become as accustomed to seeing that state's porkers as it has been to seeing Idaho's sheep and cattle.

Alfalfa and barley are used largely in fattening hogs in Idaho. This combination of feed makes porkers almost equal to corn and alfalfa-fed hogs, judging by the prices paid for the Idaho offerings in competition with Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri hogs.

The Idaho shipments undoubtedly reflect the increasing popularity of the hog-producing industry in the West. Only a few years ago the Far Northwest came to Nebraska and other prominent corn states for hogs. Colorado, New Mexico and Texas are among the other newer producers which have sent consignments to Kansas City recently, reflecting their expansion as pork growers.—S. S. in Country Gentleman.

A Good Suggestion

In a report recently made to the Governor, the present Attorney General has suggested or recommended that two attorneys be employed by the General Assembly to see that bills are correctly drawn to make them valid." The trouble with Kentucky now is that too many attorneys and others are employed to do things which it is the business of others already in office and paid to look after. What is really wanted are members of the Lelislature with sufficient intelligence to draw a bill correctly, or when placed on a committee to have gumption enough to know whether a bill referred to said committee is in proper shape and if not to so amend it in the committee that it will stand the test of the courts. There certainly ought be sufficient legal knowledge among the lawyers in the Legislature to detect the defects in a bill when it is read by the clerk in their hearing or when they read the printed bill after it is placed upon their desks. It is not always the fault of the legislators and their committees that bills go out in the shape of abortions, for after a bill has been perfected, passed both houses and goes to the enrolling clerk or a copyist to be enrolled, errors either intentional or by mistake, creep in which emasculate the law or render it foolish and useless.

Then the chairman of the Committee on Enrollments will solemnly rise in his place and announce to the speaker that his committee has examined the bill and found it correctly enrolled, when at the same time the enacting clause or a whole section may have been left out, a wrong word or sentence inserted and the bill but so much useless paper, yet the Speakers and the Governor will go right along and sign it just the same as if it was all right.

The crying need is more intelligence in the committee room, more efficiency upon the part of enrolling clerks and copyists, and capacity of the Enrolling Committees to keep wide enough awake when comparing enrolled bills to be able to detect errors —for all of which the State pays liberally—and not extra help in the shape of lawyers at fat salaries.

Fox Hunting By Auto

The hunting season may be over as far as squirrels and birds are concerned but the very newest sport seen around town is fox hunting with an automobile. A party came up from Berlin Saturday with a touring car with a cage attached to the tonneau. The cage contained two fox hounds and whenever they scented game the car was stopped, the dogs released and the car followed, as nearly as it could, till the game was rounded up, cornered and shot. They captured two foxes on Saturday within a short time. Another picturesque sport has gone, by enough to make the handsome horses who used to carry their masters on the hunt weep to think they have been displaced by a combination of steel and gasoline and surely the old bugle was more melodious than the toot of a motor horn. Dallas Lore Sharpe says that the fox loves the excitement of the chase, and the matching of his wits against the dogs. That was real sport, but now poor Brother Reynard must feel greatly humiliated at the ignominious fate he meets. The very next thing will be shooting ducks from an aeroplane.—Hartford Courant.

Ox in the Ditch.

The ox was in the ditch with more farmers Sunday than was ever known in the history of Pendleton county. The rain Saturday brought tobacco in case for the first time since it was housed and what did come in so it could be taken down, was carefully watched all day. It is estimated that a million pounds of the weed was placed in cops in this county Sunday. There are no more pious class of people living than in this county, and the per cent. of religious is above the average. No doubt this was done against the dictates of their better judgement, but when so much depends upon the delivery of the crop, it makes the deed a pardonable sin. In this case the ox was surely in the ditch, and was pe- thrown in in order to pull him out, as they would all have preferred sitting by the fire or going to church. This season will enable many of the tobacco growers to market their crop before Christmas, and we look for a big rush next week.—Falmouth Outlook.

Good Legislative Meeting

Many are the promises in speeches and interviews of the great and good things that the new officeholders are to do for the tax-ridden people, but few suggestions have been as novel or as promising of real merit and usefulness as that of Attorney General Garnett made to Gov. Stanley that all laws passed by the legislature be reviewed or evencedrawn by two capable attorneys. The Messenger has often called attention to the careless and costly negligence or utter lack of ability of those who write the laws. The carelessness or cupidity of an enrolling clerk has often caused trouble, but more frequently the bad English of the bill writer has caused serious trouble. In view of this and many other weighty reasons, the suggestion of Mr. Garnett is of vital importance and should be heeded.—Owensboro Messenger.

Republican Love Feast.

Indianapolis, Ind., December 30. —Kentucky and Indiana Republicans joined hands here this afternoon in launching the boom of Charles Warren Fairbanks for the Presidential nomination. Before a large audience, composed of party workers from every county in the state, Edwin P. Morrow, of Somerset, Ky., pledged the support of his state to Indiana's favorite son.

Fairbanks was present and was received with great enthusiasm when he arose to make a brief response. The plans of his friends to have his candidacy indorsed at the same time by two states were carried out with admirable precision and a degree of success that seemed to please them greatly.

The love feast brought together more than 2,000 Republicans, but the attendance was not as large as expected, owing to the breaks in railroad and traction traffic.

Senator Beckham is being unusually and signally honored for a new Senator during the opening session of his first experience in Congress. He was distinguished above all the new senators at the session of the Senate Monday by being chosen to preside over its deliberations, being called to the chair by President Pro Tem Clarke, to preside during debate on a resolution offered by Senator Tillman. The dispatches says that Beckham was compelled to rap for order when the debate became entirely too noisy. Senator Beckham is amply qualified by experience and parliamentary knowledge to preside over the most deliberative body on earth. He served a term as speaker of the Kentucky house of representatives, and it is very doubtful if the United States Senate, in its wildest moment ever "plays as rough," as the Kentucky house has been known to do at times.—Interior Journal.

IN MEMORY

Of little John Mosby Slayback, little son of Chas. and Anna Slayback, who was born Oct. 17th, 1907, departedthis life Dec. 24th, 1915. The community was greatly shocked when they heard the sad news that death had visited that home on Christmas eve. and took from them their little son. None knew him but to love him—none named but to praise. What a disappointment to his broken hearted parents who were looking forward for a bright and happy Christmas, and as they stood by his cot with anxious hearts hoping he would get better death came and carried him home to the Beautiful City to spend Xmas in heaven. Dear papa and mamma loved him but God loved him better and claimed him for his own. May this case before them prove the all sufficiency of God to sustain and support their souls under trials so great. A death and so lonely may he help them to bear their burden and kneel in thanksgiving to him who has thus gathered such a lovely flower in its earliest bloom and transplanted it in his own glorious garden to flourish forever beneath the life giving beams of the sun of Righteousness. Little John, Rev. Marxberry said, was a pet of the home. Not only was he a pet of the home but a pet of all who knew him and he was such a friendly little boy. His mamma says to him Friday morning, "Johnnie, I am going to move your cot down in the living room." "Oh Mamma," he says "I can't stay down there for Santa Claus won't come." " Oh, it seems so hard for the dear father and mother to give him up, so hard to drink deep from that bitter cup and look for the last time upon the face of their loved one and then see him hidden from their face; but, oh, how sweet we can say it is not forever, it is only a peaceful sleep, simply waiting for our Heavenly Father to place the missing links that will complete the chain of loved ones that will reach out through endless eternity of peace and joy. They cannot see the bright side now but in time some sweet day we will see the way clear if we but trust God for his Holy word tells us that all things work together for good to them that love God. But not today then, be content poor heart, God's plans like lillies pure and white unfold. We must not tear the close shut leaves apart, time will reveal the Calyxes of gold.

A FRIEND.

Card of Thanks—The parents wish to thank their friends and neighbors for the kindness and sympathy shown them in their sad hours; also Bro. Marxberry for his consoling words of comfort, and the undertaker, Philip Taliaferro, for the way he conducted the funeral.

A BOND ISSUE

Increases the Tax, Makes More Officeholders, Larger Salaries and Same Old Roads.

A bond issue is to increase the tax. To increase the tax from the past experience is to increase salaries of officers or create a new office. No, the people of Boone are not dishonest, but, perhaps they do think it dishonest to take a county's money without the people's consent and give it to another county, and it looks like it would be dishonest for a county to accept a county's money without the consent of the people. Yes, everyone has an ax to grind that he may get things in shape for his own interest. Progress is nothing new. God gave everyone a human nature as well as you. Some people progress slowly. Some have better advantages to progress than others. Some progress at other experience. Some progress at the peoples' expense and some progress at their own expense. I believe everyone has a desire to progress. If so there can't be anti-progressives. No the occupant of a log cabin, even though he be rich, would not continue to be dishonest if he would build a mansion like his neighbor's. Jesus died that ye might preach and thrive. Jesus died that ye might teach but not drive. J. E. HALL.

National Constitutional Prohibition

The following brief was prepared by a sub-committee of the National Commission, who have given in it the result of their study of the question from every point of view. It should have the careful and thoughtful perusal of every citizen. All white ribboners ought to have copies not only for their own information and for use in answering objections, but also to place in the hands of the ministers of their community. Proposed Amendment

Section 1. The sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale and importation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof and exportation thereof are hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress or the States shall have power, independently or concurrently, to enforce this article by all needful legislation.

By Whom Endorsed

On July 10, pursuant to a call by the Anti-Saloon League of America, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Temperance Commission of the Federal Council of the churches of Christ in America, and the International Order of Good Templers, representatives of all the leading temperance organizations of the United States met in Washington for conference, and after a full and free discussion, endorsed the above amendment with practical unanimity.

The Conference appointed a commission of nineteen, representing the leading national temperance organizations of the United States, to consult with members of the 64th Congress and decide upon the exact phraseology to be used.

On December 3, 1915, said commission met in the City of Washington and after a thorough discussion approved as the best available the above wording of the amendment, in which form it was voted upon in the House of Representatives on Dec. 22, 1914.

The Scope of a Constitional Amendment

A national constitutional amendment does not properly include details of legislation. It declares a governmental policy. The legislative department of government enacts laws, fixing penalties, defining terms, and settling details. For example, the definition of intoxicating liquor differs now in dry states. To define it is a legislative function. Many similar details in solving the liquor problem, and much that can be provided by direct legislation without constitutional Amendment should be left for legislative action by Congress or the states, either independently or concurrently.

Purpose and Aim of Proposed Amendment

The main purpose to be accomplished by this amendment is to free the Federal Government from the responsibility for and partnership in the beverage liquor traffic. The prohibition of the sale and manufacture for sale of liquor for beverage purposes accomplishes this end.

The manufacture, distribution or use of intoxicating liquor for mechanical, pharmaceutical, scientific, medicinal, sacramental or any other purpose except as a bev erage is not prohibited by this amendment.

Effectiveness of Proposed Amendment.

The proposed amendment will be effective. It establishes prohibition as the policy of the National Government. When this amendment is adopted, no state can license the beverage liquor traffic. No legal objection can be raised to the adoption of the proposed amendment for the U. S. Supreme Court has 12 times held, "There is no inherent right to sell intoxicating liquor." With the legalized commercialized organized beverage traffic abolished, the incidents of its distribution will be easily eliminated by legislation. Legislation will be necessary in order to make the amendment effective, no matter how drastic the amendment might be. Consequently, the details of legislation on which there may be division of opinion should be left to a legislative body which can settle them by majority vote instead of a two-thirds vote of Congress required to pass the resolution or a three-fourths vote of the states required to ratify the amendment.

Any state may add to the prohibitions provided in the proposed amendment, though no state can authorize what the Constitution of the United States prohibits.

The states now have plenary power to prohibit all phases of the traffic, and all power which they do not specifically delegate to the National Government is reserved to the states. Tenth Amendment, U. S. Constitution.

Power is given to the legislative department of government by constitutional provision and judicial construction to provide for the enforcement of laws or constitutional amendments. When power is given to the Federal government and the state government concurrently over a subject matter they have the same authority within their jurisdiction to pass laws to make these statutes enforceable, and to provide for all needful legislation having a reasonable relation to the end to be accomplished.

Justice Hughes of the Supreme Court in rendering the decision of the Purity Extract Co. vs. Lynch, 226, U. S., said:

"It is also well established that when a state exercising its recognized authority undertakes to suppress what it is free to regard as a public evil, it may adopt such measures, having reasonable relation to that end, as it may deem necessary in order to make its action effective."

This principle was laid down in the case of Hoke vs. State, 227, U. S., 309, where the court said:

"Our dual form of government has its perplexities, state and nation have different spheres of jurisdiction as we have said. But it must be kept in mind that we are one people and the powers reserved to the states and those conferred on the nation are adapted to be exercised, whether independently or concurrently, to promote the general welfare materially or morally."

Such decisions might be multiplied. It follows, therefore, that when prohibition is adopted, either Congress or the states may define what is intoxicating liquor and what is a sale. In those definitions they may prohibit any device for evading the law, e. g., alcoholic drinks such as near beer, fake tonics, etc., and clubs or so-called combinations of individuals to operate a brewery or other manufactory for furnishing intoxicating liquor.

Power of Congress to Aid Enforcement of Proposed Amendment.

Congress may prohibit any incidental phase of the traffic by a tax. It destroyed the phosphorus match industry by a prohibitive tax and has exercised this authority in other instances. If, notwithstanding this amendment, any part of the traffic continues it could be destroyed in this way. The United States would then be using its taxing power not to encourage the traffic but to carry out the prohibition policy and law enforcement.

There is no danger of a general home distillation unless the laws which now prevent such manufacture of liquor are repealed. There is no basis of fact for assuming that this will be done. Not only would existing laws continue but necessary additional laws would be enacted in response to growing public sentiment.

Judicial Aid in Enforcement of Proposed Amendment.

If the prohibition policy is established for the U. S. there is also good reason to believe that the U. S. Supreme Court would take the same position with reference to liquor as they have already taken with reference to lotteries. In the case of Stone vs. Miss., 101 U. S., the court held that "No Legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their public servants."

The opponents of prohibition in explaining away this case have always argued that while the Supreme Court could take that stand with reference to lotteries, they could never do so with reference to intoxicating liquors because so many of the states license it and recognize it as a legal business, it has already been hinted that when the Government shall have taken the same stand against the liquor traffic that they have against lotteries, then the courts would place them on the same footing.

SHEEP RAISING

In Boone County A Profitable Business When Properly Handled.

It has long been known that Boone county is a good territory in which to engage in the sheep industry, and while it has increased in extent in the last ten years it is not as large by any means as conditions justify, while the experience of some of the farmers has exceeded their fondest expectation in the matter of profits from their flocks. It has long been contended by some that the farmer can derive more profit from handling sheep than from handling cattle, and in many instances figures have been forthcoming to sustain the contention. When good luck attends the ewes during the lambing season and the flock escapes an attack by dogs, the prices at which wool and lambs have been selling the past few years make the flock a most satisfactory revenue producer and should increase the popularity of the sheep in this county.

To show what is possible along this line it is only necessary to give the experience of one of the Recorder's patrons as told it a few days ago. On the first day of Jan. 1915, he owned 100 ewes, which he gave the proper attention during the lambing season, and had good grass at the proper time for the ewes and their offspring. At shearing time his ewes yielded on an average of two dollars worth of wool, and when he footed up the sales of his lambs he found he had received for them a little over eight hundred dollars, making in the aggregate one thousand dollars his one hundred ewes had placed to his credit in bank and his flock of 100 was yet on his farm. It would a pleasure for the Recorder to give the names of those in this county who did as well per ewe with a flock of one hundred or more. The results above given show what can be done with sheep where a good breed is properly handled, and there is no excuse for not having good and never failing grass to give them proper attention.

Rouse Roused.

When Congressman Rouse was informed a few days ago that Florence postoffice, this county, was to be discontinued, he donned his war paint and made a drive for the postoffice department, where the officials were glad to be able to inform him that the report was the result of a clerical error. Mr. Rouse keeps a close watch on postal affairs, especially in Kentucky and this Congressional district.

HARVESTING OF SILAGE

Corn Must Be Cut at the Proper Stage of Maturity.

Most Economical Succulent Food That Can Be Obtained for Dairy Cows at a Season When Pasture Is Not Available.

(By WILBUR J. FRASER, Illinois.)

It is of great importance to know at what stage corn should be cut to secure the best results, how rapidly nutriment is stored up in the corn plant as it approaches maturity, and when the maximum amount is reached.

To have the silage keep well the corn must be cut at the proper stage of maturity. If cut before it is sufficiently matured, too much acid develops. If too ripe, it does not settle properly and the air is not excluded.

Cutting and Storing Silage.

Corn should not be cut until the ears are out of the milk and most of the kernels glazed and hard.

The corn should be cut with a corn binder, as it is much more easily handled when bound in bundles. If the silage cutter is large and the work is done with a good force of men, the corn binder should have a start of half a day. If enough horses are used on the binder to keep it moving at a good pace the corn can be cut down as fast as it can be put into the silo. Using a small cutter with a large engine is dangerous unless great care is exercised in controlling the power.

If silage is to keep well it must settle evenly. To this end the leaves and the heavier parts of the corn must be kept thoroughly mixed and evenly distributed in the silo. Owing to the great pressure of silage, friction with the sides of the silo has a tendency to make the silage less compact at the edge, and for this reason it should be thoroughly tramped next the side. Every time three or four inches of cut material is added to the silo it should be tramped thoroughly around the edge, taking short steps and packing the silage as much as possible next to the wall. These precautions must be observed during filling to obtain perfect silage.

After filling, the top six inches should be wet once and the whole surface tramped every day for a week to obtain a thin, compact layer of well-rooted silage which will exclude the air.

Properly prepared, corn silage is, as a rule, the most economical succulent food that can be obtained for dairy cows at a season when pasture is not available. Although not a balanced ration in itself, it tends to heavy milk production and economical milk can be made by feeding corn silage and a legume hay without the use of much grain.

PLAN TO STORE VEGETABLES

Bruises Form a Place for Decay Germs to Enter—Dry in Sun Before Putting in Storage.

(By H. O. WERNER, North Dakota Experiment Station.)

Vegetables must be stored under the conditions that will keep them in the best condition for use.

In the first place they should be handled carefully. Bruises form a place for decay germs to enter. The vegetables store best if a little immature. Cabbage, celery and root crops keep best at low temperature, with a fairly moist atmosphere and good ventilation. Onions keep best just above freezing in a dry atmosphere. Squash and pumpkins need a dry atmosphere at about fifty degrees. Celery when dug is really transplanted as it has to be kept growing when in storage. Dig it with a good deal of soil on the roots and plant closely in sand or loose damp soil in a cool cellar or pit. The root crops keep best when buried in sand or soil in a cool place. The vegetables, excepting celery, will keep better if well dried in the sun before being stored.

FIELD BEANS AS CASH CROP

Can Be Harvested, Stored and Threshed Out in Winter When There Is Little Else to Do.

The New Hampshire department of agronomy has sent out a leaflet calling attention to the possibility of adding field beans to the limited number of cash crops of that state. The reasons given are:

Beans work into the rotation as a cultivated crop.

They are legumes, and therefore do not exhaust the soil of its nitrogen.

They will always sell for cash.

They can be harvested, stored and threshed out to be sold in winter when there is little profitable work to do on the farm.

While beans will sometimes make a crop on pretty poor land, they will do better on good land. Where an old field is foul with witch grass, the sod should be subdued and got rid of its weeds before planting it to beans.

In a general way, beans will do well on soils which are not quite rich enough for a good crop of corn. They thrive well on sandy loams, loams and clay loams. The straw is a better roughage than most hays. It is better than corn stover, but not quite as good as clover hay. Those who throw away bean straw or burn it are overlooking a good source of gains for the live stock.

KEEP DAIRY HEIFER GROWING

First Year of Animal's Life Is Most Important—Give Them Skim Milk in Moderate Quantities.

(By R. M. WASHBURN.)

The first year of a calf's life is the most important with respect to its growth. Unless animals are kept growing during this period their final development will be much retarded, and the chances are they never will reach the scale which their inheritance would give them.

On the best regulated dairy farms calves are born in the autumn and early winter, and they should receive skim milk in moderate quantities through much or all of the summer following birth. On farms having hand separators there is no difficulty in providing the sweet milk for calves, morning and evening, but farmers who patronize whole-milk creameries or who still skim by hand should remember that after the first few weeks milk for calves should either be thoroughly sweet or fully sour, that the most dangerous condition is the half sour stage. If milk is fed to calves when it is in this changing condition, it is almost certain to cause indigestion. It should not be half sour, nor sour one day and sweet the next, but always one or the other.

Clean feeding pails must be used, otherwise the germs of fermentation and diarrhea will be brought to the drinking dish, and with young calves it is important that the temperature at which the milk is fed be nearly that of the body. Older animals may receive milk of the temperature of the milk-holding tank.

THEY DON'T MIX

Poultry of different ages and breeds.

Eggs of different sizes, ages and colors.

The market pays from two to eight cents more for eggs of uniform size, color and quality.

CURE SEED CORN WITH CARE

It Should Be Hung Up or Placed on Racks in Such Way That Air May Circulate Freely.

Extraordinary care will be needed in curing seed corn this fall. Most of the seed corn picked will contain much moisture.

The more moisture the more serious will be the danger from freezing; consequently, seed corn should be stored in a dry and sufficiently warm place as soon as it is picked.

Moreover, it should be hung up or placed on racks in such a way that the air may circulate freely about every ear.

If these simple directions are followed, the corn will dry out rapidly, and the corn will give the largest possible germination in the spring.

Hogs and the Farmer.

The wise farmer will always raise a few hogs to market some of the otherwise waste products, and the wiser farmer will raise more hogs to market more of the farm products. He will not sell all of his hogs now and go out of business just because grain is high in price; but he will look to see if it isn't profitable to market that high-priced grain through the higher-priced hogs.

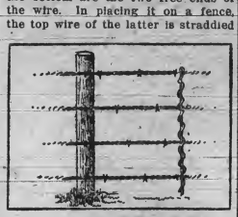
Success in Bee Keeping.

Actual experience is the only way in which success can be attained in bee keeping.

ROUGHAGE FOR FARM HORSES

Both Clover and Alfalfa Are Excellent When Fed Judiciously—Timothy Is Most Popular.

Like oats, timothy is considered by many horsemen indispensable to the best horse rations, but this is by no means the case. Of the most available of the hays, timothy is the lowest in digestible nutrients. Its great popularity as a horse feed is due to the fact that it is usually brighter and freer from dust than the other hays, also it is most relished by the horse. However, either clover or alfalfa hays, if fed judiciously, will make good roughage for farm horses.



Alfalfa has a nutritive ration of about 1.4, that is to say it is very high in protein, and about as high in fats and carbohydrates as timothy. Because of its high protein content it has a slightly laxative effect, but this may be overcome by cutting the alfalfa late in the bloom. Under this condition it makes a most excellent horse feed for brood mares and colts, and it can also be fed with great profit to farm work horses. The horses relish the hay and hold their weight, and even gain under steady work. They also show as much mettle and vitality as though they were fed timothy.

Clover is another excellent roughage. In fact, many horsemen have found it more valuable than timothy hay. It has a high nutritive value, and is very palatable. In a certain case a number of horses doing ordinary work were maintained on clover for several years without any grain allowance. The objections raised to clover are that it is usually too dusty, and too rich in protein for driving horses.

PREVENT SAGGING OF FENCES

Stay Invented Which Serves Purpose Admirably—Made of a Long Piece of Wire Bent Double.

To keep barbed-wire and similar fences from sagging between the posts, a stay has been invented which apparently serves its purpose adequately. It is made of a long piece of wire bent double, hairpinlike, with one end twisted spirally about the other, which remains straight. At intervals there are small loops through which the fence wires may pass. The top of the device is looped while at the bottom are the two free ends of the wire. In placing it on a fence, the top wire of the latter is straddled by the forked end of the stay, which is then pushed down like an auger, the lower fence wires being inserted between the two prongs as they are reached. The operation requires only a moment's time, so that several hundred of the stays may be put in place in one day.—Popular Mechanics.

BRUSH DAIRY COW EACH DAY

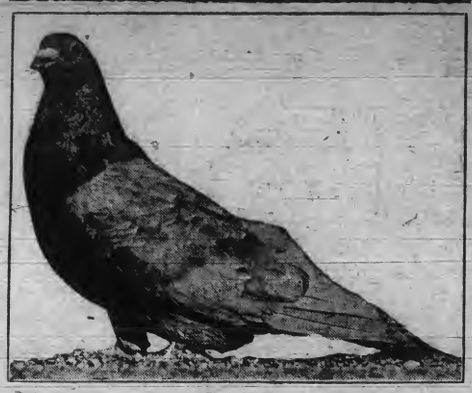
Any Animal Suspected of Being in Bad Health Should Be Removed From Herd—Keep Barn Clean.

The cow should be brushed with a good stiff brush daily. Any cow suspected of being in bad health should be promptly removed from the herd and the milk rejected. Fresh, palatable feedstuffs should be fed and feed should never be changed suddenly. Water in abundance, easy of access and always pure, fresh but not too cold, should be provided at all times. Salt, too, should always be accessible.

The barn should be kept clean and the stables whitewashed once or twice every six months. No dry, dusty feed should be used just before milking. The stables should be cleaned and aired thoroughly before milking. Ventilation and light are absolutely necessary. No strong smelling material should be left in the stables for any length of time. Musty and dirty litter should never be used.

When the cows are milked the milk should be removed at once, strained and aerated. Cleanliness is a good preventive to keep milk from souring at once.

INCENTIVE TO RAISE SWINE



Farmer Should Not Only Provide Meat for His Own Table, But Have Some for the Market.

The price of hogs continues to climb and bacon and hams are keeping right in close touch with the advance. This is going to work a hardship on many a man who has been in the habit of enjoying these products. With the farmer, however, it should be an incentive to raise hogs not only to provide meat for his own table, but to have some for the market. There is both good living and money in it.

PIGEON FACTS FOR PRACTICAL BREEDER

Runt Cross.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A list of questions on profitable pigeon raising was sent by the poultry specialists of the United States department of agriculture to pigeon breeders throughout the United States, and, among others, replies were received from 22 large breeders who kept from 300 to 2,200 pigeons and produced squabs for market. The records from these breeders are considered more applicable to the commercial production of squabs than the replies which were received from breeders keeping only a few pigeons for home use or [illegible] pure. These large breeders reported keeping the Homer and Carneaux varieties almost exclusively for squab raising, with a comparatively small number of the Dragoon, Maltese hen, and White King mentioned. All except one breeder kept their pigeons confined. The birds were mated at from five to seven months old, the average mating age being 5.7 months.

Wheat, corn, kafir corn, Canada peas, millet, and hemp were the grains most commonly fed, while a number of other grains including peanuts, grass seed, oats, buckwheat, sunflower seed, rice, Egyptian corn, cowpeas, and milo maize were also used. About one-half of the breeders reported the use of some kind of green feed, including a wide range of such material. The use of rock salt was reported by one-half of the breeders, loose table salt by one-fourth, and table salt baked into a hard lump by the rest. About 16 per cent used some extra feed, such as millet or hemp seed, during the molting period, while several who did not use any special feed for assisting the molt supplied these grains in their regular rations. One-third used hoppers in feeding the pigeons.

About one-half supplied tobacco stems as the entire or for part of the nesting material, and hay and straw were commonly used, while others used pine needles, cut pea vines, and alfalfa stems. One-half reported freedom from all diseases and about one-fourth gave canker as a common cause of sickness.

The average annual profit per pair of breeders varied from 32 cents to $3.00, and averaged $1.52; the feed cost from 95 cents to $2.00, with an average of $1.32. All sold squabs for market, while about one-half sold both as breeders and for market. The average price for the year received per dozen squabs varied from $2.00 to $4.62 and averaged $3.43.

The number of squabs marketed from each pair of pigeons varied from 10 to 20, and averaged 13.1; the weight per dozen squabs varied from 6 to 11 pounds, and averaged 9 pounds. Squabs were marketed at four weeks except from two farms where the average age of marketing was given as four and one-half weeks.

Data Secured From Small Breeders.

A large number of replies were received from breeders who kept less than 300 pigeons. Their answers in general agreed with those from the large pigeon breeders, although they were more varied. Many farmers objected to pigeons, claiming that they carried diseases and all kinds of vermin among stock and fowls, dirted cisterns used for holding rain water, and ate grain from the fields and barns. A very few farmers stated that the pigeons were beneficial to the farms and ate many weed seeds. The number of pigeons in farm sections not kept confined was reported to be diminishing greatly as the country became more thickly settled.

Other varieties of pigeons mentioned, in addition to those reported [illegible]

Runt and the common pigeon. A few breeders separated the sexes during the molting period; that is, during late summer and early fall. Slightly more than one-half allowed their pigeons free range. Barley, rye, sorghum seed, and prepared mixed pigeon feeds were additional feeds mentioned. Most farmers who did not keep their pigeons confined fed only grains which they raised, such as corn, wheat, and oats. Twelve per cent mixed fine salt with grit and oyster shell, and 5 per cent fed the salt dissolved in the drinking water. Oyster shell and grit were supplied by most breeders. A few used special tonics during the molting period. Only 23 per cent reported the use of tobacco stems or leaves, as against 50 per cent among the larger breeders.

The diseases most frequently mentioned were canker, going light, and roup. The principal method of treatment was prevention; by keeping everything clean, using disinfectants freely, and killing sick or diseased pigeons. Remedies mentioned for preventing sickness were the use of kerosene oil, permanganate of potash, lime, copper sulphate, carbolic acid, sulpho-napthol, quassia chips, epsom salts, Venetian red, tincture of gentian, or a tonic in the drinking water. Dry sulphur and diluted peroxide of hydrogen were used in treating canker, and kerosene oil for roup. A few allowed diseased pigeons their freedom when they had been kept confined. About one-fourth reported some loss from rats, but most of the larger breeders made their pens rat proof. Losses from hawks and cats were reported in some cases where the pigeons were allowed their freedom.

The average yearly profit from each pair of breeders varied from 20 cents to $7.50, and averaged $2.29. The profit from breeders who sold stock largely for breeding purposes varied from $10 to $20 per pair. The average yearly feed cost per pair varied from 40 cents to $4, and averaged $1.32. Fifty-five per cent sold squabs for market only, 33 per cent both for market and as breeders, and 12 per cent for breeders only. The number of squabs marketed from each pair of breeders varied from 5 to 22, and averaged 13.8; the weight per dozen squabs varied from 4 to 18 pounds, and averaged 10.1 pounds. Squabs were marketed at from 3 to 6 weeks; the average being 4.2 weeks. The average price for the year received per dozen squabs varied from 60 cents to $6 and averaged $3.01.

STERILE EGGS ALWAYS BEST

There Are Other Requisites Than Freshness to Real Good Egg—Three Prime Essentials.

It comes as a surprise to a great many consumers of eggs to learn that an absolutely fresh egg is not necessarily a good egg and that on the contrary it may be a very bad egg, not fit to grace the table as food.

For time out of memory the prime requisite of an egg has been that it be fresh. This has been emphasized by dealers for years who get a premium for eggs "direct from the farm." But while poultry culture has been making progress in the last few years it has been established that an egg is not necessarily good just because it happens to be fresh. Poultrymen who have made a scientific study of their business now are endeavoring to impress upon the public that there are other requisites than freshness to a real good egg.

There are three prime requisites to an egg that can go to the table unquestioned and unchallenged. It must be sterile, sanitary and fresh.

Provide a Deep Litter.

As soon as it becomes necessary to confine the flock to the house most of the time, provide a deep litter of straw or leaves. Rye straw is best as it is tough and lasts a long time. If nothing else is available cut corn stalks can be used.

Profit in Fattening.

The only way you ever will be thoroughly convinced of the profit there is in fattening the poultry crop, the same as any farm stock, is to try it this season.

Take your County Paper.

WE SHOULDN'T WORRY A MINUTE

"I wish my foresight was as good as my hindsight," exclaimed the farmer as he pushed his pass book through the grating to the banker.

"Hog market bothering you?" asked the banker, sympathetically.

"No, it's the children this time."

"None of them sick, I hope?" continued the banker.

"No, but they have all grown up faster than I calculated they would. Here's Mary, that was a baby only the other day, seems to me, and now she's through all the grades and ready for High School. Say, why under the sun haven't we got a High School in this neighborhood?"

"Oh, I don't know. Seems to me there's lots of reasons. First and foremost, we haven't ever had one, and, in the second place, taxes are just about as high as folks will stand for. Anyhow, you're doing pretty well, and so am I, so what's the use of worrying about it?"

"Confound you and the way you look at the whole proposition," exclaimed the farmer as he brought his fist down on the counter. "You say it will raise the taxes. I know that just as well as you or anybody else, I reckon. I know, too, that I myself have made that same old, lame excuse for not having better schools. You say I'm making money on the farm, and you're making money here in the bank, so we shouldn't worry a bit. Man alive, the trouble with both of us and a lot of other folks is, that we've let the dollar in our eye get so big that we can't see around it at all. We're self-satisfied and we're willing to farm and to bank and make money and let things kinder drift."

"Say, look here," exclaimed the banker, "you're doing a whole lot of talking, but you haven't given me any real idea of what started this big spasm of yours."

"I'll tell you how it started. It started with the kids at home getting big and demanding things for themselves. It all happened before I had any idea that they were anywhere near old enough to do much thinking for themselves. Let me tell you, kids ain't half the fools grown folks think they are. As I told you awhile ago, Mary's finished at the little country school at the cross roads and she says she's going to High School. Of course, it wouldn't be a hard matter for us to send Mary off to school, but by the time she'll be ready to graduate from High School, both of the other children would be away from home, too, getting an education.

"Of course, neither my wife nor I want to be left on the farm by ourselves. To tell you the honest truth, my wife is going to go with the kids when they go, and you can bet your bottom dollar I'm not going to try to hold down the farm by myself. All of this simply means that I've got to pull up stakes and move into town somewhere when I'm just in my prime and the farm paying better than ever before. I don't know a blessed thing I can do in town, so I'll have to loaf and potter around and worry a lot because I'll know the farm won't be kept up like I've kept it."

"But why do you say that you have got to go?" asked the banker.

"Because," answered the farmer slowly and thoughtfully, "because I believe way down deep in my heart that every child in this country that wants the advantages of a good education is entitled to it, if it is possible to give it to him. I wouldn't do anything on top of this earth to hinder any of my children from getting all the education they want.

"What's bothering me now is that every mother son of us has been mighty short-sighted, to say the least. Why haven't I, why haven't you had gumption enough to see this thing coming toward us all the time? I've been busy farming and you've been busy watching your money grow as it goes out over the counter and comes back again. I'm a successful farmer and everybody knows you are a dandy banker, but I'm mighty sure and certain that we ain't just what we ought to be as parents."

"But you forget there's another side to—"

"Hold on a minute, Mr. Banker, hold on. There ain't any other side to this question; there never was and never will be any other side to it. I want to tell you that I've been running this thing over in my mind a whole lot in the past few weeks and there ain't any other side to the question. The whole thing is as plain as the nose on your face. Here it is. The child has a mind and it is the only thing that'll save it from being a nobody and a failure in life. So when the child says it wants that mind trained neither you nor I nor anybody else has got any right to get in the child's way."

"Perhaps there is something in what you say. It might—"

"Perhaps, nothing," exclaimed the farmer. "You and I and every other man down in this part of the country have hurt and crippled enough fine children who simply couldn't get away so they could be really educated. Besides we have run lots and lots of the best of them away and they didn't ever come back, either. Mine are going away, and I don't know whether they will ever come back, and I can't blame them one bit. Perhaps, you say, perhaps, my goodness, man, here we are living in an age when an education is everything and we kill all chances in life for our children before they really get started in life. Perhaps, why we ain't as good as painted savages, because they don't know any better."

Our Shadow.

Everyone of us casts a shadow. There hangs above us a sort of penumbra—a strange, indefinable something—which we call the personal influence, which has its effect on every other life on which it falls. It goes with us wherever we go. It is not something we can have when we will, as we lay aside a garment. It is something that always pours out from our life like light from a lamp, like heat from a flame, like perfume from a flower.—J. R. Miller.

Birds in Panama Canal Zone.

The bird resources of the canal zone evidently are of much importance. Possibly if they are properly conserved they will become one of the valuable assets of the United States. Having permitted so much reckless bird slaughter in this country that insect pests are increasing at an alarming rate it would be well to take care of the birds that have been added to our national possessions by reason of the acquisition of a section of Panama.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

GIVE EWES ATTENTION

Too Much Importance Cannot Be Placed on Feeding.

Late Summer is Trying Time on Breeding Animals—Necessary for Best Results to Keep Flock in Vigorous Condition.

(By W. M. KELLY.)

It has been my experience in handling breeding ewes that one cannot place too much importance upon planning their feeding and management, so that by the time the mating season arrives the ewes will be in vigorous, flesh-forming condition. It is a serious mistake to have the breeding ewes in a poor, run-down and unthrifty condition at mating time.

The late summer is a very trying time on the breeding ewes; and unless a man maintains the flock in strong, vigorous condition, deleterious influences are bound to creep in and cut down the annual profits. It is very desirable at weaning time to have an abundance of pasture and supplemental forage crops so that the ewes may be able to recover their normal condition gradually and be ready to be mated as soon as the mating period arrives.

The ewes that produce the best lambs at weaning time are usually the best breeders in the flock and should be given the best food and care. Right here many flock owners make a mistake by disposing of the ewes that show a lack of condition before the mating season arrives.

Ewes that have suckled their lambs well during the summer are sure to be reduced in flesh at weaning time, and every effort should be made to bring them to a strong, vigorous condition before the mating season arrives.

The safest way to judge the value of a breeding ewe is to examine the quality of the lambs at weaning time. In nine cases out of ten we shall find that the best lambs belong to the individuals which are run down in flesh and show a lack of condition when weaning time comes.

Many make a mistake by feeding the ewes a ration of fat-producing foods to hurry along their condition, but this is not to be recommended except in extreme cases.

During the late summer and early autumn the flock owner should not depend too much upon natural pasture. At this time of year it is impossible to produce good pasture of any kind unless preparations have been made early in the season by sowing forage crops.

With good pasture and forage crops and the addition of a very little grain food, the ewes can be kept in a vigorous, flesh-forming condition until the mating period arrives.

GENERAL FARM NOTES

If you want apples to keep well, pick them on bright, cool days.

Remember the hogs need charcoal worse than you need tobacco.

Hens more than three years old have no place in the farm flock.

Four square feet per bird allows plenty of space in the henhouse.

The new, stored corn should be well ventilated or it may mold.

Calves like to use their teeth. That is why the orchard is no place for them.

Keep selecting and pushing the hogs off to market as soon as they are fit.

What the grain grower takes from the soil, the dairy cow in time restores.

There is no need of a henhouse being any higher than one can stand in without bumping his head.

• • •

Dairymen can well afford to keep close to home when foot-and-mouth disease is running wild.

Keeping all sizes of pigs and hogs together is responsible for the creation of thousands of unprofitable runts.

Prepare a stable for the calves and yearlings in the sunniest corner of the barn.

Provide some shelter in the fall pasture for the cows to reach when they naturally need it.

The time to cut alfalfa for hay is when small roots are beginning to appear at the base.

THE HOPE OF THE NEW YEAR

WHAT OF THE NEW YEAR?

As clanging bells send their glad message of the birth of a Happy New Year out upon the cold crisp air, it is always well to take stock of one's self. The Kentucky farmer has many things for which he may be duly thankful as the Old Year dies. Bountiful crops and soaring farm land values make his life very much worth while. Automobile skimming over the many new hard roads built in 1915 make rural life easier and more pleasant than in the past. Phonographs and telephones in increasing numbers make the rural home a happier and a better place in which to live and to rear a family.

All of these good things are making the farmer, his wife and his children—ah! Has the farmer forgotten his children? The holidays will soon be over; then these children must go back to the little rural school. This school is about the only thing with which the farmer and his family come in contact, that is not a part of the present century. It is the one thing for which neither he nor his family can give thanks this Happy New Year.

Every farmer should realize as the New Year is ushered in with the sound of bells on the fresh night air, that soaring land values, bumper crops and snug bank accounts do not make a community, a great State or a Strong Nation. If a small percentage of the bountiful crops, the snug bank accounts and the soaring land values, were carefully invested in real schools for real children, then the farmer might feel safe for the future. All things are possible in a well educated community. What is your schoolhouse like as 1916 is on the threshold of Kentucky?

Thanksgiving Day! Thanksgiving Day!
'Tis then our nation tries to pay
Its heavy debt of gratitude
For bountiful supplies of food,
And richest blessings that expand
To cover all of Freedom's land.

THANKSGIVING SWEETS.

Candied pineapple cut in small pieces and dipped in melted fondant, decorated with one or two of the pretty candies which may be purchased from any confectioner, is a wholesome sweet which is easy to prepare.

Nut Balls.—Chop several kinds of nuts, mix well and stir into fondant until well mixed. Roll the balls in chopped nuts until they are well covered.

Fondant is made by boiling two cupfuls of sugar, a pinch of cream of tartar or a tablespoonful of corn sirup, with a half cupful of water until it makes a soft ball when dropped in cold water. Cool and stir until white and creamy.

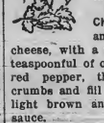
To make wintergreen drops, color pink, flavor with wintergreen and melt the fondant over hot water until it is soft enough to drop from a teaspoon. Drop on a buttered sheet, and when cool remove with a thin-bladed knife. For peppermint, flavor with peppermint; for pistachio, color green, and flavor with pistachio flavoring.

Spice Drops.—Add oil of cinnamon and oil of cloves to fondant, then roll in small balls like hazelnuts. Put tiny silver candies on one kind and pink ones on the other to distinguish flavors.

Almond Sticks.—Blanch half a pound of almonds and chop them fine, stir into a cupful of fondant, flavor with almond, knead and roll in sticks about the size of the little finger.

Rice Jack.—Cook together until brittle in water a cupful of molasses, a cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of water, a tablespoonful of butter and a pinch of soda. Then stir in three cupfuls of puffed rice; pour into a greased pan and allow it to harden.

Chopped figs added to fondant, then made into balls or squares and dipped in melted fondant or chocolate to coat. These will be sticky unless dipped in some covering to give them a coating.



Chopped dates and softened prunes chopped and added to brown bread is an addition and change from raising so commonly used.

SEASONABLE DAINTIES.

Green peppers are so common and may be grown in any summer garden that it seems as if we might serve them often and learn to appreciate them for one of our most appetizing vegetables.

Peppers Filled With Cheese.—Take a cupful and a fourth of cream cheese, with a teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of onion juice, a wash of red pepper, thicken with cracker crumbs and fill the peppers. Bake a light brown and serve with tomato sauce.

Salsify Soup.—Scrape a dozen salsify roots and cut them in thin slices. Drop into boiling water and cook for an hour or until tender. Just before serving add an ounce of shredded codfish, two tablespoonfuls of butter, a pint of milk and a half cupful of cream. Season to taste and serve piping hot.

Salad of Lemon Jelly.—Soak two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in a tablespoonful of cold water; then dissolve in two cupfuls of boiling water. Add a cupful of sugar, a half cupful of lemon juice, one green pepper cut in shreds, a third of a cupful of stuffed olives, sliced, a fourth of a cupful of almond meats, shredded. When the mixture begins to thicken it is time to add the vegetables and nuts. Mold in individual or large mold and serve on white leaves of lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

Hot Cheese Sandwiches.—These are especially good to serve for a Sunday night supper. Take a cupful of snappy cheese, add a beaten egg, a tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce, salt and mustard to taste. Cream the cheese and add the seasoning. Cut the bread in rounds, a half-inch thick, spread with the mixture and place a slice of bacon on each round of bread. Put into a hot oven and when the bacon is done, serve at once with a green salad.

A Delicious Dessert.—Bake in gem pans little spiced fruit cakes, and keep them for this dish. Cut each cake in three slices and put them together with sweetened and flavored whipped cream. Served on a pretty plate covered with a paper doily there could be no daintier dish.

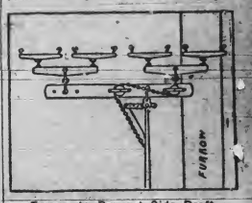
W. O. Duncan, of Kentontown, sold his crop of tobacco to a Bracken county buyer at a high water mark price for the season, receiving fifteen cents per pound straight. This is the highest price paid for a Robertson crop we have heard so far this season. Mr. Duncan is one of the county's leading farmers and successful tobacco growers.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

If you want to raise good horses, you must look after the mares and young foals, in fact, you will have to be a little careful with the mares for three months before foaling, says a writer. Rough treatment, poor feed, and uncomfortable quarters, all tend to lessen the chances of the foal coming into the world alive, strong and able to thrive from the start.



MAKING FOUR-HORSE EVENER

Illustration Shows Arrangement Often Desired at Plowing Time—One Horse Worked in Furrow.

A four-horse evener without side draft is often wanted at plowing time. We give here a description of a good arrangement of this kind furnished us by Mr. J. P. Krens, Woodville, Wis.

The cut will show how the evener is made, and the measurements are as follows:

Two doubletrees of ordinary length, a good tough stick of which to make the long evener, two iron pulleys which will let a strong small link chain work through them, two bolts to go through the pulleys, and two strap-iron braces over the pulleys, will be needed. The stick for the evener should be 5 feet 4 inches long, and the first pulley will be put on 7 inches from the right end of it, measuring to center of pulley. Measure 15½ inches from the center of this pulley and bore hole for the plow clevis. Now measure 30¾ inches from the right end of this evener and bore hole for second pulley bolt so that the two pulleys are 24 inches apart.

It is best to bore two or three holes at the left end of the long evener. Put the first one 3 inches from the end and the others 2 and 4 inches farther in. This evener works one horse in the furrow and three on the unturned land with no side draft, say those who have used it.—Wisconsin Agriculturist.

TRYING FARM HELP PROBLEM

Hired Laborer Should Be Moderately Intelligent and Well Informed—Keep Children on Farm.

The requirements of the farm in the character of the labor employed are changing radically. The labor to be performed by the farmer should be governed by extensive information and considerable scientific knowledge. A successful farmer at the present time may need considerable knowledge of chemistry, of bacteriology, of economic entomology, of the pathology and physiology of plants and animals; of plant and animal breeding, of fungicides and insecticides, of the conservation of soil moisture; of botany, pomology, viticulture, horticulture, and certainly much concerning the practical handling and marketing of his products. The hired laborer does not need to know so much, and yet he should be at least moderately intelligent and well informed. With regard to the future, the forecast is that farm labor will not be recruited in appreciable degree from the city. The farmer would not need to get his labor from the cities if he could hold the country population to the soil, and the recognition of the importance of retaining the children on the farm and of keeping country labor from migrating to cities is governing most of the work by nation and state in behalf of agriculture. In addition to efforts to promote economic improvement, many agencies are at work upon the country people to improve their home life, and their social activities, which are already beginning to count against the unpleasantness of country life and in favor of making it attractive.

INFERTILE EGGS KEEP BEST

Large Poultry Plants Seldom Have Male Fowl on Place—Essential to "Swat the Rooster."

(By J. A. HELMREICH, Colorado Agricultural College.)

Many people think that the cocks have to be with the hens in order to get eggs. This is a mistake and has been demonstrated as such by experiments and practice, for the large poultry plants seldom have a cock on the place and their hens will actually lay more eggs without the cocks around.

I do not advise you to kill or dispose of valuable breeding stock, but merely separate them from the hens. When we stop to consider that there is $600,000,000 worth of poultry sold by our farmers annually, and that this amounts to as much as the money received for wheat or hay; that 8 per cent of all the eggs sold are lost through careless handling, and that a large per cent of this loss is due to the production of fertile eggs during the hot months of the year, it is easy to see how essential it is to "swat the rooster."

Weeds.

A very erroneous idea is prevalent among a great many farmers that a crop of weeds turned down is as good as a coat of manure. They are of as much value as a coat of shavings from a planing mill. The only thing I know they are good for is to furnish a splendid place in which the moths may lay their eggs for a big crop of cut worms the following spring and summer.—C. B. R.

Near and Convenient.

The garden should be near the house so as to make the gathering of vegetables convenient.

FISCAL COURT.

The Fiscal Court was in session Tuesday, County Judge S B. Carson, presiding, and Justices Aylor, Stephens, Wilson, Tanner, Bedinger and Tanner present, and Miss Lizzie Rogers keeping the records.

Officers of election and the doctors for pauper practice were made their usual allowances.

The county school board asked appropriations for this year as follows:

Teachers' Salaries	$8,000.
Repairs	$5,000.
Fuel, etc.,	$4,000.

The court made a levy of 20 cents on the $100 and a poll tax of $1 for educational purposes.

Lowin was allowed $3,295.72 on his contract for work done reconstructing the Burlington and Florence turnpike.

Henry Pernell was allowed $53 for smallpox guard.

The average number of inmates at the county infirmary last year was 28.65, who were kept at a cost of $96.12 per head, the total cost being $2,765.

F. H. Rouse was reappointed superintendent of the county infirmary.

The county road engineer was authorized to spend not to exceed $750 in assisting to open a public road from Whitlock's gate to Taylorsport

State aid was asked for the following roads: Burlington to Warsaw, Gallatin county via Waterloo; Petersburg and Burlington turnpike and Bullittsville and Dry Creek pike

The delinquent list was sold to N. W. Burkitt, of Union, for $100.

The committee appointed by the good roads meeting on Monday having reported to the court the action of that meeting, the court adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, There will be submitted to the voters of this county the question of issuing $200,000 in bonds for the purpose of constructing and reconstructing of the roads and bridges in this county at an election to be held for that purpose; and, whereas, this court has been asked to outline its policy in the expenditure of said $200,000 in case said bond issue carries; and upon consideration this court announces that its policy will be tthe same that it has been in the past, to-wit, constructing and reconstructing the roads and freeing the turnpikes, and also the purchase of sufficient road machinery to properly build and keep said roads in repair.

A Destructive Fire in Petersburg

Special by Telephone—

The residence of Perry Bruce in Petersburg was destroyed by fire Wednesday morning about five o'clock. Insurance on house and contents $800, loss about $ 500. The building was about ready to fall in when the fire was discovered and Mr. Bruce and family had a narrow escape with their lives, and nothing was saved from the building. It took hard work to save J. M. Thompson's residence near by. Origin of fire not known.

DIXEY HIGHWAY MEETING

Great Interest Manifested—Committees Appointed—Petitions to Be Circulated Asking for Vote On Bond Issue.

The interest manifested in the good roads movement at the meeting held in Burlington, Monday, was a surprise that was very gratifying to those who are behind the proposition. While meeting was not large it was composed of representative men from nearly every section of the county, among them some of the county's largest taxpayers.

Speeches were made by Dr. Bonnifield, of Cincinnati, and president of the Cincinnati Automobile Club; Mr. Galbreath, a Dixie Highway Commissioner; J. C. Hughes, of Richwood; Edgar Riley, of Burlington, and others.

The meeting appointed the following committees:

Committee to present matter of a bond issue to the Fiscal Court—W. A. Gaines and E. C. Riley, Burlington. J. G. Tomlin, Walton.

Committee to Circulate Petiton and conduct Campaign for Bond Issue—Dr. Jake Cleek of Walton; Al Rogers of Belleview; W. A. Gaines and E. C. Riley of Burlington; Dr. O. E. Senior of Union.

Local Dixie Highway Council—C. Scott Chambers, President; Dr. Jake Cleek, Secretary; D. B. Wallace, Treasurer; J. G. Tomlin, Vice-Chairman.

The following petition was adopted by the meeting to be circulated by the proper committee:

Boone County Court.

To Hon. P. E. Cason, County Judge Boone county:

We, the undersigned legal voters, freeholders and citizens of Boone county, hereby representing that the roads and pikes in Boone county are in a deplorable condition, and that the mandate of the people to free the pikes has not been complied with, and cannot be complied with, without providing means, and hereby complaining that the county cannot make reasonable progress without a better system of roads, do now petition your Honor to make an order directing that an election be held in Boone county on the 8th day of May, 1916, for ascertaining the will of the people of Boone county upon the question of issuing $200,000 worth of bonds for the purpose of building roads and bridges.

This January the 3rd, 1915.

HOME AND FARM.

About one-fifth of the farm land in this country is planted to corn each year and the United States produces twice as much corn as all other countries put together.

A pound of grain consumed by a good cow will produce more profit than when fed to a steer for beef. This is not fancy, it is a fact.

Where the hot bed is to stand same place year after year, one made of concrete is to be preferred. It may be as cheaply constructed, and is much more satisfactory than one mads of lumber.

It is much cheaper to milk and care for one cow giving 300 lbs. of butterfat in a year than it is to milk and care for three cows giving one hundred pounds of butterfat each and if the 300-pound cow is heavily fed she will not eat as much as the three 100-pound cows.

All stables, like houses, should have ample window space in order to admit a plentiful supply of sunlight and fresh air, in themselves among the most powerful disinfectant s known. Bacteria thrive in dampness, dirt and darkness, and a clean, dry stable presents the most unfavorable conditions for their development. For this reason good drainage is also an essential point to be considered in the construction of a stable.

During winter is a good time to begin to fill the many little gullies that have started during the year. Instead of throwing old buckets, cans and shoes all about over the place, just carry them to where they can still be of service—put them in a gully. I doubt if ever a bucket or can was more useful anywhere if placed with open end toward the mouth of the gully, says a writer in Inland Farmer. In this way they catch and are filled with the sediment brought by the torrents of water during heavy rains. Then sticks and other obstacles lodge against them and soon the gully is in shape to hold all obstacles and much soil too, and in a short time is completely filled.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, It has pleased an all wise God to call home on December tweifth, nineteen hundred and fifteen, the wife of our beloved brother, Eugene Withem.

Resolved, That members of Morning Star Lodge No. 16, I. O. O. F., extend to our brother, our heartfelt sympathy in his great bereavement and we extend to the children of our brother our deepest sympathy in the loss of a devoted mother.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Lodge a copy be sent to our bereaved Brother and a copy be furnished for publication in the Boone Co. Recorder.

Committee—J. W. Snyder, D. B. Hoffman, Harry McWethy.

Albert Conner bought about 25,000 pounds of tobacco Tuesday at from eight to ten dollars per hundred.

You've hit the right tobacco

when you fire-up some Prince Albert in your old jimmy pipe or in a makin's cigarette. And you know it! Can't get in wrong with P. A. for it is made right; made to spread-smoke-sunshine among men who have suffered with scorched tongues and parched throats! The patented process fixes that—and cuts out bite and parch. All day long you'll sing how glad you are you're pals with

It's an easy job to change the shape and color of unsalable brands to imitate the Prince Albert tidy red tin, but it is impossible to imitate the flavor of Prince Albert tobacco! The patented process protects that!

PRINCE ALBERT

the national joy smoke

You take this testimony straight from the shoulder, men. You can smoke a barrel of P. A. without a kick! It hands out all the tobacco happiness any man ever dreamed about, it's so smooth and friendly. It's a mighty cheerful thing to be on talking-terms with your pipe and your tongue at the same time—but that's what's coming to you sure as you pin your faith to Prince Albert!

Everywhere tobacco is sold you'll find Prince Albert awaiting your cheerful visit. Buy it in toppy red bags, 5c; tidy red tins, 10c; handsome pound and half-pound humidors—and—in that classy pound crystal-glass humidor with sponge-moistener top that keeps the tobacco so fit!

No Shooting of Wild Ducks.

Under the Federal law no spring shooting of waterfowl is allowed. The season for ducks and geese on the Ohio, and elsewhere, closed last midnight and opens the first of next November. Everyone who is interested sincerely in the conservation of game—every good sportsman—will wish to see the law enforced rigidly.

The abolition of spring shooting has served to increase the number of ducks on the Ohio in the autumn and early winter, as well as in the late winter and spring. A period of vandalism which began when migratory waterfowl were numerous in Kentucky threatened to destroy the game and end finally shooting which had grown poorly repaid. Whereas there was formerly a great deal of shooting and very little shooting became the rule.

Sportsmen, will, and others should lend a hand wherever there is an opportunity to aid in the protection of waterfowl during the closed season. Violators of the Federal law should be turned over to Federal authorities wherever they are detected. Within a few years there will be, as a result of the closed season in the spring, enough waterfowl to repay autumn and early winter expeditions in quest of such game. —Ex.

VOL. XXXXI. Established 1875. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, JANUARY 13. 1916 $1.50 Per Year. NO. 16

Why I Want A Farm Agent

Because he is the only medium through which farmers can be reached, He goes to their farms, examines their soil and suggests modern methods that have been tried in five or ten year experiments at our Agricultural Farm.

It requires about eight ingredients of plant food to produce any crop, consequently if any of them is short of the required amount one-half, then we can not expect more than half a crop. Hence, through our Farm Agent we can have our soil analyzed and add what is short and make full crops.

Nitrogen is the desrest ingred ient necessary to plant growth. It is claimed that there is over one million dollars worth of nitrogen in the air over each acre of land. If we could belong to us, and why should not we thru some legumin ous crop and our Farm Agent har ness it and deposit it in our soil and enable us to make bumper crops?

Our taxes and other expenses are gradually increasing and our lands are growing less productive, and all the States, and all the counties in Kentucky, except Boone, are accepting improved methods. We will have to fall in line or become a pauper. Wake up, old foggy, or it will be too late!

Boone county is favorably located near Cincinnati and has the best of shipping facilities on east and south by rail, and the north and west by river. At one time Boone county stood fourth in the State in the matter of the valua- tion of farm lands, but in later years she has dropped to the eighth position. I don't know, but think she has gone to the mountsins

Boone at one time was a very rich county with her limestone soil, but under the old methods of farming the lime available for plant food has leached out and the soil has become sour and acidy and it has become a soil in which leguminous plants will not grow because acid kills the bacteria or germs that must be present that it may become inoculated, enabling it to draw its necessary supply of nitrogen from the air for depositing in the soil that it may produce bumper crops

On sour or acid soils you will find all kinds of obnoxious weeds, such as buckhorn, plantin, sheep sorrel and many others

I have ground and used 150 tons of limestone rock and some acid phosphate, getting wonderful ly good results on sour Boone county land I have sowed sweet clover and alfalfa on well limed land, that at six weeks old was thoroughly inoculated, and after inoculation it has the power to draw its main support, nitrogen, from the air

I believe the secret of reclaiming wornout land has been discovered and that the remedy is at hand if farmers will accept it and use it it will double the productiveness of a large per cent of the land in this county in a very few years, paying us well while it will add from two to four million dollars to the county's wealth, which ought to reduce our tax rate

I think the best and quickest wsy to reclaim our sour, acidy land is to take limestone rock from our hillsides and hollows and grind them to dust and use from two to four tons per acre and sow to sweet clover The lime will sweeten the soil and inoculate the clover, and the clover will feed on the nitrogen in the air, depositing a portion of it in the soil for the crops that may follow, and I will stake my reputation on its yield being twice as many bushels per acre as it was before the application of the lime

At the request of County Agent Brockwsy last spring I made a field test on corn with ground limestone and acid phosphate which I expect to give next week

I want to insist on the worthy fiscal court to consider the employment of a County Farm Agent and the best that can be had The national government knows our need and wants to pay one-half the cost of a farm agent Will the fiscal court accept the aid? Our soil should be made to double its present productiveness and our motto should be "an acre of alfalfa for every farm in Boone county," the greatest forage plant that grows

If my suggestions are adopted and carried out thru the farm agent they will make us more prosperous and we will add more than one million dollars to the wealth of Boone county

VERONA.

It was with deepest sorrow and regret that the members of St. Patrick's church received the news of the promotion of their beloved pastor, the Rev. John Kroger, from this psrish; but although it fills our hearts with grief to bid him farewell, we feel that his talents deserve a much larger field. During the six years he has been with us his life has been one of constsnt service and unflinching sscrifice. In our joys he has shared and found delight, and in days of sorrow he cheered us and helped us bear the burdens. The efficient work accomplished with rare talent and perserverance by Father Kroger for the improvement of the singing will not soon be forgotten by the members of the choir. The many improvements which have been made in and about the church during the past few years are ample evidence of his untiring zeal to make the house of God more beautiful. His holy, pious and scholarly sermons struck deep root and made s more lasting impression on his flock because of their appreciation of his work and of the high esteem in which they held him. May God prolong his days and grsnt him many more yesrs of his toiling, sorrowing, and yet rejoicing life, and may he in the end enjoy the rich reward which God has promised to His most devoted servants.

WILLIAM S. WHITE.

AFTER A LINGERING ILLNESS, OF MORE THAN A YEAR, PASSES AWAY.

Grim death invaded the Hathaway neighborhood and removed from its midst an old and esteemed friend, William S. White, who wss a sufferer for over a year of cancer of the stomach from which disease he died Jsn. 3, 1916, after intense suffering for four months. Mr. White was a son of Joel and Amelia White, and was born Nov. 14th, 1842, and died aged 73 years, one month and 19 days. He was one of a family of five children, all of whom have preceded him to the grave except one brother, Charles E. White. Mr. White was united in marriage to Sarah E. Ryle, Jan. 3rd, 1865. To them six children were born, three sons snd three daughters —James W. White, Lourena Kelly, John C. White, H. Clay White, Jr., Mary E. Rector, and Pearl Brady. He professed faith in his Lord and united with the Belleview Baptist church in the fall of 1903, and was a member there until his death. The funeral services were conducted at his home last Wednesday morning at 10 a. m., by Rev. Albert Maddox, of Big Bone, in the absence of his pastor, Rev. Baker. His scripsural reading was from the 14th chapter of John. After the funeral services the remains were taken to Belleview cemetery by undertaker Phil ip Taliaferro, of Erlanger, and laid to rest in the presence of a concourse of sorrowing friends.

Card of Thanks—We desire to thank the many friends and neighbors for their kindness and untiring services rendered during my husband's and our father's long illness; also Bro. Maddox for his consoling remarks at the funeral, also to the undertaker, Mr. Philip Taliaferro for his excellent services rendered.

Mr. Ingram is looking well and was glad to meet his old sequaintances, some of whom did not recognize him at first. He is very much like his father in manner, having a smile and a pleasant word for everyone.

The first step in the right way. I do not believe a bond issue will carry unless a proposition is put to a vote along this line: That the dirt roads the number of miles be nsmed that are to be piked first, and at the same time free the turnpikes of the toll gates. This would equalize the road tax as far as improvement is concerned with other parts of the county. Then after this good work is completed, the Dixie Highway could be looked after as a special resort for the tourist.

J. E. HALL.

Bids for carrying the Star Route mail from Erlanger to Burlington must be in the hands of the Postoffice Department at Washington by the 18th of this month. As the carrier on that route handles the mail for at least one-fourth of Boone county to pay should be considerabe more than it has been in the past, and there should be no throat cutting in the bidding.

It is strange how many there are who can tell how the roads in this county should be handled, and it is remarkably strange that in the last twenty-five years there has never come to the front a man who could give entire satis faction in handling them. An immense amount of road talent is on tap just now and will continue to be but the ranks of the knockers will not be thinned in the least.

Mrs. Josephine Del Drago, of N. Y., who gave two million dollars to the Queen of Italy, recently, for the relief of warriors' families is said to be an own cousin of J. M. Birkle, of Bullittsville, and a second cousin of Charles Birkle, of Burlington. Her father was Meinrod Kleinor. Her husband was a brewer and his estate was worth twenty million dollars.

VALUABLE HORSE HINTS

Repose Almost as Essential as Good Feed and Water.

Colt Is Not Safe for Women, Children or Inexperienced Men to Handle—Study Conformation and Breeding of Mares.

All horses, when turned out in pasture, are more prone to take their rest lying down than when confined in stable stalls, says a writer in Inland Farmer. But even when practically free from human restraint and observation, or any likelihood of danger, they seldom take more than an hour each night in the recumbent position, and that period is generally indulged in about midnight.

A noted veterinarian says: "There are some curious facts regarding the disposition or horses in the matter of lying down. To a hard-working horse repose is almost as much of a necessity as good food and water, but tired as he may be, he is an animal very shy about lying down. I have known instances where stablemen declared that the horses in their charge had never been known to take rest in that manner, but always slept standing.

In purchasing a general purpose horse, which will be used when railroad, electric cars and autos are to be met, don't buy a colt, because no young horse is safe for women, children or inexperienced men to handle.

Don't buy until you have driven, or have seen the horse driven, near enough to these objects of terror to be certain that he will pass them without trying to smash up things. Better

Greater efficiency in the field is secured by matching horses according to their working character, even if they do not look alike.

PROPER TYPE IS ESSENTIAL

Refers to Sheep Possessing Mutton and Wool Characteristics—Secure Purebred Ram.

Unity of type in the flock should be the direct aim of every breeder. This applies to grades as well as purebreds, and refers to the selection of a type of sheep, possessing similar mutton and wool characteristics. With pure breeds this feature is especially important. In a flock of sheep where several types obtain, choice of a suitable ram is most difficult. Besides, disparity in this respect detracts from the general appearance of the flock and gives the buyer or casual observer an unfavorable opinion, writes T. R. Arkell in Farm, Stock and Home. Every breeder should aspire to produce a distinctive type. He should endeavor to breed a class of sheep possessing characteristics that, wherever the animals are, they will be recognized as his breeding. But to attain this he should never uphold some fancy character in preference to utility features. No feature should be given undue prominence beyond another, especially one that is purely ornamental. The establishment of an ultra form of some fashionable characteristic has at times become an obsession with many breeders of purebred sheep, and this sin (for it cannot be called anything else) must be avoided. The ultimate destination of most purebred rams is at the head of grade flocks, and their utility features should only be taken into consideration.

EXCLUDE AIR FROM THE SILO

Prevents Formation of Acctic Acid Which Causes Feed to Sour—Cut in Short Lengths.

Packing the ensilage well improves it. It is the air in the ensilage that spoils it, and the more air in it the more acetic acid is formed. This is the acid that makes it sour. The less air the less acetic acid and the more lactic acid, which is the most desirable. The tramping in compacting the ensilage leaves less room for air and so makes better ensilage.

Cutting the ensilage fine makes it pack better. Half to three-quarter-inch lengths are the most satisfactory.

W. C. T. U. NEWS.

(Furnished by Mrs. Belle Dickey.)

The Kentucky Legislature will be petitioned to submit a woman suffrage bill to the voters of the State. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has always advocated "votes for women as a weapon against the legalized liquor traffic.

Eleven States enjoy full suffrage. They and Illinois, with its limited privileges, have demonstrated that where the ballot is granted to women on equal terms with men it has been used against every form of legalized vice. Our opponents, the traffickers, the exploiters of child life and all others who seek the destruction and demoralization of society, testify that the ballot in the hands of women spells defeat. Our friends are a mighty host. The educators, the philanthropists, the social service workers, the best element of capital and labor, the great percentage of the Christian organizations of the country are arrayed with us in the effort to secure equal political rights for women.

The wife of Philadelphia's reform mayor (Mrs. Lucretia Longshore Blankenburg, for many years head of the state suffrage association of Pennsylvania) when asked just before the elections whether we were likely to carry any of the eastern campaign states, shook her head doubtfully and said:

"We might do it, if it weren't for the pesky liquor dealers."

Mrs. Blankenburg knew whereof she spoke, for suffragists everywhere have found the organized rum power to be their greatest adversary. So it proved in October in New Jersey, where corliquor interests defeated the suffrage amendment by a vote of 184,390 to 133,282—a majority of 51,108 against suffrage.

The November elections revealed the same sinister influences at work and suffrage was not endorsed in any of the three remaining campaign states of 1915—Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania. These three states, as everybody knows, are among the deadly dark spots that mar the constantly whitening prohibition map of the United States, and the blackest of these states is Pennsylvania. It was naturally thought the election results would put Pennsylvania in the rear, and even the most optimistic of "Keystone state" suffragists never imagined her state would lead.

This has been the great surprise and the wonderful cheer of the election—a silver lining to the cloud. Thirty-one of the sixty seven counties of Pennsylvania voted "yes" for woman suffrage! Chief among these was Allegheny county with the city of Pittsburg and its population of over half a million—a county exceeded in population only by California, among the suffrage states, and now facet fously called "the state of Allegheny." Allegheny county enjoys the distinction of being the first county of a million or more population to give a majority for suffrage. Two of the big anthracite counties, Luzerne and Lackawanna, including the cities of Wilkes Barre and Scranton were carried for suffrage.

The largest majority—4,500—was that of Erie county in the extreme northeast of Pennsylvania and one of the unbroken tier of northern counties, eight in line, which endorsed "Votes for Women" with good majorities. This tier and the solid bank of western counties won for suffrage, and all in white make the map of Pennsylvania look as if it had been "snowed under" by suffrage. What a happy augury of the happy day when Pennsylvania will be all white on both the suffrage and the prohibition map!

Its first suffrage campaign has been a memorable one for the "Keystone State." Many women aided by chivalrous men, have united in the work. The W. C. T. U., over 43,000 strong, was a powerful leverage thruout the state. The state federation of Women's Clubs have hearty cooperation.

"Why do you want the vote?" asked the voter of a women helper at the polls opposite a saloon.

"Because I want to vote out that saloon," was the frank response.

A liquor document furnished the public during the Massachusetts campaign declares itself to be "Most important to Brewers, Distillers, Hotel Proprietors, Wholesale and Retail Dealers, Saloon Owners and all others who in any way handle liquor for sale." Its chief line of argument relates to the fact that liquor is a necessity and that its sale must be licensed and properly regulated. It affirms that the prohibitionist is the enemy of honest men in an honest vocation and advises the friends of license to come together for concerted action. "We can and must have license by all honorable means." "The coming referendum leaves a way open for us to succeed for license." "Lastly, we must and do know if woman suffrage should be any possibility be confirmed at the referendum, that it will mean entire state prohibition. No one in the state can then secure a license because the women will, in the majority, vote against it. These are some of the choice sentences with which the document is adorned.

Is it any wonder that, in giving this document to the public, the Massachusetts Women's Christian Temperance Union feels it is furnishing a valuable contribution to the campaign? It is possible to deceive good temperance men and women on the relation of woman's ballot to the great question. It is not possible to deceive those whose very existence and interest is bound up in the perpetuity of the liquor traffic. They know what it means and they are opposing it with might and main. It is affirmed by those who claim to know that the liquor traffic of the state has pledged eight millions of dollars to defeat the amendment. Whether or not the sum named is a correct one we are sure, from past experience, that neither men nor money will be spared in the effort to defeat the conscience of the home in its battle against the non-conscience of the saloon. God speed the right!

Entering a Year of Marvelous Prosperity.

In every state of the Union there is today a financial strength a business confidence, a commercial activity, a general prosperity, beyond any prior period of our national life.

In the agricultural districts there is much to sell, a great demand for the products and prevailing good prices.

In the industrial districts every person able to work and desirous of employment can have his or her name placed upon a pay roll at fair wages.

In the mining districts, whether coal, silver, lead, copper, gold or zinc the mineral sought, the number of persons employed has never been equaled and the wages never exceeded.

In the oil and gas fields there is big money for everything produced and a demand that is beyond all records.

In the stores and shops the retail distribution during the last past two months has been immense, and our merchants in every town and city are now experiencing the effects of the recent increases in the purchasing power of the masses of the people.

Every month will add to that purchasing power and every month will demonstrate to our merchants that the demands of their customers will become all the greater as their means of paying for what they desire increase.

There is no doubt that the retail trade of 1916 will be far above all records of the past years.

Our railways are prospering beyond even the dreams of the most optimistic.

Even the water in their stocks and the bonuses in their bonds are turning into gold, and the false and the true are receiving dividends and interest cheques alike, and no one now questions their legality or legitimacy.

The railways have full employment for their facilities, their earnings are immense, their profits large and most satisfactory, and the companies will be able in the immediate future to make the extensions and install the betterments which the public service demands and which their own interests require.

The country is to be congratulated that irritation in the relations is at this time less than it has ever been since the beginning of railways, and it is to be hoped that no unreasonable demands either of the public or of the railways, will cause it to increase or inflame.

"Live and let live" is an excellent motto in all affairs of life, and there is no line of business in which it is more applicable than in the relations between the railways and the communities and people that maintain them.

The exports of 1916, judging from the unfilled orders on hand, will be far greater than in the year that has just closed, and on every hand there exists absolute confidence that this year will be the most prosperous one the people of this country has ever experienced.—Enquirer.

Prosperity in Cincinnati.

Statements given to the Times-Star by business men of Cincinnati indicate a present volume of business of large proportions. This business is actual. There is no longer a necessity for coloring the situation with a genial but somewhat fictitious optimism.

Bank clearings have increased. The demand for metal products is so great that deliveries can not be made in less than 60 to 120 days. More live stock has been killed than in any year for a generation. Bank deposits, including those of savings banks, are much heavier in amounts and in number of depositors. There are few idle skilled mechanics. The machine tool business is large. Dealers in food products are loaded with business. Dry goods jobbers report heavy gains. Lumber dealers, brokers, hardware dealers and many others recite the same pleasant tale.

The year 1916, therefore, opens with a pleasing prospect. What will happen after the war, nobody knows. But for the present we have a prosperity which if some what feverish, is still very real.—Times-Star, Editorial.

There is nothing better than a good liberal acreage of sorghum to help out or supplement the dry, short pastures, which are almost certain to come later in the season if it is not needed in soiling—feeding when green—it makes good silage or splendid dry roughage for late fall or winter feeding.

FARM POULTRY

CHEAP MIXTURE FOR VERMIN

Formula Given by Pennsylvania State College—Should Be Kept on Hand the Year Round.

While there are many ready-prepared lice mixtures on the market, none are more effective than a mixture recommended by Pennsylvania State college. It may be made at home and is cheap.

The formula is: Two and one-half pounds of plaster or paris, three-quarters of a pint of gasoline, one-fourth of a pint of crude carbolic acid. When the ingredients are mixed, one will have an effective lice powder that costs less than five cents a pound. The mixture should be worked through a fine sieve, to break up lumps and to get in such form that it will sift readily.

When it is first mixed it will be too wet to sift, but the gasoline will soon evaporate. The active principle in driving away the lice is the carbolic acid. To use the homemade preparation, which should be kept on hand the year around, one sifts it over the birds the same as any other lice powder.

RUNNER EXCELS AS FORAGER

Utility Fowl, Noted for Its Egg Production, Is Often Termed Leghorn of the Duck Family.

The Runner is a breed of small utility duck noted for its egg production and is often termed the Leghorn of the duck family. These ducks have been credited with records of more than 200 eggs each in flocks of ten, and 192 eggs each in flocks of 100.

Young Runner Ducks.

The "Runners" are active in their habits, are good foragers, and on an extensive run are able to find a large proportion of their food. They are nonsitters, are hardy and easily reared, but do not stand confinement well.

Their flesh is of a deep yellow color and is of fine quality, but their small size is rather against them for market purposes, except for broilers.

PULLETS FOR WINTER LAYERS

Advisable to Select Those That Have Grown Rapidly—Hen in Action Needs Lots of Room.

In selecting pullets for this winter's layers, it is advisable to choose those birds that have grown rapidly and well and those that show quality, as indicated by a soft, pliable skin over the breast bone and abdominal cavity. In addition to these two considerations quality is further indicated by the texture of the head parts. The comb and wattles should not only be well developed but should have a nice, smooth, velvety texture. A fourth consideration in selecting the prospective layer is that of capacity. A hen in action needs lots of room, that is to say, room for the digestive and reproductive organs. Such capacity is indicated by good width between the pelvic bones and also good width between these and the rear end of the keel.

Ration for Chicks.

A simple grain mixture in corn, wheat, and oats, a little more corn as the weather gets colder and less during the summer days. A little buckwheat and sunflower seed added to this mixture during fall and winter months is beneficial. Green foods, such as alfalfa, cabbage, sprouted oats or mangels should be fed freely. Fresh green cut bone or beef scraps and charcoal should also be supplied at all seasons of the year.

Litter for Duck Houses.

The best litter for duck houses is shavings, although sawdust will serve. Either is better than straw, which quickly becomes damp. It is necessary to have plenty of clean litter in the feeding houses both to keep the floor dry and to protect the eggs, which are not laid in nests, but dropped anywhere the ducks happen to be.

Gone to Happy Hunting Ground.

Chicago, Jan. 9.—Chief Ogallalla Fire, who fought with Sitting Bull in the Custer massacre, died at a hospital today. A week ago, apparently tired of life, he cut his throat and has been unconscious much of the time since. He was 90 years old.

Chief Ogallalla Fire was one of the Sioux Indian chiefs, who, with Sitting Bull, fought against the encroachments of the white settlers and who repeatedly gave battle to United States regulars.

He was severely wounded in the battle in which General Custer and his troops were slaughtered and bore the scars of that encounter to his death. Two bullet wounds and a sabre slash left him wounded on the field, and it was months before he was able to take part in other fights.

He was known as one of the bravest of the Indian chiefs who followed Sitting Bull, and the annals of Western Indian warfare have many tales of raids planned and executed by Chief Ogallalla Fire.

When peace came to the Sioux and Sitting Bull was a prisoner Ogallalla adopted less warlike pursuits, and, beginning with the Chicago World's Fair days, was one of the Wild West Show Indians. In his beads and war bonnet he traveled for more than 20 years with Wild West shows, visiting many cities in this country and crossing the ocean. More recently he played for motion pictures and his advanced age, he was then over eighty, seemed not to interfere with his activity.

Late in 1915 he became afflicted with his first illness, a tumor, which confined him to his bed. He had often suffered from wounds, but never from illness, and the inactivity and suffering prayed on him. The old chief wanted to die, and Sunday morning, January 2, 1916, he asked his granddaughter, Mrs. Little Bear, at whose home he lived, for a razor that he might shave. Not guessing his real purpose she complied, and soon after she had left his room Chief Ogallalla slashed his throat with the razor. Medical aid was summoned and the old Indian was hurried to a hospital, where the flow of blood was stanched and efforts were made to save his life.

On the hospital cot the aged Indian said, he did not like to talk of the days when we went on wars. "We did not understand the ways of the white man. We had to yield. It is not right for me to talk of the days when we went on warpath, because now it is not considered brave," said the old chief.

State News.

Approximately one million four hundred thousabd tons of flax straw are burned or permitted to go to waste each year on American farms. And at the same time the country is annually importing large quantities of flax waste from foreign countries for paper and board manufacture. The inconsistency of this situation has lead specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture to investigate the feasibility of using home grown straw in the paper and fiber industry.

One of the big expense bills that the farmer pays annually is for fence posts. If the twenty-five million posts required each year for Ohio's fences were set in line and spaced one rod apart, they would build a fence three times around the world at the equator; their cost would be four million dollars. Why not do it right and cut down the enormous expense? Build them of concrete, steel or other indestrustible materials and their first cost will be their last cost and even less than what good wood posts now bring.

In this issue appears Governor Stanley's message, which is the most business-like public document that has been issued in Kentucky either by an official or private citizen in many years. Gov. Stanley is not verbose and has the faculty of making plain his views on any important subject in a few words, which is a great accomplishment for one at the head of a government either State or national. In the message the affairs of State are constidered in the most intelligent manner, and the remedies suggested for the evils that have been suffered to creep in and prevail in the different departments of the state government are just and reasonable, and his demands for the correction of the extravagances to which the message calls attention cannot be criticised or scoffed at. Mr. Stanley has begun his career as Governor of Kentucky in a manner that challenges the admiration of all right-thinking people no matter what their politics, and he is entitled to the cooperation of all.

The supervisors of tax completed their investigation of the Assessor's work in 1915 and adjourned at noon last Saturday to meet again on the 17th of this month. They made a tentative raise of quite a number of lists, and during the adjournment those whose lists were raised will be notified of the fact that each may appear before the board when it meets again on the 17th and show cause if any he can why the increase in his list shall not stand. Nearly all the raises made were on lands along the pikes that have been constructed in several neighborhoods in this county in the last two or three years.

To overcome and correct the official delinquences with which it seems the Governor has found himself face to face, will require great skill as a statesman, while his pluck and determination must be unyielding, but he is endowed with these requisites, and has a large field in which to exercise them, and he can rest assured that the people are with him and wish him God speed in his great undertaking.

The Fall Dairy Calf.

Many dairymen follow the practice of having calves dropped during the fall months. In many respects it is an excellent one, but care must be taken with the calves that are to be reared for breeding purposes during the winter months.

Practical growing of dairy calves has shown that they can be as successfully grown on skimmed milk as on whole milk—provided the right method of feeding are followed. While milk does not need to be fed for more than two or three weeks; in fact, many successful dairy calf growers do not feed it more than a week or ten days. At the end of this period, the whole milk is gradually replaced by skim milk. A good plan is to begin with only one pound of skim milk in the whole milk, and by pounds increase the former until a full feed is being given.

By the time the calf is two or three weeks old it will begin to eat a little grain. Sometimes placing a few grains in its mouth after the milk is fed, will start it to eating grain more readily. Up to the age of three months it may well be given all the grain it will eat. After this age the amount may be limited.

A little hay will be eaten at almost as early an age as grain. Bright, clean clover or mixed hay is as good as any; for sometimes alfalfa hay, if of the best quality, will be eaten in sufficient quantities to cause impaction of the stomach and perhaps death. Silage may be safely fed as a part of the roughage.

If the dairy calves are properly fed during the coming winter, they will be ready to wean by the time the grazing season arrives next spring, and will make excellent growth on grass alone.

"Mud Roads and Low Taxes."

The Kansas City Times says that at every legislative session Kansas statesmen advocate mud roads and low taxes.

It will surprise many persons who have regarded the Kansas farmer as the progressive among American cultivators to hear that such sentiments are popular in rural Kansas. In a great many sections not so famously rich as agricultural Kansas the farmers are lively appreciators of the benefits of what the West calls "rock roads," and willing to pay increased taxes on land that has been advanced in value as a result of road improvement.

The Kansas farmer has been pretty widely pictured as a pluto crat riding in his automobile, and not in the cheapest type of automobile. Earth roads during winter and spring are soft and yielding in Kansas as elsewhere. They yield to pretty nearly everything but the efforts of a motorist to get over them at a fair cost and in safety. Does the far-famed Kansas wheat grower, who exchanges the product of a few of his ungrudging acres for a touring car, lay the gol-darned thing up for the winter and drive a mule six months in the year? Is it only in the good old summer time that he toots the horn and turns on the gasoline?

"Mud roads and low taxes" as the theme of a political oration should be laughed at in the remotest agricultural county in a State so well to do as Kansas.

It should be a matter of common knowledge that "low taxes" is a deceptive term. Nobody whose farm is on an earth road pays low taxes, all things considered. Everyone who is not upon the good roads map is taxed in many ways more heavily than the landowner whose property is assessed at a high value because it abuts upon a turnpike and provides emancipation from mire. Is it possible that there are Kansans who are unaware of the fact? If so the State needs "moonlight schools" for agriculturists.—Ex.

Show a Great Advance.

Retail sales in Cincinnati in six representative lines of business showed an average increase of 15 per cent in November, 1915, over November, 1914. This improved condition of business is revealed by the second annual merchandising research report of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World which has just been received.

Department store sales increased 11 per cent over 1914; grocery sales increased 16 per cent and jewelry sales increased 30 per cent. It is significant that the average increase in advertising was 22 per cent. The increase in jewelry sales is regarded as indicative of prosperous business conditions as people generally buy luxuries only when they are prosperous.

Cincinnati was selected by the research committee as one of the marketing centers of the United States and information obtained from local merchants is included in this comprehensive report.—Commercial Tribune.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

The message of Governor Stanley, which was sent to both Houses of the Legislature, follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:—

At this date there are outstanding due and unpaid interest-bearing warrants of this Commonwealth in the sum of $2,884 371,11, and bearing interest at the rate of five per cent It is true these obligations aggregate much less than the bonded indebtedness of many States; this, however, is not and cannot under the Constitution of Kentucky be made a bonded indebtedness Could it be funded at a low rate of interest and its payment distributed over an extended period, the General Assembly might find some excuse for postponing that strict and rigid economy now imperitively necessary Those in the public service have a right to expect prompt payment for services rendered, and that payment should be made in cash and not in a promise to pay Where these warrants bear a low rate of interest they are subject to a discount, and that discount is a burden upon those to whom they are payable, which they are under no obligation to bear If they bear such a high rate of interest as to render them readily convertible into cash, that rate of interest is an indefensible drain upon the revenues of the State If these warrants are allowed to accumulate in the future as they have in the past, one of two things will inevitably happen They will either be hawked about at a discount to the annoyance and deprivation of the citizens, or the interest rate will necessarily be increased to the further exhaustion of an already depleted public treasury Banks and other fiscal institutions are now exhausting the ingenuity of the astute and patriotic business men in charge of them in devising some plan to maintain these multiplying obligations at par It is therefore our peremptory obligation of all public servants, from the biggest to the lowest, to practice, for the time being at least, the most rigid economy in every department and in every detail of the public service in order that these obligations may be paid and in order that a material part of them may be retired without hesitation and without delay I know that this will require courage, patriotism and firmness on the part of the General Assembly You will be called upon to resist—to absolutely resist—the importunity of many good and patriotic people tireless and zealous in their desire to expend money which the State has not for all kinds and characters of projects in themselves most laudable

Those who propose additional appropriations should at least at the same time be able to suggest some method by which additional revenue necessary to meet such expenditure may be provided Additional appropriations under the circumstances, without an immediate and corresponding increase in taxation, are out of the question It is hard to conceive any new project, however laudable, which would justify the Legislature in inflating the present costly and in defensible method of floating the public debt

There is a certain expenditure—in the opinion of many an unwise and unnecessary expenditure—positively prohibited by an authority higher and more binding than the manifest obligation to economize in every department of the public service I refer to the employment of extra help, which will cost, if such a program is carried out, approximately $200 a day during the present session of the General Assembly Whether this help is advisable or necessary is not a matter left to the discretion of the House or Senate It is positively and equivocally prohibited by the express mandate of the Constitution of Kentucky Section 248 leaves in my mind, no room for doubt:

"The House of Representatives of the General Assembly shall not elect, appoint, employ, or pay for, exceeding one chief clerk, one assistant clerk, one enrolling clerk, one sergeant-at arms, one doorkeeper, one janitor, 2 cloakroom keepers and four pages; and the Senate shall not elect, appoint, employ, or pay for, exceeding one chief clerk, one assistant clerk, one enrolling clerk, one sergeantatarms, one doorkeeper, one janitor, one cloakroom keeper, and three pages; and the General Assembly shall provide by general law for fixing the per diem or salary of all said employes"

If construction of language so emphatic and explicit were necessary, it has been constructed by the Court of Appeals in the case of James Auditor, vs Cromwell, 129 Ky, page 513:

"It is urged that work of the character which was performed by appellee was absolutely necessary in order that the business of the Senate might be expeditously carried on This arlument would address itelf most forcibly to the Legislature as a reason why the Constitution should be amended so as to give the respective legislative bodies more employes than these designated in Section 248, if it should be found necessary to have such employes in order to properly conduct its business Such an argument, however, has no place, and cannot be considered here Again, it is urged that these services should be paid for as a contingent expense of the Senate We cannot agree with learned counsel that an employment of this character could be paid for as a contingent expense; for, if one copyist could be employed and paid, the number could be multiplied ad libitum, and the very purpose and aim of the constitutional provision defeated"

"Those only are worthy to write the law who respect the law, and the most sacred of all legislation is the organic act of creating, defining and restricting the powers of State and Federal governments The prime purpose of all constitutions is to set a limit inviolate and impassable upon legislators themselves Whenever the constitution is, in the opinion of the General Assembly or of the people who elect it, too binding or inadequate for the purpose for which it was ordained, that instrument provides the method and the only method by which it may be altered or any of its provisions abrogated It is your privilege, with the assent of the people, to amend it It is the privilege of no man, high or low, to ignore or to violate it Whenever the Constitution ceases to be revered and obeyed, civil government—the Republican form of government—ordained and established by the fathers, is no longer secure and cannot and will not long be maintained For that reason every officer from the highest to the lowest, is required before entering upon his duties, to take, in the presence of those who have entrusted him with authority, a solemn oath to obey and to maintain the Constitution of his country In the language of Judge Bennett, in Varney vs Justice, 86 Kentucky, page 600, its provisions are never directory, they are mandatory

The Constitution of the State was adopted by the people of the State as the fundamental law of the State This fundamental law was designed by the people adopting it to be restrictive upon the powers of the several departments of government created by it It was intended by the people that all departments of the State Government should shape their conduct by this fundamental law Its every section, was doubtless, regarded by the people adopting it as of vital importance and worthy to become a part and parcel of the constitutional form of government, by which the governments as well as the governed were to be governed Its every mandate was intended to be paramount authority to all persons holding official trusts, in whatever department of government, and to the sovereign people themselves No mere unessential matters were intended to be ingrafted in it; but each section and each article was solemnly weighed and considered and found to be essential to the form of constitutional government adopted Whenever the language used is prohibitory, it was intended to be a positive and unequivocal negation Whenever the language contains a grant of power, it was intended as a mandate Whenever the language gives a direction as to the manner of exercising a power, it was intended that the power should be exercised in the manner directed, and in no other manner It is an instrument of words, granting powers, restraining powers and reserving rights These words are fundamental words, meaning the thing itself; they breathe no spirit except the spirit to be found in them To say that these words are directory merely is to license a violation of the instrument every day and every hour To preserve the instrument inviolate, we must regard its words, except when expressly permissive, as mandatory, as breathing the spirit of command" I have every assurance that the General Assembly will render cheerful and reverent obedience to this plain provision of the Constitution and will employ during their deliberations only those persons explicitly authorized by the Constitution of the Commonwealth

The members of the party in control of both branches of the General Assembly have been instructed by their several constituencies to carry into effect certain reforms demanded, with unexampled emphasis and unanimity Those whom we represent confidently expect us to proceed with out delay and to complete as soon as it may be well and wisely done the enactment of legislation providing for—

(1) The abolition of, or such change in, our prison contract labor system as will make available to the State and to the several counties the labor of such convicts as may be safely worked out side of the penitentiaries in the construction of public roads and in the manufacture and production of road material

(2) To such an amendment to the present Textbook Commission law as to provide for the gradual change in the adoption of textbooks, when the change is deemed necessary, instead of changing the entire series at the end of any fixed or stipulated period, or in any one year

(3) For the establishment of a Bureau of Markets

(4) County, State and Federal officers are now elected by the direct vote of the people We are pledged to so amend our election laws to the end that every device by which the popular will is delayed or perverted may be eliminated and those guilty of fraud or corruption in such elections detected and punished

(5) The enactment of a more adequate and stringent anti-trust act

(6) To the increase of the powers of the Railroad Commission, vesting it with the authority to regulate other public utilities

(7) To the enactment of legislation compensating workmen for injuries received in the course of their employment just alike to the employer and the employe

(8) To the enactment of string ent anti-pass and antilobby acts

(9) To the enactment of a corrupt practices act

(10) To such a revision of our tax laws as to equitably distribute the burdens of taxation among the taxpayers of the State

The matters to which I have called your attention are all contained in the last platform of the Democratic party, a covenant entered into by duly accredited delegates without a dissenting voice Nominees of that party elected upon that platform are solemnly bound to carry into effect each and all of these covenants The whole contract is broken when any essential part of it is ignored Faith is not kept by a partial performance of such obligations, and the General Assembly will not and should not escape just criticism if it fails to carry out honestly and adequately the entire legislative program

These reforms, however, are suggested not by a single political organization, but by all parties and all factions, and demanded by all right thinking and forward looking men

The Republican and Independent parties are both committed to such legislation and one or both are now urging the passage of a corrupt practices act, an increase in the powers of your Railroad Commission, a revision of our taxing system, anti-pass and anti lobby legislation

If this is to be a free and representative government, in fact as well as in form, it is essential that candidates shall be nominated and elected by the corrupted choice of their fellow citizens The use of a candidate's own private fortune for the purpose of debauching the electorate or of perpetrating frauds in the casting or counting of ballots is bad enough; enormous corruption funds contributed by sinister interests for their own selfish aggrandizement is infinitely worse The people are determined to ascertain, and they have an unquestioned right to know, just what amounts are spent by candidates and by campaign committees for the purpose of controlling elections—to know and influence the slush fund comes and why it is paid and who receives it and who disburses it.

The purification of the ballot, the elimination of every semblance of fraud or corruption from our elections, is indeed a barren victory if after their election legislative agents expert in the nefarious art of deterring or deceiving those entrusted with the enactment or the execution of the laws are free to play upon the ambition, the cupidity ir the fear of public servants. No right thinking corporation will tender and no selfrespecting officer will accept any special favor at the hands of those seeking to influence lis official acts. Section 197 of the Constitution of 1891 provides:

"No railroad, steamboat or other common carrier, under heavy penalty to be fixed by the General Assembly, shall give a free pass or passes, or shall at reduced rates not common to the public sell tickets for transportation to any State, district, city town or county officer, and any member of the General Assembly, or Judge, who shall accept or use a free pass or passes, or shall receive or use tickets or transportation at reduced rates not common to the public shall forfeit his office. It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to enact laws to enforce the provisions of this section."

This provision is as binding upon those who respect the Constitution as if legislation had already been enacted, providing the severest provisions for its violation. Common carriers know that members of the General Assembly and other public officials must expend in the discharge of their official duties large sums of money for transportation, and when this is gratuitously provided they knowingly incur the loss of many thousands of dollars. If experience has not demonstrated that this apparent loss is in fact a profitable investment these carriers are guilty either of an inexcusable waste of the property of their stockholders or of placing an additional and unwarranted burden upon those thus compelled to pay their own fare and that of this privileged class as well. A public servant can repay this obligation only by so enacting, executing or interpreting the law as to favor his opulent and munificinet benefactor. Those interests would not have for a quarter of a century stubbornly, and I regret to say successfully, prevented the enactment of wholesome legislation carrying in to effect the wise and beneficent provisions of the Constitution of Kentucky if they had not believed—yes, if they had not known—that in many instances public officials did feel that they were placed under an obligation to generous carriers and did reward them by sacrificing the rights of the people in the interest of these concerns. Public officials are as a rule as well paid as the average farmer, farmer merchant, and can just as easily pay their own traveling expenses. It is gratifying to know that the public conscience is at last aroused and no political party can longer afford to condone or to tolerate this abuse.

The right of every interest, of every industry, of every individual to petition legislative assemblies for the redress of grievances or the enactment of remedial legislation is admitted. Those who go before such assemblies in behalf of the public or any laudable private enterprise court the widest publicity. The reputable attorney employed to discuss either the legality or the propriety of measures pending before the General Assembly makes no secret of his business, appearing as openly as in a court of justice. Those whose purposes are commendable, whose practices are clean, will not object to making known the nature and character of their mission, and those legislative agents who prefer darkness rather than light should be compelled to disclose just who employs them and what they are employed for, and to whom they propose to appeal. Public records should be prepared, and that as early as possible in the session of the General Assembly, one in which attorneys, appearing before this body as retained counsel, may register in the other the name of the legislative agent and his employer should be enrolled. Such records should recite in full and in detail just what interests the legislative agent represents and in just what legislation he is interested. The heaviest pains and penalties permissible under the Constitution of this Commonwealth and of the U. S. should be inflicted upon those who attempt by secret and personal solicitation to deceive or debauch the representatives of the people by crude bribery or by insidious promises of future preferment or by aid in the political designs of the aspiring. It is not necessary that I should recount the immediate necessity for drastic legislation upon this subject. The insolent activities of the legislative agent, the professional lobbyist and the known corruption ist are too recent to require further reference or review.

I have confined this message to an earnest insistence upon the immediate fulfillment of platform pledges. In the near future I shall call your attention to the condition of our penal and eleemosynary institutions and to other matters demanding the attention of the General Assembly.

Respectfully submitted,
A. O. STANLEY,
Governor of Kentucky.
January 4, 1916.

A strange yellow Shepherd dog, which recent developments prove had hydrophobia, appeared in the Pleasant Valley neighborhood, where it was seen at several places on the 31st of last month. This dog was in Perry Barlow's sheep pasture that night and bit several of his sheep, about 12 or 15 of which have developed hydrophobia and had to be killed. Mr. Barlow knew several of his sheep were badly mangled about the jaws and neck, but suspected no such results as those with which he has had to contend during the past week. Other dogs in the neighborhood are known to have been bitten, and Mrs. Border's to whose house the dog came had a narrow escape from a serious experience with the rabid animal, which, in attempting to bite her, punctured her shoe with its teeth, when she kicked at it, but fortunately the skin on her foot was not broken. It seems that the dog made a house to house canvass of the neighborhood, and it is feared it bit considerable stock and several dogs, consequent ly there is considerable uneasiness on the part of the inhabitants of Pleasant Valley neighborhood. The dog was killed at Florence, where, upon its appearance, its condition was at once realized.

Last Saturday Mr. Barlow called on county judge Cason to have appraisers appointed to fix the value of the sheep he has lost and will lose because of the raiding of his flock by the rabid dog.

Always let your wife have her own way; it will save her having it anyway.

Local Happenings.

Spring moving will begin again pretty soon.

Now is a good time to begin testing your seed corn.

Have had considerable gloomy weather so far this month.

The rural mail carriers are surly earning their salary now.

So far this winter has not been very partial to the coal dealers.

There has been no complaint of meat that was butchered this season spoiling.

The first sleigh bells of the season came out last Saturday. They were not very numerous.

It now looks like the early months of 1916 will furnish a period of old time bad dirt roads.

The snow took its leave Sunday night in short order. It went without the assistance of rain.

W. L. Kirkpatrick has leased for three years the Pon Carpenter farm at the forks of Woolper creek.

There has been some fine weather the past week for handling tobacco and preparing it for the market.

The General Assembly was supposed to get down to business in a business-like manner, last Monday.

The back water from the Ohio river has given rural mail carriers considerable trouble so far this month.

The local skaters had some fine sport last Sunday morning, but in the afternoon the ice became too rotten for safety.

It is generally conceded that business is pretty brisk the country over and a very prosperous year is anticipated.

The Sunday lid proposition is slow of adjustment in Covington. It is one that few officials in large cities care to tackle.

A horse did not travel far last Saturday morning before it was covered with frost. The mercury was down to nine that morning.

What has become of the old time man whom a severe cold spell or deep snow always caught with his supply of fuel exhausted?

The examination for Common School Graduates will be held in Burlington and Petersburg Jan. 28-29, the last Friday and Saturday of January.

Ira Ryle, of Commissary neighborhood, sold his tobacco to Pepper Smith, of Belleview, at $10.00 around. Mr. Smith has bought pretty liberally of last year's crop.

The sneak thieves have been operating in Newport and the surrounding neighborhood for the past few months, with the result that people are afraid to leave their homes.

Dogs raided J. W. Conner's flock of sheep in his pasture near Union, one night last week, and killed three or four of them. The dogs beloned to his nearest neighbors and were killed.

Roosevelt has them guessing again, but it is generally believed that he will compel the Republicans to nominate him as their candidate for President or permit him to name the candidate.

The North Kentucky Fair Company is ready to issue certificates of stock, and you can obtain your certificate by informing Edgar C. Riley or Hubert Conner how many shares of the stock you hold.

The attendance at the Baptist Sunday school last Sunday was exactly the same number as on the corresponding Sunday last year, but the collection was a few cents short of that a year ago.

Limaburg headed the list last Saturday morning in the matter of cold weather, the thermometer registering four below zero. You can not beat Limaburg inthis matter of leading the procession on all occasions.

The local Knights of Pythias lodge meeting last Saturday night was attended by a large number of the members. After the meeting a bountiful supper of oyster soup and trimmings were enjoyed at the lodge room.

Owing to recent matrimonial events and according to the dope that is now being handed out when the time comes to employ teachers for schools again in this county the ranks of the female teachers will be considerably depleted.

Cecil Gaines has resigned as cashier of the Citizens bank at Erlanger and his successor will be Chester Davis, a gentleman who has had considerable experience in the banking business. Mr. Gaines gave up the position on account of poor health.

Of ordinary farm implements the sulky plow has the shortest life in years but ranks second only to the walking plow in total days of service rendered. Its life is a little over eight years, while its total of days' work is 119, as compared with 11¼ years and 221 days for the walking plow.

Not For the Dixie Highway Alone

Boone county, Ky., just across the Ohio from this city will vote May 8th to issue $200,000 for Dixie highway bonds.—Lawrenceburg Register

Not on your life, my brother Boone county will never vote that amount of money to be spent on the Dixie Highway or anyother single highway An effort is being made to secure sufficient signatures to a petition to authorize the fiscal court of this county to call an election to take a vote on the proposition to issue $200,000 bonds for road purposes—general road purposes that is, and that part of the Covington and Lexington pike which lies in Boone county and is a prospective section of the Dixie Highway will receive only its proportional part of the proceeds of the bonds if the proposition carries, and the amount will be based on the importance the road bears to Boone county and no other section of country The opposition to the bond issue is making capital of the Dixie Highway by claiming that the proceeds of the bonds are to be used for the benefit of that road to the exclusion of other roads in the county, and until that erroneous impression is removed the effort to have the bond issue carried will make very good progress By referring to the order of the fiscal court published in this paper last week it will be seen what the road policy of the fiscal court will be in the event the bond issue carries, and that is the court which has the appropriation of the money, and it has proven itself capable of dealing fair with the various sections of the county on the road question

Assistant State Inspector.

Mr. Alvin Steger, retiring Circuit Clerk of Owen has been appointed as Assistant State Inspector and Examiner under Nat Sewell, of London, who was appointed Saturday by Gov. Stanley. Mr. Steger is a fine fellow and we are sure he will make many friends while in the Capital city. "Luck to you, Al."—Owen County Democrat.

Mr. Steger has a host of friends in this county who are glad to hear that he has been given a good position, and are satisfied he will make good therein.

Delinquent Tax List.

In this issue appears the sheriff's delinquent tax list which is very small. Not many years ago the list run up into the hundreds and was a burden to the officer, but owing to the limited number that now become delinquent he does not lose much sleep on account thereof and thru the medium of the advertisement and sale his loss on account of delinquents is insignificant.

Keep Up the Good Work.

The renewal of subscriptions so far this year has been very gratifying at this office, and it is hoped the good work will continue until every one on the list is paid up well along into the year 1916. There are some whom it is feared will have to be dropped from the mailing list but not many. Look at the label on your paper and then renew as it shows should be done.

Shot In the Face.

While autoing in Florida, recently, Robert, son of Judge John M. Lassing was shot in the face by a small boy who took a crack at him and his partner with a shot gun. He received several shot in his face, one very close to one of his eyes. His injury was such that he could drive the car no further and his companion had to take charge of it and hasten back to town.

The Market was not Encouraging

Albert Conner was on the tobacco market in Cincinnati last Thursday, and he discovered nothing that was encouraging to county dealers The rural buyers are up in the air and are inclined to buy at very conservative prices, while the growers think the indications are that they will receive a very good price for their crops

Busy Collecting Pelts.

The local fur dealer is pretty active now and is collecting a great many pelts. The trappers bring into this county a good sized roll of money every winter and the business appears to be growing year by year, and it will not be long until the land owners will look upon it as a source of revenue to which they are entitled.

Special Services.!

There will be held, Sunday, Jan. 16th, at the Richwood Presbyterian church a special service in which the recent improvements will be dedicated. Special music will be had. All the members of the church and congregation are urged to be present. Everyone is invited to come. S. G. Hill, Minister.

DRESSING WOUNDS OF TREES

Experiments Conducted by New York Station Show That Dressings Used Are Often Injurious.

Experiments were started by the New York Station in 1911 and conducted for four years to determine whether any coverings are necessary for wounds of trees, as well as the effect on the trees of various substances used in treating wounds. The trees used in the experiments were apples and peaches and the substances used as coverings were white lead, white zinc, yellow ocher, coal tar, shellac and avenarius carbolineum. The dressings were applied when the pruning was done at different seasons of the year and upon wounds of various ages.

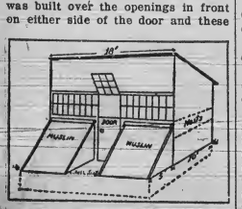
From the results of this experiment as a whole it is concluded that the dressings commonly applied to pruning wounds retard rather than accelerate the healing of the wounds. The effects are the same whether the dressings are applied when the wounds are made or some weeks later when the cut surface has dried out. The effects of the dressings used are so injurious to peach wood that wounds on peach trees should never be covered. For sprayed orchards at least it appears unnecessary to apply dressings to wounds under four or five inches in diameter to prevent the entrance of fungi. It remains to be proved whether dressings have any real value in covering large wounds. The injury caused by dressings probably offsets or even overbalances any possible protection against decay.

Of the materials used shellac was the least injurious and seemed to exert a stimulating influence upon the wound for the first season. Of the protective substances used white lead is considered to be the best.

CHECK ON ROTTING POTATOES

Thousands of Bushels of Tubers May Be Saved by Application of Slaked or Hydrated Lime.

From many places comes complaint of potato rotting. It seems not generally understood that by the proper application of slaked, or, hydrated lime, this rotting can be checked and thereby thousands of bushels saved. It is, however, generally understood that potatoes should never be stored in a place too damp to allow what earth adheres to them to dry and rub off.



Having them first well dried and all rotten ones thrown out and those besmeared carefully wiped dry, they may be put into bushel baskets, a handful or about a pint of lime poured upon them, the basket shaken until the lime has penetrated every crevice of its contents. They may now be placed on small piles to remain there until the final sorting. Ordinarily at this final sorting it will be found that some have taken a dry rot which does those lying against them no harm. The drying up is due to the action of the lime.

The writer has for many years used lime in some way or another and always with good results. The question will no doubt be asked, "What amount of lime can be used without injury to the potatoes?" The writer's answer is, "I don't know, that depends upon how wet the potatoes are."

SCRATCHERS IN A BASEMENT

Plenty of Sunlight Afforded Fowls While Hunting Through Litter—Muslin Used for Cover.

I have a basement three and one-half feet deep in my poultryhouse where the birds get plenty of sunlight while scratching. We keep about eight inches of straw in this basement. The house is 10 by 18 feet in size, but the basement extends five feet in front. A frame was built over the openings in front on either side of the door and these were covered with muslin. At the top a strip of oilcloth on a roller is provided for each side, to be unrolled in case of storm or rain, writes A. A. Neufeld of Inman, Kan., in Farmers' Mail and Breeze. The north side of the house is four feet high and the south side seven feet high.

In the morning we scatter wheat in the straw, at noon the hens have corn, bran and mash with a little salt and red pepper, and at night whole corn. They have all the grit, green stuff and oyster shells they want to eat and rabbit twice a week.

Thirty Sheep Breeds.

No system of sheep farming is likely to be long successful which leaves out of account either wool or mutton. In all there are 50 breeds of improved sheep that have been brought to fixed types. Of these, 12 are already well established in the United States, and others are gaining in popularity.

Winter House for Hogs.

IMPROVING THE POST-ROADS

Four Hundred and Sixty-Five Miles of Experimental Highways Are Now Under Construction.

Four hundred and sixty-five miles of experimental post-roads of different types, benefiting 28 different counties, are now under construction in 13 states, which are co-operating with the federal government. These roads, which are being built under the supervision of the department, are authorized by the act of congress of August 24, 1912, which appropriated for the post-road department $500,000, to be expended in an experiment to test out the value of improved rural-carrier routes. The federal government pays one-third and the state or county benefited must defray two-thirds of the cost. The entire sum of $500,000 of federal funds and $1,000,000 of local funds will be expended under the supervision and checking of federal highway engineers.

The following work on post-road improvement has been undertaken, according to a bulletin dealing with the construction and maintenance of roads and bridges, issued by the department:

Lauderdale county, Alabama, 30 miles of earth road.

Boone and Story counties, Iowa, 51 miles of earth road.

Dubuque county, Iowa, 20 miles of gravel road.

Bath and Montgomery counties, Kentucky, 11 miles of macadam road.

Montgomery county, Maryland, 5.4 miles of macadam road.

Cumberland county, Maine, 21 miles of bituminous macadam road.

Leflore county, Mississippi, 24 miles of gravel road.

McDowell county, North Carolina, 16 miles of earth road.

Davie, Forsyth and Iredell counties, North Carolina, 48 miles of sand-clay and top-soil road.

Licking and Muskingum counties, Ohio, 24 miles of concrete road.

Jackson county, Oregon, 51.4 miles of earth road.

Aiken county, South Carolina, 27.3 miles of sand-clay and top-soil road.

Loudon county, Tennessee, 6.4 miles of macadam road.

Montgomery county, Tennessee, 7.6 miles of macadam road.

Bexar, Comal, Aravis, Hays and Guadalupe counties, Texas, 71.6 miles of gravel road.

Fairfax county, Virginia, 12.3 miles of gravel road.

Spotsylvania, Caroline and Hanover counties, Virginia, 38.2 miles of sand-clay and top-soil road.

As rapidly as these roads are constructed the department is endeavoring to interest the local authorities in inaugurating systematic maintenance to keep them in condition. The county engineer has undertaken the maintenance of the Virginia post-road in Spotsylvania county, and another will supervise the upkeep of the completed part of the Ohio post-road. It is believed that this local maintenance system will be extended to the post-roads to be built in Maine, Tennessee, Texas and Alabama.

Bulletin on Roads.

The United States department of Agriculture bulletin, No. 220, is upon the subject of roads, and it is well worth reading. It tells of Roman roads, French roads, and treats not only of road surfacing, but of road grading and foundations for roads. Send for it, it's free.

Keep Roadsides Clean.

Roadsides and fence rows free of weeds, rank grass and rubbish, are not only pleasing in appearance, but injurious crop pests cannot start housekeeping in such places. Neither is there a chance for noxious weeds to mature or dangerous plant diseases to start on clean roadsides.

Greatest Single Factor.

The greatest single factor in national economics is transportation, and the greatest single factor in economical transportation is good roads.

CARING FOR LITTLE CALVES

No Good Results Can Be Secured From Half-Starved, Stunted Animal—Keep Them Growing.

(By N. A. BRONSON.)

Everybody has a way of doing things and this is my way of taking care of the calves.

I have ten good cows which I raised myself, and I found out that to raise good cows you must begin at the beginning. No good results will come from a half-starved, stunted calf.

I let the calf suck the cow the first two days. It is better for it and the mother, too, and the calf is more apt to get all the milk than I would be, thus getting it out of the cow's bag and into the calf's stomach, where it should be, with less trouble and better results.

At the end of this time I milk the cow and feed the calf; tie the calf where it cannot see its mother, and if the weather is cold I wrap something around it when the barn doors are open. Never allow a calf to shiver if you want it to keep well.

For the first two weeks I feed new milk as soon as milked, and then I begin to mix in separated milk by degrees, adding at first a third, then a half and when a mopth old I give all separated and take care to have it warm.

Buckwheat shorts and bran are good, but never put them in the milk. Have a small box nailed in a convenient place on the manger or side of the wall and fill with dry feed. The calf will soon learn to help itself.

When six weeks old put clover hay within reach; this will aid the digestion and increase growth.

If eggs are plenty break one or two in the milk, and you will be surprised at its sleekness.

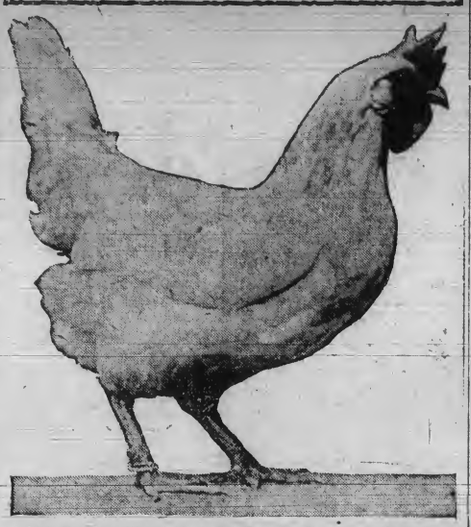
TESTS OF MILK PRODUCTION

Cost of Feed Must Be Considered in Determining Value of Cow—Fat Content Is Factor.

You cannot tell by the test alone the value of a cow. It depends as much on the amount of milk she gives as on the test of the milk. A cow that gives 10,000 pounds of three per cent milk produces 300 pounds of butterfat and a cow that produces 6,000 pounds of five per cent milk gives no more; one will produce as many pounds of butter in a year as the other, and inasmuch as the fat content of milk is a fair indication of the other milk solids present, then the 10,000 pounds of three per cent milk is worth more for food than the 6,000 of five per cent milk. Therefore one cow is as valuable as the other from a business standpoint, provided it did not cost any more to keep one cow than another. This third factor must therefore be considered in determining the value of any cow—the cost of production.

SILAGE REDUCES FEED COST

Kansas Station Conducts Test on Production of Butterfat During Summer and Winter.



An experiment conducted at the Kansas experiment station shows that silage reduces the cost of producing butterfat from 30 cents to 21 cents.

The herds in this case were of sufficient size to give reliable data and eliminate the difference that might occur between two cows.

The lot which were fed silage gave seven pounds more milk in the summer and 95.5 more in winter per month than the herd which were fed dry feed. The butterfat was increased by .46 in summer and 4.6 in winter. The difference in the cost of feed was even greater.

The silage-fed cows saved 60 cents per month in the cost of feed.

WHITE LEGHORN VALUED AT $100,000

Lady Eglantine, Who Holds World's Record of 314 Eggs in 365 Days.

(By E. VAN BENTHUYSEN.)

Lady Eglantine, the first hen to make a journey, alive, in a parlor car, arrived in New York to open the Poultry, Song Bird, Cat and Pet Stock show at the Grand Central Palace.

There is nothing about this bird to distinguish her from other White Leghorns, and she is as modest a world's title holder as if she had not laid one of the 314 eggs that she deposited to her credit in 365 days.

Lady Eglantine was hatched at Greensboro, Md., April 15, 1914, on the Eglantine farms, run by Mr. A. A. Christian. She was one of five single-comb White Leghorns placed in a pen at the egg-laying competition on the grounds of the Delaware agricultural experiment station at Newark, Del., from November 1, 1914, to October 31, 1915. In this time she made her record. She is black-eyed, 14 inches high and weighs four pounds. She has a perfect figure.

All sorts of money has been offered Mr. Christian for the bird, but he absolutely refuses to part with the hen.

On her arrival in New York she was met by a bunch of newspaper men, photographers and movie men, all anxious to get a peek at the champion layer. She was lifted into an automobile and hurried to the Imperial hotel and placed in a coop decorated with American flags, with floral offerings near by. After a few minutes rest she was taken in her motor to the Palace, where she remained until the show closed.

HAVE WATER VESSELS CLEAN

Unless Proper Attention Is Given Filth Is Scratched Into Troughs, Encouraging Disease.

How would you relish your favorite "tope"—coffee, tea or milk—from a teacup or glass which remained on the table for a week at a stretch without washing? Bitter, acrid, slimy, greasy, you say? What about the poultry drinking vessels that are strangers to cleaning for a much longer period than a week?

Not only does the drinking fluid become putrid with decaying food particles from the birds' beaks, but manure and filth are scratched into the vessels and germs of disease multiply in inconceivable numbers. Clean food and clean drink are half the battle against poultry diseases.

Don't force your fowls to drink from a vessel unless you would be willing to drink from it yourself.

Regularly and Properly.

There is no need of a very complicated system of feeding poultry, but what is done should be done regularly and properly.

BEST GRAIN FOR FATTENING

Oats Finely Ground or With Coarser Hulls Sifted Out Should Form Basis of All Mixtures.

A satisfactory fattening ration is one that is palatable and that will produce a white-colored flesh. Oats, finely ground or with the coarser hulls sifted out, have proved the best grain for fattening and should form the basis of all the grain mixtures. The most suitable meals for fattening are: ground oats, buckwheat, barley and low-grade flour.

Satisfactory fattening rations:

(1) Finely ground oats.

(2) Two parts finely ground oats, one part fine shorts.

(3) Two parts finely ground oats, one part ground barley, one part fine shorts.

(4) Two parts finely ground oats, one part fine shorts, one part low-grade flour.

(5) Equal parts ground oats, barley, fine shorts and low-grade flour.

The meal should be mixed to a thin porridge with sour milk, skim milk or buttermilk. On the average 10 pounds of meal require from 12 to 15 pounds of milk.

When sufficient skim milk or buttermilk cannot be obtained for mixing the mashes, a quantity of meat meal, blood meal or beef scraps and raw vegetables should be added to the fattening ration. A good proportion is one part of the meat meal to 15 of oatmeal.

The birds should remain in the fattening crates for a period not exceeding 24 days. Some birds will fatten more readily than others and should, therefore, be removed from the crate and killed as soon as they are ready.

Charcoal for Chickens.

A box of charcoal should be kept where the chickens can get at it.

DUCKS RELISH BULKY RATION

Food, When It Reaches Gizzard, Must Be in Soft State—Whole Grain Is Not Recommended.

Ducks at all times require a bulky ration. They have no crop like chickens, the food passing directly to the gizzard. The food when it reaches the gizzard must be in a soft state. For this reason the feeding of much whole grain will prove injurious to ducks. A good winter ration is the following: Equal parts of wheat bran, cornmeal and green food, 5 per cent beef scrap and 5 per cent sand. The mash for ducks must be made thin and sloppy. Any kind of green food will do—cabbage, potatoes, turnips, beets, etc. Lacking a supply of these, cut clover or cut alfalfa, steamed and mixed with the mash, will do as well. Ducks should be fed three times a day. As the breeding season approaches the quantity of cornmeal and beef scrap in the ration should be doubled.

Ducks require little in the way of housing. A shed, open toward the south, but with north, east and west sides closed, is all that is required. The only part of the duck that is sensitive to cold is its feet. In order to protect its feet from freezing weather, the floor of the shed should be well bedded with straw. The litter in duck pens soon becomes damp and filthy and should be renewed frequently. If allowed to sleep on damp litter or in damp quarters, ducks will likely contract rheumatism.

Ducks may be permitted to range about the place except when the ground is covered with snow.

Cull the Males Closely.

Again, if not already done, cull the males closely, and after selecting those needed for breeding pens, dispose of the others. It does not pay to keep them.

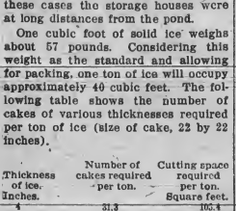
COST OF HARVESTING AND STORING ICE

An Ice Plow With Guide Gauge.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)



Under certain conditions natural ice may be cut by the farmer at a price as low as one cent for a cake of 220 pounds, making the ice cost, exclusive of hauling and packing, 9 cents a ton. The usual price, however, it has been found by the dairy division of the United States department of agriculture averages about 2 cents a cake, or 18 cents a ton. In some instances the original cost of the ice and the packing amount to $2 a ton, but in these cases the storage houses were at long distances from the pond.

One cubic foot of solid ice weighs about 57 pounds. Considering this weight as the standard and allowing for packing, one ton of ice will occupy approximately 40 cubic feet. The following table shows the number of cakes of various thicknesses required per ton of ice (size of cake, 22 by 22 inches).

Thickness of ice. Inches.	Number of cakes required per ton.	Cutting space required per ton. Square feet.
6	20.9	70.2
8	15.6	52.6
10	12.5	42.1
12	10.4	35.1
14	8.9	30.1
16	7.8	26.3
18	6.9	23.4

In compiling the foregoing table square cakes 22 by 22 inches were used merely because the investigators found that the majority of farmers were storing cakes of that size.

Farmers who have a comparatively small quantity of ice to harvest will find that they need for equipment only two saws, two ice tongs, two ice hooks, and a pointed bar. Many farmers have found it very profitable to cooperate with three or four neighbors in filling their icehouses. In such instances each individual may use his own tools, or the complete outfit may belong to a co-operative association.

In marking the ice, a long plank may be used as a straightedge, or it may be used to guide the handsaw. The advisability of cutting square or oblong cakes must be decided by the harvester.

After the ice cakes are broken apart, two men with ice tongs can pull with little difficulty a cake of ice from the water and load it on a wagon or sled. If desired, a slide and a table platform may be used and a horse employed for drawing the cakes from the water on to the platform, from which they may be easily loaded.

Before building an icehouse of any kind, the quantity of ice to be stored should be determined. The quantity needed for cooling purposes necessarily will vary according to the local conditions and cannot be definitely stated in all cases, though it may be calculated approximately. After studying the conditions on a large number of farms and obtaining figures regarding the amount of ice used for cooling and keeping milk and cream in a sweet condition for from one to four days, the following facts were established:

(1) Ice water tanks were in general use for cooling milk and cream.

(2) The quantity of milk or cream cooled in this manner varied in individual cases from 21 pounds to 336 pounds a day.

(3) The temperature of the milk and cream held in such tanks averaged about 40 degrees F.

(4) In each case a cake of ice was found floating in the water; this showed that there was a constant supply of ice in the tank.

(5) A total of 5,142 pounds of cream required approximately 6,020 pounds of ice daily, or an average of 1.16 pounds of ice per pound of cream to cool and hold until delivered.

These figures were obtained from actual conditions and covered a period of six weeks, in which the temperature outdoors varied from 50 to 100 degrees F.

Owing to the different conditions under which ice is handled, the location of the buildings in reference to protection and the quantity of ice packed, it is not surprising to note a largo variation in shrinkage. In an examination of more than 100 farmers' icehouses the shrinkage was found to vary from 20 to 50 per cent, with an average of 27 per cent.

HOGS RUNNING IN ORCHARD

Unless Animals Are Well Ringed They Will Do Much Damage by Exposing Roots of Trees.

Much is said and written nowadays concerning the disease and insect pests affecting the orchard. While many orchards are quite rapidly approaching extinction for one cause or another, there is one cause that is seldom mentioned, as it appears to be generally overlooked. That is the continual pasturing of the orchards by hogs.

Formerly it was the practice of professional fruit growers to allow their swine free and untrammeled range in the orchard. In fact, some raised hogs for this purpose, rather than any possible profit to be derived from pork production, believing that the rooting and tearing that the hogs are capable of doing would be beneficial in the way of cultivating and mulching the trees, and destroying injurious insects. However, most of them have discovered that although the hogs destroy many harmful insects, the good done in this way, unless the hogs are well ringed, is many times overbalanced by the damage done to the trees in tearing up and exposing the roots to the weather. The little rootlets are very palatable and nutritious and as good as a grain ration. They make a splendid change of diet for the hog, but are rathor expensive feed.

The time has come when science has developed to such an extent that the hog is no longer needed in orchard management. In this day the posted fruit grower can overcome or at least largely prevent the ravages of orchard pests and flies. The time has long arrived when there is no money in trying to grow fruit without giving particular attention to these features. All fruit growers, whether specialists or general farmers, should post themselves and koep abreast of the procession. They will lose money by getting behind.

SALT A VALUABLE SEASONING

Stimulates Appetite of Hogs and Appears to Improve Taste—Animals Relish Charred Cobs.

It has been determined that salt is a valuable seasoning for the feed of hogs, though only a limited amount is required. It acts as a stimulater of the appetite and appears to improve the taste of the animal, just the same as it does a human being. It aids in digestion and in general increases the energy of the vital process and is greatly relished.

When charred cobs are fed to pigs they appreciate them much more when then are sprinkled with salt. If you feed a slop ration it should have a little seasoning of salt in it. The effects of a mild seasoning of salt in the food are beneficial as a tonic and general aid to good condition. However, be careful not to overdo it.

ROTATION IN SEVERE CASES

Soil-Producing Crop of Smutted Wheat This Year May Harbor Spores for Next Season.

Recent experiments have shown that in certain sections of the country the soil of a field producing a crop of smutted wheat this year may harbor enough smut spores to cause the appearance of smut in next year's crop if the field be reseeded to wheat.

This sometimes occurs, where smut is very bad, in spite of the planting of treated seed, and shows that in such localities crop rotation should be practiced in addition to seed treatment.

Bunt or covered smut of wheat attacks no other cereal crop, but other cereals have their own smut diseases.

Two Sows in One Pen.

Not more than two breeding sows should be kept in one pen, and then care should be had that they agree perfectly.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

It is a common remark, confirmed by history and experience, that great men rise with the circumstances in which they are placed.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

A pretty custard to serve as a company dish is prepared thus: Use three eggs to a pint of rich milk, reserving one white from the three. Into the bottom of each custard cup drop a small bit of jelly, pour in the custard and when baked garnish the top with the white of egg and color with some of the jelly.

Coffee Junket.—To a pint and a half of milk add a cupful of strong coffee infusion. Sweeten to taste and add a junket tablet dissolved in a tablespoonful of the coffee. Pour into sherbet cups and serve with whipped cream when the junket is firm.

Veal Loaf.—Boil a pound of lean veal in water to cover. When done take out the meat and simmer the stock until reduced to a half cupful. Add this, with salt, celery salt, grated peel of a lemon and juice of half, to the chopped veal and a tablespoonful of ham. Mold and place a weight on the dish. The next day it may be turned out and sliced. Garnish with lemon and parsley.

Pineapple Filling for Cake.—To a can of grated pineapple add a half cupful of flour, mixed with a little water, one-half cupful of sugar; if too sweet, less sugar; cook until smooth and thick, and cool before using for filling. This may be made the day before using.

Salmon Salad.—To a can of salmon add one cupful of cucumber pickles, one and a half cupfuls of water crackers, crushed fine; mix well and moisten with salad dressing. The pickles should be chopped.

Prune Flip.—Take thirty prunes, a half cupful of chopped nuts, the whites of four eggs, four tablespoonfuls of sugar. Stew the prunes until soft, chop with a half-cupful of walnuts, add sugar and fold in the beaten whites. Bake in a buttered pan set in hot water. Serve with cream.

Strawberry Shortcake.—To a quart of flour add two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a half teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, and sift well. Cut in three tablespoonfuls of shortening and add milk to make a soft dough. Bake in two layers with butter between, then the cake can be easily split; add butter when baked and cover with crushed berrics. Serve with whipped cream.

The KITCHEN CABINET

Many an unpleasant thing needs to be done in a pleasant way. A word of correction or criticism, or of suggested improvement can be made as a slap in the face or as a hearty grip of the hand. Let us try to have our criticism spoken with the heartening, smiling word that leaves the corrected one with his own self-respect unhurt and anxious to do better.

SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS.

Make a rich biscuit dough, cut it into pieces of even size and roll each piece out thin. Spread with thinly sliced peaches, sprinkle well with sugar, add several small bits of butter to each portion and roll up and pinch the ends together. Place in a deep pan, add a cupful of sugar and a half-cupful of butter to each four rolls, pour in hot water to just cover the bottom of the pan and bake in a hot oven for half an hour. Add more water if needed.

Cherry Dumplings. — Remove the fiber from a half-cupful of suet, and chop fine. Mix with it two cupfuls of flour, salt and cold water to make a dough mixture. Roll out about an inch thick and cover the surface well with pitted cherries. Dust with sugar, roll and tie in a cloth, place in boiling water and cook two hours. Serve with a hard sauce.

Strawberry Toast. — Have ready some slices of buttered toast. Mix well two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch and a cup of sugar. Put the mixture slowly into a cupful of boiling water, stirring constantly. Cook in a double boiler until thick and clear, boil down to one cupful, add a quarter of a cupful of orange juice and remove from the fire. Stir in gently a cupful of ripe berries. Pour over the toast and serve immediately.

Strawberry Pudding.—Rub into two cupfuls of flour two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one cupful of sweet milk, one egg, a half-cupful of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a half-teaspoonful of soda, and the last thing fold in a cupful of berries. Steam in cups for a half-hour. Serve with whipped cream or a sauce made of two cupfuls of powdered sugar, two cupfuls of mashed berries, an egg white and a half-cupful of butter creamed with the sugar.

Pineapple grated and sweetened with a sugar sirup served on angel food, makes a most acceptable and dainty dessert on a hot day.

Our Weather Man.

Ezra Popham, of Erlanger, who keeps tab on the weather, sends the Recorder a copy of his record for the year 1915, and is as follows:

Rain fell on 146 days; snow on 48 days; rain fall 42½ inches; snow fall, 20 inches; coldest day, January 20; warmest two days July 21 and 22; first snow last fall October 8th.

Mr. Popham has kept carefully a record of his weather observations since 1892, and the storm on the night of July the 7th last, was the worst local storm noted in his weather diary.

Robert Logan Gaines, son of Mr. and Mrs. P. B. Gaines, of near this city, and Miss Mary Honaker, daughter of P. J. Honaker and wife of Henry county, were married by Rev. T. W. Croxton on New Year's day at the home of the brid e in Port Royal. Logan Gaines, as he is best known, is a fine young man, popular with everybody, and a chip off of the old block, his father being the best hustler in Carroll county, having probably larger business interests than any other one man, and with all of it, clever, accommodating and honorable. We know no one who has more friends than P. B. Gaines, and young Logan bids fair to take his father's place. P. J. Honaker is a merchant in Henry county and one of its wealthiest residents and his daughter is said to be a most attractive lady. The Democrat congratulates both bride and groom.—Carrollton Democrat.

WALTON DEPARTMENT.

D. B. WALLACE, Manager.

Hand your news items to Mr. D. B. Wallace at the Walton Equitable Bank and Trust Co.'s building. He is also authorized to receive subscriptions and collect other accounts.

The following ladies and gentlemen attended the dance at the Miss Sue Wolfe has been quite ill the past week, being confined to her bed.

A. C. Roberts, Ross Chapman and C. C. Kennedy of Verona, were here Saturday on business.

Chas. Stafford of Glencoe, spent Wednesday here purchasing building material to improve his property.

Geo. W. Winters and Joseph Neihaus of Cincinnati, spent Saturday and Sunday here guests of Bruce Wallace.

Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Peterson of Zion City, Ill., arrived here last week on a visit to her father Chas. L. Griffith.

Wm. McElroy, one of our old and esteemed citizens who has been very ill for several weeks is slowly improving.

J. G. Adkins has accepted employment at Kingsville, Ohio, assisting in the erection of the powder mills at that place.

Wm. Peed of Lexington, is purchasing tobacco in this quarter and made several purchases of fancy crops at good prices.

Walton Lodge of Odd Fellows conferred the second degree on Samuel Morgan at the meeting last Saturday night. The lodge is constantly growing in interest and membership.

J. M. Herndon, of Folsom, Grant county, was here Friday on business. Mr. Herndon having sold the farm near Folsom, expects to go to Mississippi next month, where he has large landed interests.

Dr. and Mrs. C. C. Metcalfe and Mr. and Mrs. T. B Northcutt left Tuesday for Florida to spend the balance of the winter, Dr. Metcalfe going to Orlando and Mr. Northcutt to New Symrna.

Thos. W. Marshall spent part of last week looking after his brother Mack Marshall who has been seriously ill. Since returning home Mr. Marshall has been confined to his home with a severe attack of lagrippe.

Rev. J. A. Lacey of Ewing, Fleming county, has been employed as the pastor of the Walton Christian church and began his duties Sunday. He will hold services every Sunday, and will move his family here.

Jos. C. Hughes of near Richwood, sold his purchase of old tobacco consisting of about one hundred thousand pounds to Larrimore & Co., of Louisville at a profitable price. The delivery was made last week.

Early Monday morning a tenant house on the farm of N. S. Bristow near Big Bone, and occupied by John Rust and family was entirely destroyed by fire, together with all its contents. The fire was caused by a defective flue.

Thomas O. Ballard, tonsorial artist at the Phonix Hotel, has been confined to his room the most of the week with a severe case of la grippe. His place was filled by C. M. Emral, who was formerly employed in a shop in the city.

Bruce Wallace entertained Sunday with a five o'clock dinner of several ccurses friends as follows: Geo. W. Winters and Joseph Niehaus of Cincinnati. Russell Campbell and Misses Brooking Tompkins, Grace Powers, Mabel and Jennie Mayhugh.

Roy D. Stamler spent Saturday and Sunday at Falmouth looking after his interests in the moving picture show at that place. Both his houses at Falmouth and Walton are growing in popularity because of the high class entertainment he is furnishing.

N. Railroad was broken into and the money drawer torn open, but as no money was left in the drawer the thieves received no reward for their trouble. No clue has been obtained to the identity of the thieves tho diligent inquiry was made along the line.

The freight rates on both of the railroads have been greatly advanced since Jan. 1st, and shippers complain that the rates have been almost doubled, consequently there has been a raise in the price of commodities retailed in Walton. The rate has been increased from 14 to 23 cents per cwt.

Rev. Geo. D. Prentiss, pastor of the Methodist church at Big Bone Springs, returned last week from Winchester where his wife is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Swango. She is quite ill and has not recovered from an operation she underwent at a Cincinnati hospital some time ago, but she is slowly improving.

Early last Wednesday morning thieves broke into the store of E. P. Northcutt and carried away a lot of merchandise consisting of wearing apparel. Among the articles taken was a pair of No. 12 felt boots showing the man to be of some size; woman's shoes, gloves and hose, and a black overcoat. The entrance to the building was made by breaking through a window on the side street leading to the depot. The same night the depot on the L. &

E. L. Kelly, of Pee Dee, North Carolina, was here the first of the week, looking over the Walton Electric Light plant, with a view to buying it and moving here, and establishing a day service. Mr. Kelly has charge of a large light plant operated by water power from a stream and distributes a current for a radious of 90 miles He is much impressed with the conditions here and if he and Mr. May field can come to satisfactory terms he will buy the plant.

Married—Grover C. Morgan of Morning View, and Miss Nellie Metcalfe of Independence, were united in the bonds of holy wedlock at Covington, Jan. 3rd. The groom is a brother of Prof. C. O. Morgan who was the principal of the Walton schools some years ago, and represented some American business interests in China for several years. The charming bride is a daughter of the late Dr. T. T. Metcalfe, treasurer of Kenton county The young couple will reside at Roanoke, Virginia.

The Walton Social Club entertained with a dance at the opera house last Friday night that was a very enjoyable affair. The music was furnished by the saxaphone band of Cincinnati, and nice refreshments were served. There was a good sized attendance from neighboring towns, among them being Whitney O. Payne and Richard Ward of Warsaw, John B. Grant and sisters Misses Jessie and Hazel of Sparta, Marshall Alexander of New Liberty, W. T. Hill, Jr., and Prentiss Garvey of Carrollton, Owen Kenney, John Cooper, Jas. Egelston and Miss Ruth Thomas of Glencoe.

Rev. J. I. Wills, who formerly resided here and was pastor of the Baptist church, and who for the past five years has been doing missionary work in the mountains of Kentucky, in reading the account of the recent trip of Rev. A. Kirtley Johnson to Owsley county when he made trip of nine miles over the mountains to fill an appointment, was prompted to write of his experiences in the mountains in which he says: "As you are aware I am a resident of Beattyville, Lee county, and besides being pastor of the Baptist church here I have several charges in the mountainous section. I note what you say about Bro. Johnson riding a mule nine miles over the mountains to fill an engagement, but I believe I can go him one better. It is called ten miles from Beattyville to Booneville, the county seat of Owsley county; this was measured by, or rather with a coon skin, with the tail thrown in. I have walked this road twice, making regular trips once a month for nearly five years, and with the two exceptions of walking, made the trip on mules or horses, and a few times on some other long eared animal. But this is not all. I am preaching on the south fork of the Kentucky river, five miles from Beattyville, and in the last twelve months I have made the trip every month, nine times on foot. This gives you some idea of the experiences of a preacher in the mountain country, of which rarely any of these features get into print. Half of my time is taken up by my work in the mountains and the other part in town, and the latter of course is not so hard, tho even here there are hardships to endure and sacrifices to make, I often think of the good people in Walton and the pleasant times I enjoyed while in your midst, and I will always treasure my association with its people and the town as a most pleasant memory, and I desire to be remembered to them in the kindliest manner."

J. I. WILLS.

Garnett Tolin, 25, and Miss Lula Edwards, 25, were married in Covington, yesterday afternoon. The groom is the son of Atty. S. W. Tolin, of Burlington, and the bride is the principal of Petersburg graded school. Here is wishing them happiness and all kinds of prosperity.

Robert Berkshire, son of B. H. Berkshire, and Miss Leila Thompson, daughter of J. M. Thompson, all of Petersburg, were united in marriage yesterday at high noon. The bride and groom are two of the most popular young people in Petersburg and have the best wishes of a host of friends.

A big river and probably a flood will be the result of the melting of the snow last Sunday night and the rain that has fallen since.

Miss Pauline Kelly, who teaches the Woolper school, is detained at her home in Burlington this week with gripp.

A very brilliant meteor appeared about 6:30 Wednesday morning has caused considerable talk all over the county.

Thanks are due Circuit Clerk Maurer for a basket of nice apples he left at this office, Tuesday.

It is said that a number of speculators are looking for mules in Bourbon county, Ky., and it is probable that comfortable fortunes may be realized by them, as they purchase the mules at a remarkably low price, and hold them for higher prices. There is a strong demand for mules and this seems to be the best prospect for money-making in the stock business.—Farmers Home Journal.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOL. XXXXI. Established 1875. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, JANUARY 20, 1916 $1.50 Per Year. NO. 17

A Farm Agents Request.

At the request of Farm Agent Brockaway I made a field test on corn with acid phosphate and ground limestone as follows:

No treatment, 46 bushels, 5 pounds per acre.

Acid phosphate, 56 bushels, 3 lbs. per acre.

Ground limestone, 68 bushels, 4 lbs. per acre.

Lime and acid phosphate, 76 bushels; 40 pounds per acre.

Corn was planted April 9th, 1915, and harvested September 25th. Variety, Boone County White. Acid posphate was used at the rate of 300 pounds per acre and ground limestone at the rate of two tons per acre.

I believe if we had retained our County Farm Agent, and he had made a demonstration in each neighborhood in the county, showing beyond a doubt the great benefit to be derived from the use of ground limestone on alfalfa and other crops we grow, he would have been worth many times his salary to the county of Boone.

I believe Agriculture should be taught in our schools if we want the boys to remain on the farm. We should have farmers' orgainizations. In other words, take it up in detail methods by by which we can make each community a better place to live by having better roads, which we can beautify by keeping clean fence rows and planting nice shade trees along the road border. We should also use modern methods by which we can make our soil more productive. We should offer prizes for products to be grown on the farm, grown by the school children, and we should have a round up in October of each year and award prizes and have a Farmers' Institute in connection with same, by notifying our State College in advance they will permit us to set our own date, write our own program and furnish us with their ablest speakers, and the lecturers will be from actual experiments on the subjects assigned in our program, to-wit: Soil Fertility, Growing of Alfalfa and all Clovers, Corn, Wheat, Stock Raising and Feeding a Balanced Ration, Dairying, Poultry Raising, &c.

I don't think any man could listen to such an array of practical experience as we will have on the above subjects and go away without some information that would be of value on his own farm. A farmers' Institute is the best means of bringing the best farming ideas, worked out by the best farmers in each neighborhood together.

I offer as a prize a $20 thoroughbred Big Type Poland China Gilt to the boy under 16 years old that makes the largest yield of corn on one acre of land in Boone county, no less than 25 to enter the contest, and to be under the supervision of the Boone County Farm Agent, and J. F. Cleek, at my request, offers one thoroughbred $20.00 Duroc gilt as a prize on the same conditions as I, but withholds placing same until program is made. D. B. Wallace will give a prize of $20 in cash. Mr. Wallace owns a farm in Grant county and is a strong advocate of a farm agent, having experience along that line.

Would like to hear from any one on the necessity of employing a County Farm Agent, or if there is any one who does not approve of same, would like to hear his reasons through the Recorder.

C. L. GRIFFITH.

Spare the Skunks, Says a Naturalist

There are a few naturalists left in this country who study the characteristics of the little wild animals that inhabit this quarter and it is interesting to hear these people describe the peculiarities of the animals, indicating a fund of knowledge as to their mode of living like an open book. Ad Miller, who carries the mail between Walton and Hamilton is one of the best informed of these naturalists and he can tell all of their traits of the small wild animals of this section. During the recent heavy snow fall he said he noticed the track of rabbits, squirrels skunks minks and weasles, but the tracks of the rabbits and skunks were very few, demonstrating that the rabbits are scarce this year, and he is of the opinion that a law should be enacted to prohibit the further killing of skunks as these animals are fine scavengers on the farm and devour many insects and other pests to the farm, besides being beneficial in other respects and are not hurtful to anything on the farm.

A Cow That is a Cow

Stant Kirtley, colored, of Burlington has a Guernsey cow from which he sold during the year 1915 veal calves that amounted to $62.07. W. L. Kirkpatrick, who handled the calves, has the bills which he will show to any doubting Thomas. The first sale was of twins which brought $37.37. The second sale was of an eight weeks old calf which weigh ed 340 pounds and brought $24.70. This is a very prolific cow and makes her owner big money to say nothing about the milk and butter she yields, it being claimed she will go as high as thirteen pounds a week when she is at her best and is properly cared for, while a pound a day is an easy average during the period she is milked.

An article on the road question by Mr. Al Rogers, of Belleview, came in too late for this week. It will appear next week.

BEAVER

Some winter in this neighborhood this morning. Low as six below zero in some places.

Miss Sarah Hughes of Beaver, and Miss Kate Sleet, of Grant-co., are arranging to leave for the land of flowers Jan. 18th, St. Augustine, Florida.

Miss Annie aMe Cleek has so far recovered from the operation she underwent, as to be able to take charge of her school here to the delight of her many friends.

John English sold his crop of to bacco to J. C. Hughes at $12 per hundred, the highest price received by any one in this neighborhood that we have heard of.

Mrs. James Sleet and son, who have been seriously ill of pneumonia fever, have improved very much under the skillful care of Dr. R. E. Ryle and Miss Cora Aylor.

Joe. W. Cleek has traded his 4-cylinder Buick for a new 6-cylinder Buick, which is a beauty. If he was a young man we would listen patiently for the wedding bells to jingle soon.

A High Class Entertainmet at Verona

The ladies of the Verona Civic League have arranged to give an entertainment at the Verona high school building Saturday evening, January 22, in which Miss Gene Conner, of Cincinnati, has kindly consented to take the leading numbers. Miss Conner is an elocutionist of charming personality and is a student of the Cincinnati College of Music, and will give a series of impersonating and recitations of a pleasing nature while local talent will assist with a musical program of a very entertaining character. The proceeds will be donated to the Civic Improvement League work.

UNION.

Miss Mamie Huseman entertained her sisters, of Covington, Sunday.

Eli Carpenter was the guest of his brother, Coxe Carpenter, Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose Easton are the proud parents of a fine daughter, born Jan. 10th.

Misses Leta and Julia Rice, of Covington, were guests of their parents Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Rice, Sunday.

Uncle Ben Stephens is growing weaker, and at his advanced age little hopes are had for his improvement.

Uncle Thomas Rices' condition continues very serious. A specialist was called to see him Sunday, but gave the family no hope.

The sad intelligence was received this morning of the death of Mrs. Maud Byland Brinley at her home in Louisville, last night. Mrs. Brinley was the oldest daughter of the late Dr. and Mrs. John Byland, of Independence. The remains will be brought to Covington to the home of her daughter, Mrs. David Stephens. Interment in Independence cemetery.

VERONA.

Several of this neighborhood have lagrippe.

Monday morning was the coldest day, six degrees below zero.

Rev. H. C. Wayman will preach at New Bethel church on the 4th, Sunday.

Oswald Peterson and wife, of Zion City, Illinois, visited at J. T. Griffith's last week.

Mrs. Bessie Conrad, of Dry Ridge, spent last week at the bedside of her father, R. O. Powers, who is quite ill.

An entertainment will be given at Verona School Building, Saturday evening, January 22d, by Miss Gene Conner, an elocutionist from Cincinnati. Music will be furnished by local talent. Admission, 15 and 10 cents.

Saturday the High School Grammar Grade pupils were entertained delightfully at the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs J. E. Williams. Games and contsts were the features of the evening, and several beautiful prizes were awarded, after which delicious refreshments were served. The party was chaperoned by Miss Mattie May, and all report a good time.

PT. PLEASANT.

The sick in the neighborhood are improving.

One of Chas. Carpenter's work horses died recently.

Our thermometer registered at the zero mark, Monday morning.

Keene Souther and wife are entertaining a little son at their home, Francis Keene.

Miss Mildred Adkins, of Florence, spent a couple of days last week with Miss Mabel Morris.

Mrs. Elwood Tanner, of Bromley, is at a Covington hospital where she was operated on Monday for appendicitis.

Mrs. Addie Gaines takes this method of thanking the pupils of her class for the set of napkins presented her as a Christmas present.

Wm. Fisher, colored, who was injured two years ago from a fall received while fleeing from a falling tree, died Jan. 10th, at the home of his father, John Fisher, from the effects of the fall.

TRUNK OF STOLEN GOODS

Found in Possession of Boone County Negro Woman

Who Had Hired to Mrs. Carl Price as Cook.—Goods Taken From Store at Walton.

(Georgetown News.)

Ada Wilson, a colored woman from Boone county, was arrested here Thursday morning on the charge of burglarizing Northcutt's mercantile store at Walton Tuesday night. Upon examination of the woman's trunk, a lot of the stolen merchandise was found, including two overcoats, gloves, caps, and many other articles. She was locked up in jail until Thursday evening when a representative of the Northcutt store came here and identified the stolen property and the woman was taken back to Boone county.

The woman had been in the employ of the mother of Mrs. Carl Price, in Boone county until recently and came here Wednesday and hired to Mrs. Price as cook. In the meantime the husband of the negro woman had been arrested at Walton for breaking into the Northcutt store, and as the woman left there Wednesday with a large trunk, Sheriff Ewing was called over the phone Wednesday night and told to locate the woman and examine the trunk. The woman arriving here Wednesday, Mr. Price sent in for the trunk of his new cook Thursday morning. Sheriff Ewing went to the home of Mr. Price and informed him of the suspicion against the woman and when the trunk arrived and was examined, the goods were found as above stated.

The above parties were lodged in jail here last Saturday to await the coming circuit court.

Time's Money.

Major George W. Teideman, of Savannah, Ga., tells the following about the old-time Georgia editor who was usually Mayor, Justice of the Peace and real estate agent, as well:

Upon one occasion one of these editors was busy writing an editorial on the tariff when a Georgia couple came in to be married. Without looking up, without once slacking his pen, the editor said:

"Time's money; want her?"

"Yes," said the youth.

"Want him?" the editor nodded toward the girl.

"Yes," she replied.

"Man and wife," pronounced the editor, his pen still writing rapidly. "One dollar. Bring a load of wood for it. One-third pine; balance oak."—Everybody's.

A SAD AFFAIR

Mrs. Clyde Berkshire Dies of Diphtheria After Short Illness—Son in Serious Condition.

Considerable Scare in Burlington Over Its Outbreak in the Town—School Has Closed.

Joseph, son of Clyde Berkshire and wife, who live three miles out on the Belleview pike, developed a case of diphtheria. last week. Dr. Duncan was called to see the child and sent for antitoxine post haste, and administered it as soon as possible. At last accounts the patient was getting along nicely.

Mrs. Clyde Berkshire, mother of the above child, took the diphtheria Tuesday night, and died at 5 a. m. Wednesday. Mrs. Berkshire was in a badly exhausted condition from herceaseless attention to her little son, when she developed the disease, and death soon resulted. Miss Artie Ryle has been at Mr. Berkshire's several days nursing the little boy who is improving.

Robert Gaines, son of A. W. Gaines, was taken sick at the home of his cousin, Mrs. Emma Brown, in Burlington, last Sunday, and Tuesday morning his physician, Dr. E. W. Duncan, announced that he had diphtheria, which announcement created a considerable stir in Burlington because of the fact the patient was in the postoffice Sunday, and it is uncertain as to the number of persons, many of them children, who were exposed to the disease, if it was at that time at the stage when it could be communicated. The young man has no idea as to how he contracted the disease.

The patient was taken to his home a mile and half out on the Florence pike by Sheriff Cropper in his auto Tuesday afternoon.

The local schools were dismissed Tuesday afternoon to await de velopments.

The postoffice and Mrs. Emma Brown's residence were thoroughly disinfected last Tuesday night.

Some persons, it is said, were afraid to take their mail out of the postoffice Tuesday evening. They want to take no chances on the disease.

Glad to Hear of the Forward Movement

E. Y. Chapin, a native of Petersburg, but now a prominent business man in Chattanooga, Tenn., in renewing his subscription to the Recorder, writes thusly:

"I am delighted to note that old Boone seems to be waking up. I shall ever think of her as a county of magnificent resources and splendid people, held back by a parsimonious policy as to public expenditures; but you seem to be now alive to the advantage of good roads—an advantage which we have enjoyed here for a good many years, but which we are constantly increasing."

A Cold Ride for Nothing.

A Mr. Reed and Miss Jennie Smittee, both claiming Newport as their home, came over to Burlington early last Monday morning to secure a marriage license which was refused them by County Clerk Rogers. For coming to Burlington they gave as an excuse that they did not want their marriage published in the papers. That statement appears somewhat fishy when the facts that the ther mometer was six below zero and the couple was in such a hurry to get to Burlington that they came before eating breakfast, are considered.

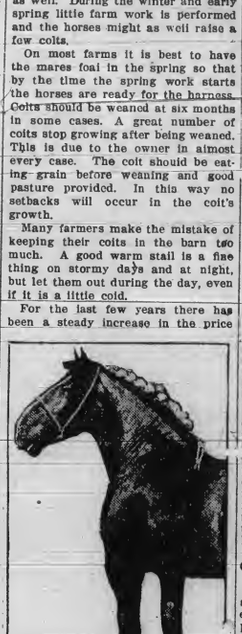
COLTS AS A SIDE LINE

No Other Thing Fits Into Average Farm Conditions as Well.



Many Farmers Make Mistake of Keeping Youngsters in Barn Too Much —Steady Increase in Prices for Good Animals.

The high price of horses has led many farmers to raising colts, as a side line. And there is no other thing that fits into average farm conditions as well. During the winter and early spring little farm work is performed and the horses might as well raise a few colts.

On most farms it is best to have the mares foal in the spring so that by the time the spring work starts the horses are ready for the harness. Colts should be weaned at six months in some cases. A great number of colts stop growing after being weaned. This is due to the owner in almost every case. The colt should be eating grain before weaning and good pasture provided. In this way no setbacks will occur in the colt's growth.

Many farmers make the mistake of keeping their colts in the barn too much. A good warm stall is a fine thing on stormy days and at night, but let them out during the day, even if it is a little cold.

For the last few years there has been a steady increase in the price of good horses. There never will be a time when horses will pay better than at the present. The farmer who has money in the bank or who is looking for a good paying investment should consider raising colts. Suppose you have a team of mares worth $500. If you had that amount in the bank you would not get over $10 interest, but if you raise two colts you would get $100. Is there any other thing that will pay as well?

Of course there is an element of risk to it as well as to any other business, but where common sense methods are used, raising colts is no harder than raising a crop of wheat; and there is a lot more money in it.

MUCH PLANT FOOD REMOVED

Interesting Table Published by Experiment Station at Purdue University on Soil Elements.

One hundred bushels of corn remove 292 pounds of plantfood from the ground, according to a table published by the experiment station at Purdue university. Of this amount, 168 pounds is contained in the ears and 124 pounds in the three tons of stover which is the average amount produced with 100 bushels of ear corn.

Besides this draft on the soil for the production of a corn crop, a large amount of organic matter in the soil is caused to decay or burn out with the frequent cultivation given and by leaching. Soils vary so much in their losses at any one time and under similar conditions that the other losses can hardly be calculated with exactness. Since corn or any other crop takes certain elements of plantfood from the soil and leaves others remain, the problem of feeding the soil consists in furnishing those elements of plantfood which are needed.

PROFESSOR COBURN ON CORN

Great Authority Intimates it Will Be Many Years Before Purebred Corn Can Be Developed.

F. D. Coburn, the great authority on alfalfa and corn, says there is no such thing as purebred corn, and intimates that in his judgment it will be hundreds of years before such a thing can be developed.

It has taken more than five hundred years to bring about the present development in purebred stock, and it is only a few years since it was known that plant life had any sexuality. We have improved corn, more or less improved, but no purebred corn worthy the name, and certainly none worth the price some schemers ask for it.

If Liquor Money Were Spent For Good Roads.

From Address of Wm. Jennings Bryan, April 30, 1915.

As we are all interested in good roads I have made a computation to ascertain how far the amount spent for liquor would go toward the building of good roads in the United States. I find that the average cost of a macadam road, sixteen feet wide and seven inches thick, is about $6,500 per mile. This is the estimate furnished by the Office of Public Roads in the Department of Agriculture; but to be sure that we are liberal in our estimate let us put it at $8,333 per mile—or three miles for $25,000. This enables us to make our computation in round numbers. If $25,000 will build three miles of macadam road, then $2,500,000,000 will build three hundred thousand miles. If we count the distance from ocean to ocean at 3,000 miles, the annual amount spent for drink would build 100 macadam highways across the continent; and these, counting the width of the country north and south at 1,200 miles, would give us a highway every 12 miles. If, the second year, we built 300,000 miles of highway running north and south, we could in two years have the United States gridironed with macadamized roads twelve miles apart, so that every citizen would be within six miles of a good road which would put him into communication with every other part of the Union. In less than eight years time, every mile of public road in the U. S. could be macadamized with the amount spent for alcoholic liquors. The amount now spent in paving the road to perdition would, if spent for good roads, soon lift the mud embargo from the entire country. Calculate, if you will, the change that would follow the investment of a nation's drink money in paved highways—the increase in comfort to the farmer and his family—the increase of attractiveness of country life, and the commercial value of good roads to the towns and cities of the land.

Could Not Take Liquor Advertisem'ts.

Realizing how desperate in their situation, the liquor interests are extending their publicity campaign and resorting to every device and method to persuade the newspapers to publish their material.

The Philadelphia North American writes this word of warning in regard to the wondrous activity on the part of the liquor men:

"Those who are opposed to the traffic should not underestimate the significance and effect of this organized campaign of newspaper advertising. There is no more powerful method of influencing public opinion. If enough newspapers participate in the campaign by publishing the advertising, the anti-saloon forces will have an uphill fight. Indeed, their work in many counties will be futile if the local newspapers sell space for the publication of the spacious arguments of the rum-sellers, and they should exert all possible influence to prevent this arrangement.

"It is encouraging to note that an increasing number of high-class newspapers need no urging to reject the profitable alliance. Within a fortnight four leading Pennsylvania journals have announced that they will take no more liquor money—the Williamsport Gazette and Bulletin, the Towanda Daily News, the Middleburg Post and the Potter Enterprise, of Coudersport. Many others had already adopted the same policy, and the list will grow."

The North American quotes in full the letter of an editor who felt he could not afford to accept a years' contract to print "Facts and Fallacies," a liquor publicity article being offered to the press generally.

It explains that neither he nor his paper has been for prohibition, nor is the sentiment of his county for that cause. Rejection of the business meant for him a real financial sacrifice. But what the liquor traffic means has been impressed upon his mind, has been burned into his very soul, in such a way that he not only declined the contract, but was impelled to tell the advertising agency his reasons. This is what he wrote:

I have your letter offering 20,000 lines of beer advertising, to be used in the——from Jan. 1, 1916, to Jan. 1, 1917. This would make approximately, a quarter page, or thirty inches, each week, which, at 30 cents an inch, our authorized rate, would amount to $9 a week, or $450 for the year.

This looks very good to us as to the size of the order and therevenue it would bring but as I feel that some poor, innocent persons would have to pay not only the $450 it would bring me, but also the cost of the beer sold and the profit on it, I am not warranted in accepting, much as I need the money.

My home has been broken up for more than a year, due to the fact that my wife has been placed in a hospital for the insane. The physician's diagnosis of her case is paranoia, which the medical books say, is caused by a family taint of drunkenness, neurosis, or actual insanity. As there has been nothing like the latter two in the family history, I am led to believe that rum is the sole cause of the trouble, and now I, an innocent victim, must pay the hospital bills, conduct a wifeless home and raise a motherless daughter. My wife did not drink, but I am told that her father and her grandfather did.

I am not a temperance crank, but I could tell you more. This is sufficient, however, to satisfy you why I do not care to do anything to foster an appetite for beer or whisky. This is the largest advertising proposition I ever had presented to me, but it is not the only one I have refused. If you have any propositions, large or small, to advertise legitimate commodities that will serve a useful purpose in life, I shall be glad to consider them.

The spring aphis, popularly known as the green bug, has appeared in grain fields in Western Kentucky and Southern Mo. The danger of this pest doing serious damage in spring depends to a great extent upon the weather now and the middle of April. If the temperature during this period is sufficiently high to enable the green bug to breed thruout the winter and at the same time sufficiently low to prevent its principal natural enemy—a minute black, four winged fly—from developing, a serious infestation over a large area may be expected. —Hickman Courier.

Tom Futrell killed four fine hogs during Christmas and salted them down nicely, in a box, and rested satisfied, since, thinking he would have plenty of meat to last his family all the year. A few days ago he decided that it was about time to hang it up and smoke it, he went to his box and found that some one had preceded him. On close examination he found that two big shoulders and four juicy hams had disappeared. Tom says a Democrat must have visited him, as a Republican always takes the "whole hog."—La Center Advance.

J. P. Day, who grew a crop of tobacco on the E. S. Montgomery farm in Robertson county last season, brought it to the Growers' house here in Maysville Monday. In his crop there was a stalk, the only one like it in the field, containing five leaves that were most peculiarly marked. The entire surface of the leaves are covered with what looks like a lot of white, inlaid hieroglyphics. None of the tobacco men who viewed the freak "weed" ever saw anything like it, and it certainly is a curiosity.—Maysville Bulletin.

Princeton.—Night rider notices have been posted in this county warning farmers not to haul tobacco to loose leaf markets. According to reports, a notice was posted at Bainbridge, near the Caldwell-Christian line, threatening destruction to the team and wagon and a whipping to the driver should any tobacco be hauled to the loose leaf floor at Hopkinsville.

Paducah.—$1700 and fifty dollars worth of Government "war tax stamps were required on a deed of trust from the Paducah and Illinois railroad to the Union Trust Company of Chicago, recorded in the county court here. The mortgage is on the company's lines in this county and Massac county, Ill., to secure a loan of $7,000,000.

Hickman.—Although the pecan crop in this section was only about half of what it is when the season is a good one, the pecan crop sold for something like $30,000. This does not include the hickory nuts and walnuts, very few of which are marketed, all attention being turned to the pecan crop.

Owingsville.—The Farmers bank of this place has just declared its one-hundredth semi-annual dividend. This bank has been under the same management since its organization September 5, 1865.

How Smoking Harms Boy.

You, mothers, whose boys are just beginning at the age of 10 to find opportunities to acquire the cigarette habit, what may you expect if they do? Here are a few expect if they do? Here are a few of the possibilities:

They will acquire a habit which may bring them into sympathetic associations with boys who are going to the bad.

They will be slaves to a habit which segregates them from the common crowd of travelers and spectators.

They will join that procession that is made up of marchers with hesitating steps, shaky hands and palpitating hearts.

They will unfit themselves for athletic sports and high attainments in their duties.

They will weaken their resistance for disease and fall easy victims to infection.

They will exclude themselves from many activities leading to higher pay and perfection.

They will waste large sums of money while doing themselves a lasting, perhaps even fatal injury.

They will more readily become victims of alcohol, cocane, opium, and other narcotic drugs.

They will shorten their lives.

Their presence will disclose itself to the nostrils of all of their associates.—Ex.

FATTEN SWINE ON OLD CORN

Place Animals in Clean Pens and Allow Plenty of Room—Guard Against Hog Cholera.

With grade pigs, it takes from seven to eight bushels of corn, judiciously fed, to make 100 pounds of pork. Careless feeders do not get as good a result for the corn fed as this.

It will take much more corn to fatten a hog in cold, wet weather than it does in mild weather. Put the hogs up that are to be fatted in clean pens, do not crowd, feed what corn they will eat up clean at each meal. Give plenty of pure water to drink. For best family pork and lard, old corn and water is all they should have; four weeks' feeding should put them in good order for butchering. Farmers, having plenty of acorns in the wood lots, can fatten their hogs mostly on the fallen nuts; this was the regular custom years ago and is still followed in some sections. It is a good one all that it needs is a tight fence around the woods. Brood sows will winter better in the woods if given a log pen and a dry bed of leaves.

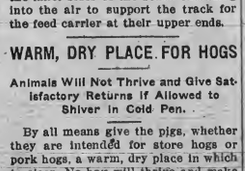
Eight-month-old shoats, weighing 160 to 180 pounds, make the best family pork, shoats fed on clover and grass pasture during the summer and given a bushel of old shelled corn make the best flavored meat. This class of pork commands the highest market price.

If hog cholera prevails in your neighborhood, allow no stranger to visit your pens. Stray dogs and buzzards are liable to spread the plague as they feed mostly on dead animals. Keep the feed troughs and pens clean and dry and allow no filth of any kind around the pens, as filth breeds disease.

MANURE IN THE BOX STALLS

More Bedding Is Required to Keep Animal Clean—Ideal Breeding Place for Flies.

(By J. N. ALLEN.)



The production of manure in the box stall is probably the best of the old methods, since it requires the least expenditure of labor. However, more bedding is required to keep the animal clean and the accumulated manure furnishes an ideal breeding place for flies.

The manure so produced, if kept evenly distributed over the floor, will be thoroughly compacted and will sustain only a small loss of nitrogen so long as the animal remains upon it, but if the manure is allowed to remain in the stall after the animal is removed there will be considerable loss of nitrogen both as ammonia and as free nitrogen, due to the drying out and breaking up of the uric acid into ammonium carbonate, and to the action of the bacteria on the organic nitrogen compounds.

DEVICE FOR FEEDING SILAGE

Lots of Work Required in Caring for Cattle Unless Owner Has Good Head for Business.

Silage is the great feed-all of the successful American live-stock farm, says Farming Business. The feeding of it requires lots of work, unless the feeder has a head for business. Here is a device for feeding silage from a bank silo, which is in use on a Nebraska farm. It may also be used on above-ground silos, however. One man can handle 100 head of live stock easily with such an arrangement, the carrier track being extended out over as many feed boxes as necessary to handle the cattle or sheep to be fed. The boxes for feeding may be arranged in pairs, the posts that support the inner sides of the boxes extending into the air to support the track for the feed carrier at their upper ends.

WARM, DRY PLACE FOR HOGS

Animals Will Not Thrive and Give Satisfactory Returns if Allowed to Shiver in Cold Pen.

By all means give the pigs, whether they are intended for store hogs or pork hogs, a warm, dry place in which to sleep. No hog will thrive and make satisfactory returns when compelled to shiver on a hard bed in a cold pen, or to huddle up or lay against the side of the building where they are suffering from cold.

Do not allow too much air above the pigs. It is better to make a false covering over the nest to keep the cold air from coming down from above.

While we are anxious to exclude the cold air from the nest, there should always be an abundance of pure air for the animals to breathe, as it will enable them to do much better work in digesting the feed than if confined to a close pen where the air is impure.

CONCRETE SILO.

(From Boone High News.)

This is the picture of the second concrete silo built in Boone co. and is on the farm of Superintendent Edgar C. Riley near Petersburg. Mr. Riley is on top of the silo in the picture and incidentally it is fifty feet from where he is to the bottom of the silo. Many farmers of our county are contemplating building silos so the News gives this cost for the construction of this silo.

This silo is 14x42 feet 8 inches of concrete, and the roof extends eight feet above the concrete and with an 18-inch hole in the center of the top it can be filled with loss of little space. The wall is six inches thick and is reinforced with woven black wire, 4 inch meshes and 38 inches high. The size of the wire varied from ¼ of an inch in the bottom to No. 6 near the top. The American Wire Co. furnishes the wire and the plan as to size. The silo is on a level with the basement of the barn so it is six feet in the ground.

Cost of form, material and work	$ 35.00
Cost of roof and material	40.00
Cost of reenforcing rods and wire	49 00
Cement, 286 sacks and hauling	135 00
Hauling gravel, $1.25 per day	20.00
Master workman	54.00
Concrete mixers and work excavating	94.50
Lumber for scaffold, buckets, and inc	43.00
Total	$470.50

Lumber for scaffold and forms are left. Water did not cost anything as a pipe was laid from the water tank to mixing board. No charge was made for teams and gravel as the gravel was free and the farm teams were used. The location of the farm and nearness to gravel may make the cost less or greater. The form was raised and filled every other day. The ensilage is very good. Verry little spoiled on the top and as little has molded as in any silo in the county. Any who plan to build a silo would do well to visit this farm and inspect this plant. A wooden silo of standard make would cost as much to erect and would not be so valuable. Visitors are welcome and Mr. Riley is glad to explain any matter in reference to construction or cost to anyone.

HERE'S A NEW ONE.

A tall, well-dressed young man strode vigoriously into a large bank. He walked to one of the glass-covered desks, took from his pocket a piece of paper, scribled something upon it and went to the paying teller's window.

"I would be obliged if you will give me that in new fifties," said the young man with a certain air of positiveness.

It was a certified check for $850. The paying teller examined it, recognized the signature of the bank and counted out 17 new fifty dollar bills and slipped a little rubber band around them.

Just as the tall man started from the window with his money in his overcoat pocket a shorter, older and fatter man edged up alongside of him.

"If you move a step or say a word I'll shoot you for the crook you are," said the stout one.

At the same time he shoved a pistol against the side of the younger man and handed a card through the window to the paying teller. "Pinkerton" was there in big type and below a man's name as special detective.

"This fellow," said the man with the gun, "is a counterfeiter wanted in Cincinnati. Now hand back that money," he said to the captured criminal. This little sheaf of new fifties was returned.

"If you will let me take that check I'll do the rest," added the detective and the obliging teller returned it.

There had been no noise, no excitement and no observers to this odd transaction. When the pair left the bank they didn't go to a police station, but to another bank not 200 feet away.

There they went thru exactly the same performance—got 17 nice new fifty-dollar bills, handed the little bundle back and also got their alleged bogus check.

And from this second bank they went to six others in the space of less than an hour. Later in the day when counting out their cash eight bank tellers made a remarkable discovery.

Each one was shy, as the poker players say, exactly $150.

What happened was this: While the stout confederate posing as a detective went thru his role, the other slipped three of the fifty-dollar bills from the little rubber-bound sheaf and returned not 17 but only 14.

Unless you stop to count them, 14 new bills feel and look as much like 17 as one guinea pig looks like another. It was done so quickly the tellers didn't seem to think it necessary to count the returned cash.

As for the check for $850 it was really genuine and the swindlers got back that money before leaving town with their $1,200 in those nice new fifties.—Philadelphia Ledger.

HUSBAND RESCUED DESPAIRING WIFE

After Four Years of Discouraging Conditions, Mrs. Bullock Gave Up in Despair. Husband Came to Rescue.

Catron, Ky.—In an interesting letter from this place, Mrs. Bettie Bullock writes as follows: "I suffered for four years, with womanly troubles, and during this time, I could only sit up for a little while, and could not walk anywhere at all. At times, I would have severe pains in my left side.

The doctor was called in, and his treatment relieved me for a while, but I was soon confined to my bed again. After that, nothing seemed to do me any good. I had gotten so weak I could not stand, and I gave up in despair.

At last, my husband got me a bottle of Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I commenced taking it. From the very first dose, I could tell it was helping me. I can now walk two miles without its tiring me, and am doing my work."

If you are all run down from womanly troubles, don't give up in despair. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic. It has helped more than a million women, in its 50 years of wonderful success, and should surely help you, too. Your druggist has sold Cardui for years. He knows what it will do. Ask him. He will recommend it. Begin taking Cardui today.

THE ROAD QUESTION.

A gentleman, well informed and centrally located, tells me that the people of Boone county are divided upon the road and bond question somewhat according to location and situation. That is to say, the people north of Burlington are generally against the bond issue and the people south of Burlington are generally for the bond issue, and the people who live on bad or unimproved roads are generally for the bond issue and those who live on pikes are generally against the bond issue. The purpose of this article is to protest against each of these divisions or classifications and against any other division or classification, except the honest judgment of the voter upon what is the best for Boone county as a whole.

There should be no north and no south, no east and no west, no selfish individualism by the man who happens to live on a pike and no selfish individualism by the man who happens to live on an unimproved road. Such considerations are petty, trivial, unmanly and dishonorable. We should be fair, liberal, statesmanlike, as it were, in a small way, and answer the single question, what is best for Boone county?

When this question is fairly, wisely, and honestly answered, there can be but one conclusion, namely, that a bond issue of $200,000 at this time has many fold more advantages to all the people of Boone county than all possible disadvantages. In fact, rightly considered, there can be no disadvantages arising from the bond issue, because the only possible disadvantage would be the small amount of extra tax entailed and since it has been already shown, or can be, and has never been satisfactorily contradicted anywhere, that a good system of roads increases valuation in the ratio of five to one spent, the tax can no more be a burden to the owners of that property than it would be to trade a nickle for a quarter.

The advantages to be derived from the bond issue and a consequent good system of free pikes are innumerable but a few of the more prominent ones might be named thus: increase in the value of property five dollars to the acre; increased attendance at school; increased attendance at church, neither of which can be estimated in dollars and cents but in reality the most essential things to the progress and welfare of the people; increased attendances at the County and Circuit courts; closer contact of the different neighborhoods of the county with each other thereby affording better opportunities for exchange of ideas and bringing about a more harmonious feeling throughout the county; closer contact with the city, its markets, its amusements, its art and political thought; the saving of time, saving of teams, vehicles and most of all the saving of health and comfort.

Following these things invariably, as the day follows the night, are, neatness in farming, in fencing, in buildings, general intelligence and general information, having no limit except the inherent limitations of the people subject to the improved internal conditions and external opportunities. Just as science teaches us that a babe reared in a cave, without contact, will be idiotic, so a man or woman excluded from social relations will sooner or later grow dull, narrow, bigoted and intolerant; and just as one person or a few persons would be affected by segregation from contact with his fellowmen, a whole community, that is a village, a county or even a nation, would be affected to a lesser extent, but in the same direction. As an example China may be cited; and as a notable example of what emergence from seclusion to contact with the world may have upon a nation, Japan is cited.

When Commodore Perry sailed into Yokohama in 1853, almost by threat of force, Japan was only half civilized but there immediately came an awakening throughout Japan, directly attributable, by Japan's statesmen and political economists, to the absorbsion and imitation of the ideas of other countries. To a more limited extent but in kind the same, Boone county has maintained a wall around herself like China and kept her interior hidden like Japan and has refused to learn from the outside world; rejected all the ideas and experience of those sections which by accident, or location, or leadership, or something else, got the start of her in road building and all the train of good that follows.

It is not pleasant to be told of it and it is not pleasant to realize the truth of it, nevertheless the fact is that any man or any number of men in Boone county who would reject a fair hearing and consideration of what has been accomplished in other counties and other states by the building and maintaining of a good system of roads, including a hearing and consideration of the means by which those roads were built and maintained, must be included in that class which grows narrow by lack of contact. Reading of Job is advised where it is taught that the greatest sin of all is self righteousness and self-satisfaction. Akin to this and almost in the class with it is that sentiment expressed in convention that the Dixie Highway should have nothing, and since, in substance, reannounced in the Boone County Recorder that the Dixie Highway ought to wait to the very last one before any money is expended on it. This is the same selfish, narrow and untenable position as being wholly opposed to any improvement or to surround it with such objectionable methods in its application as to make it impossible.

The Fiscal Court has announced the correct, the fair, the honest and wise way. To use the proceeds of the bonds and all other road money, to free pikes, to reconstruct pikes, to build pikes and bridges; to carry on the whole county along at the same time, recognizing all parts, recognizing the rights of all parts, and doing for all parts what they are fairly and reasonably entitled to, considering the county as a whole and having in view all the time the greatest good to the greatest number. Any citizen who contends for more or denies less to each and every part of Boone county is narrow, selfish and unfair. There is no one interested in the Dixie Highway who has asked for, claims or expects any more from Boone county than the people directly interested in that road as citizens of Boone county are entitled to under that rule.

During the whole time of my residence in Boone county, over twenty years, in season and out of season, in public and private, I have urged the general improvement of all the roads including the unimproved ones, making all good solid and dry and making that road widest and best which is most public. I have at all times, upon the road question, been consistently in favor of applying the rule of the greatest good to the greatest number. I am no more directly interested in the Dixie Highway than all the other people in Boone county who travel over it occasionally. I do not own a foot of land on it except in the town of Walton where most of my property is located and there the town will have to maintain it at much larger expense, probably three times the expense, that the county would have to pay for the same mile; but as a citizen of the county and having in view the whole county, I insist that it is the most public road in the county, because more people of the county use it to a larger extent than any other road in the county, and up to the present time our neighboring counties of Kenton and Grant and our neighboring states of Indiana and Ohio have used it and will use to a greater extent in the future than any other pike.

Years ago I heard a respected (then) member of the Fiscal Court sneer at Boone county doing anything for any particular road in Boone county with the view of accommodating or repaying the people of our neighboring counties and states. Faintly but occasionally I hear that sentiment expressed now and I have never failed and never will fail to make use of an opportunity to strike at that error. It is not only an error but it is a narrow, selfish, unmanly, dishonest sentiment that can only be harbored by dense ignorance. It belongs to the same class of people who will always borrow and never lend or who will always borrow and never have anything to lend. In other words, it lives in a spirit of imposition belonging to a class of people in the world that are universally despised, the sponger. Take away the river and the railroads and the people of Boone county could not get out of it except upon the roads of other counties and other states. In Kenton, Grant, Gallatin counties and in Ohio and Indiana, the roads and the toll gates of Boone county have been a laughing stock and a joke for years. If those in Boone county, who are really opposed to the improvement of the roads think that sort of ill opinion by our neighboring counties and states is doing Boone county people and Boone county property any good, they are in the midst of a delusion. Upon the question of toll gates Boone county is almost alone in Kentucky and in the world. Upon the question of no road system and no bonds she is out of line with modern thought in all the states and nations, she is not even consistent with herself because two years ago she voted by a large majority to authorize the Fiscal Court to free the pikes and build pikes. Now the question is to furnish the means with which the court may free them of gates and build pikes.

Immediately section is arrayed against section; class against class; brother against brother. This ought not to be; must not be; there is no occasion for it. The court has marked out the true path. Other contentions on any other line are untenable and in most instances are not well considered. We are somewhat in the situation Germany was in in The Thirty Year War, fighting among ourselves, over nothing. "The fault is not in our stars but in Ourselves." We are doing no good without bonds, we can not do much without them. A tenant just as well say he won't buy a farm until he has all the money to pay for it. The Dixie Highway in Boone county compris es 11½ miles of the Covington and Lexington pike, one mile is in Walton and about one-half mile in Florence. Of course Walton and Florence would have to rebuild and maintain their part notwithstanding they pay the same pike tax to the county including that to be levied by reason of the bonds which all other parts of the county pay.

To buy that pike should not take more than about $10,000. To reconstruct it would not cost more than $15,000. What is there about that to alarm anyone; or to cause anyone to be for the bonds on condition that all the money be spent elsewhere; or that it will last? Gentlemen are not serious or thoughtful or fair in their utterances. I ask gentlemen who talk thus hastily to consider that Florence, Walton and Cincinnati and the people on the Lexington pike for lo, these many years have never asked nor received directly one dollar in return for the large amount of road tax which they pay each year. Those four named places pay as much as 70 per cent of all the road tax paid in Boone co. They are claiming no superior rights because of it. They simply want a fair deal.

Going back to the text, a man might just as well try to lift himself by the boot straps as to try to separate his interests from the balance of the county in which he lives. It can't be done. He will go up or down with his community in spite of himself. The German doctrine that the citizen, all that he is and all that he has belongs to the state, is about true by the law of being, by the law of society, whether we will it or confess it or not. If the proposition is true then it follows that whatever benefits one part of the county benefits the whole and conversely, whatever benefits the whole county benefits every part of it. Of course it is needless to state that if the court gives to each and every part of the county its due share under the rule declared by the court, which is only another way of stating the rule of "The greatest good to the greatest number" the whole county will be benefitted because. "The whole is equal to the sum of all its parts."

J. G. TOMLIN.

A Square Deal for Every One in Boone County.

Petitions are being circulated for the purpose of calling a special election May 8th to determine the sense of the legal voters in Boone county on the proposition,

"Are you in favor of issuing $200,000 in bonds for the purpose of building roads and bridges?"

Boone county has 63 miles of free pike and free pikes under construction, 34 miles of pike of which the county has not less than $500 per mile interest, 51 miles of toll roads owned by private corporations and nearly 225 miles of mud roads.

The proposition of voting bonds on the county should be considered as carefully by the people of this county as borrowing money for ones self.

For what are we borrowing this money? Where are we to spend this money? Under our present road system it will be possible for all the roads to be made free and about 75 miles of the mud roads piked in about ten years. Under this order of the Fiscal Court, i. e. if the bond issue carries, it will be possible to proceed to freeing the roads at once and to sell sufficient bonds to pike every road in the county for which application is made when these conditions are complied with. The condition of the community raising part of the cost of construction will regulate the danger of playing favorites as to location, and will give every community the same opportunity for obtaining a road.

$200,000 is not sufficient to pike and reconstruct our county system, but on the plan as outlined it will make possible the construction of all roads and at the same time make all roads free.

At present it is not fair to the man living on the pike to pay toll and tax to build roads, nor is it fair to the man living on the mud road to pay tax to buy pikes, and again it is not fair to the man who lives on the mud road to pay tax to build or buy pikes and get no opportunity to keep out of the mud himself. If the bond issue carries it will be possible for the whole matter to be adjusted in a square way for all.

The only opposition I find in the county is the opposition to the Dixie Highway. Boone county people are interested in a State road system as far as sentiment is concerned. Boone county people are interested in a State road system for more than sake of sentiment. Boone county people should take the gates off the Lexington pike and all other pikes as well, and let the State call it Dixie Highway and spend county and State money on this road in the same way we spend money on other important roads.

The Dixie Highway, as I see it in Boone county, will be a good road—no better and no worse, than our other main pikes. Many people think because Kenton built an experiment road of concrete that Boone county will do the same. That is not true. I am willing to take all the gates off in the county but all must and will have the same chance under a bond issue.

Under the State system of roads the State Highway Commission is interested in a State System of Highways. The great artery of commerce from Central Kentucky is the Lexington pike. State aid money will be spent on this pike and that will be a loss to the mud road men.

The bond issue will help all, and more particularly the people who live in the northern and western part of the county. In order to give the same proposition to all I shall vote for the issuing of bonds.

Protect Farm Machinery.

More machinery rusts away than wears out on the average farm, where shelter for machinery is not given due consideration. If properly sheltered the uncomplaining farm machine will more than repay its owner for its extra care. If you want to be classed with the thrifty, farsighted farmers who are realizing the greatest returns from their labor, protect your machinery it is a matter of business and economy to protect machinery. from the weather. Machinery, like animals can not live long if forced to withstand the ravages of heat, cold, wind and rain. If you house your windmill pump, it is not nearly so liable to freeze up and burst in the winter, and if anything should happen to it in zero weather, you will find it a much more comfortable job to make the necessary repairs in a house than out in the cold.—Coleman's Rural World.

FAITH.

A man's faith in himself is his most exclusive possession.

While it may be quite true that faith will move mountains, it is also quite true that it will not move an automobile or a creditor.

Those men who try faith in place of elbow-grease, know a great deal more about rubber heels than rubber tires.

A baby keeps its faith in mankind until someone comes in late with its bottle.

When the average human reaches the age of 30, his faith in others is about as life-like as a stuffed fish.

We read a great deal of "child like faith"—yet most children hide their treasures in the darkest corner of the attic.

Man's faith in the other chap is in indirect ratio to the size of the dividends paid by Padlock and Bonding Companies.

And yet, but for faith, the subway and the wooden streets of New York City would be about as popular as a fertilizer plant.

Preachers who can speak most powerfully on the subject of faith can also speak most powerfully on the subject of having their contracts as to remuneration signed in advance.

Faith is such a scarce article that any man, who possesses a fair amount of it, is apt to find that his friends have applied to the Courts for the appointment of a committee to take care of his property.—Judge.

THE PUBLISHER.

J. C. Revill had his ice house filled yesterday.

The weather last week was hard on the growing small grain.

J. E. Smith filled his ice house Tuesday with nice five inch ice.

Skates and sleighs have been of very little use so far this winter.

Hon. W. P. Cropper and wife, are both ill of grippe in Frankfort.

Master Howard Stilley is recovering from a severe attack of la-grippe.

Mrs. Martha Hawes, who has been very ill for several days improves siowly.

At last accounts Perry Barlow had lost thirteen of his sheep of hydrophobia.

It is claimed that the weather so far for this week is just the kind to knock out the grip.

There is no set formula for popping the question in Leap Year. Just brace up and pop, that's all.

Some attribute the very warm weather Wednesday of last week to the coming of the meteor that morning.

Livestock required considerable feed last week, making quite an impression on the supply in some instances.

Mrs. J. G. Furnish, of Covington, has been the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Revill, several days.

Those who have been industrious trappers this winter are the most prosperous members of their communities.

Ed. Hawes was called home from Lakeland, last week, on account of the illness of his mother, Mrs. Martha Hawes.

J. T. Stephenson, of Limaburg, returned a few days since from Collfax, Ill., where his son-in-law, Mr. Stahl has located. The climate was too much for Mr. Stephenson.

Rabid dogs have made their appearance in many parts of the country if reports are reliable, consequently it will be a safe plan to have very gittle to do with dogs.

A Harrison county dog fancier sold 1,900 dogs during 1915, for which he received $60,000. He estimates that his dogs consumed a total of 45,000 pounds of feed during the year.

Judge Gaines convened a special term of circuit court in Owenton, last Monday, to dispose of a combination of litigation that the interest of all parties demanded an early hearing.

Several of the sheep belonging to Fred Morris, who lives just south of town have been afflicted very much like those which Perry Barlow lost. Mr. Morris has lost two of his sheep.

The Coal Dealers had an Inning

The coal dealer had an inning last week, the first time weather to his liking had made much of an impression in this part of the country.

Checked the Flood

The arrival of the cold wave last Wednesday night checked what promised to be a first-class Ohio river flood. A drop of 61 degrees in the temperature in 12 hours is sufficient to stop most anything.

In Commission Again

The furpace at the school building was fired up last Friday after noon, when the repairs were completed. About the time the repair man had completed his work at the school building the furnace at the county infirmary was discovered to be in a bad condition and he was called to attend to it.

Some Back-Fire

Circuit Clerk Maurer and County Attorney Riddell were tinkering with the furnace at the court house, one day last week, when it back-fired and invelopped them in a dense volume of soot and smoke. When they returned from the basement they looked like a couple of coal miners who had been under ground a fortnight.

After The Mail Contract

The boys who desire to succeed J. M. Eddins as contractor for carrying the mail on the Burlington and Erlanger route will be on the jump last week preparing their bids which had to be on file in Washington, D. C., by the 18th inst. It is hoped none of the bidders put their figures below what it is actually worth to perform the service.

A Flock of Meteors

According to the accounts a flock of meteors visited this part of the country on Wednesday morning of last week, and fell in divers and sundry places. At least one meteor was cavolting in the heavens that morning and the varying statements as to its appearance arise from its being viewed by different persons from different points of observation.

Returned to His Work.

After being at home several days following a sojourn of a couple of weeks in a hospital where he went to have one of his eyes treated, C. C. Hughes returned to his work in the Internal Revenue Service last week. Mr. Hughes, in the matter of service, is one of the oldest revenue men in this part of the State. Administrations come and go but he goes on the same.

Must Discontinue the Practice.

Land owners and tenants to the number of twenty at Rabbit Hash and in its vicinity have given notice to those who drift in the river and land logs, lumber and other drift on their lands that they must discontinue the practice, as they propose to assert their ownership to any and everything that is landed on their premises hereafter. Read the notice in another column.

Has Typhoid Fever.

Howard Stilley, Jailer Samuel Adams' step-son has typhoid fever. He had been complaining several days when the doctor was called and at once suspected that was his trouble. A specimen of his blood was sent to a bacteriologist at Bowling Green, and the diagnosis of his physician, Dr. Yelton, was confirmed. Miss Cora Aylor, a professional nurse, is nursing the young man.

Tobacco Growers Keeping Quiet

There is not much being said about pitching a crop of tobacco this year altho the sales made so far have been at pretty good prices. When the grower realizes ten dollars around for his tobacco he makes good money out of the crop. It is generally conceded, however, that it would be to the grower's advantage to reduce the acreage and increase the quality by giving it more house room and more careful handling when stripping. Rough handling of tobacco when being stripped is very costly to the grower.

Suspected of Having Hydrophobia

A dog belonging to Mrs. Lavinia Kirkpatrick was killed one morning last week because it was feared the animal had hydrophobia. It had been behaving in a strange manner for a few days and Jesse, Mrs. Kirkpatrick's son, had kept it confined in a room at his shop, but the morning it was killed it jumped through a window and ran under the residence where it was shot by Kirb Tanner, the local executioner. Mrs. Kirkpatrick remembers that her dog and a strange dog had a fight about two weeks before, and it is thought the strange dog had hydrophobia.

A Doctor Drowned

Dr. R. T. Neffner of Weisburg was drowned in East Tanner's creek on Tuesday evening. He was last seen when he left the home of a patient about 4 o'clock, and is supposed to have attempted to ford the swollen streams at a point between New Alsace and St. Leon. The horse and buggy were found about two miles from the point where he attempted to cross. The horse was drowned and the buggy was demolished. The body of the drowned man was found Wednesday morning lodged in a clump of bushes near the home of John Hyland in Kelso township. Dr. Neffner was a well known and highly respected physician, and had a large practice in the northern part of Dearborn county. He was unmarried and lived with his father and sister, who survive him.—Lawrenceburg Press.

OH, HORRORS!-

Tootsies of the Dear Creatures Are Said To Be Growing Larger.

[New York World]

By way of breaking the news gently, it may be remarked here that, while the arms of the nation are being talked about so much, the time has come to go to the other extreme of the body politic and consider its feet. Now that you are ready for the shock—absorb this:

Women's feet this year are larger than ever before and they are getting larger right along.

Read that over to your wife, but do not believe her when she indignantly denies it. The persons who sell shoes and stockings, wholesale and retail, say it is true, and they ought to know. Besides, they have nothing to conceal.

Chicago has always held the honors, such as they are, for the greatest number of women with big feet in proportion to population. Even the fact that big feet are now being worn by almost all the women of New York and the rest of the country need not affect the Windy City's leadership in that respect.

The sad news has come out through the discovery of dealers in hosiery that while No. 9 is still considered the standard women's size in the American trade, they are increasing demands this year, for 9½s and 10s. Exporters have given out the depressing information that women in this country have larger feet than their sisters in South and Central America, who use up most of the 8s in the market and keep crying for 7½s.

Cheer up—the worst is to come. Thinking there might remain some hope for the republic and the fair name of American womenhood, a reporter for The World went to a big department store yesterday and asked if the report was not an outrageous falsehood. But this is what the head of the hosiery department told him:

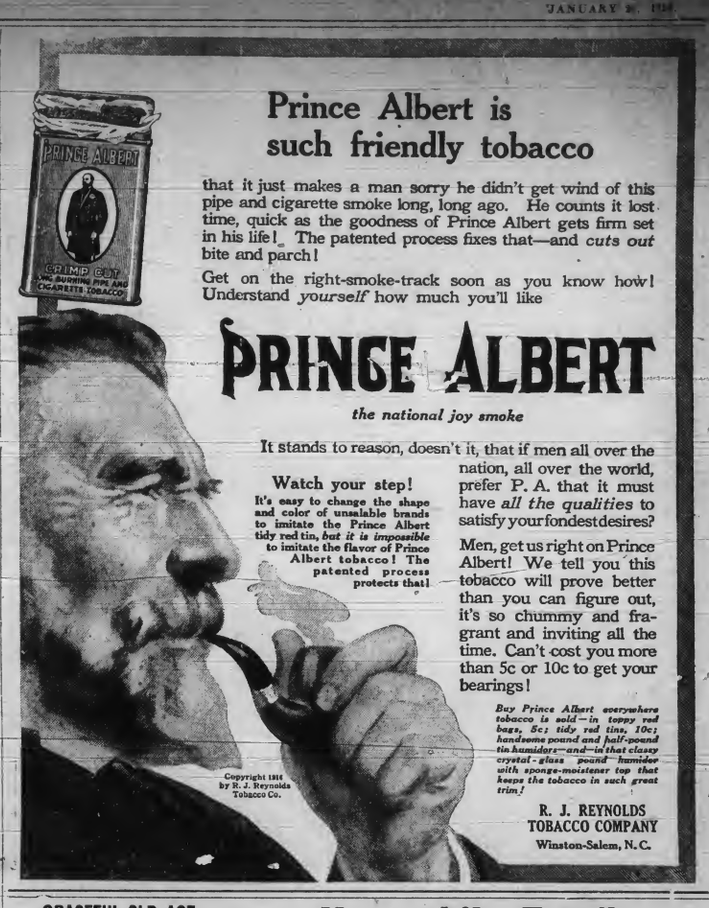
"We have imported No. 11s this season for the first time in the history of our business. Heretofore 10½s were the largest size we ever handled. The demand for large-sized hosiery is very great."

This department store is one which caters to persons of small incomes. Hoping against hope, the reporter went to a Fifth avenue shop, patronized by wealthy women. But it seems that society has big feet, too.

"We no longer consider No. 9 the standard woman's size," said the head hosiery saleswoman here. "It is now No. 9½"

In an entire afternoon the reporter found only one ray of hope. That was on the stage. New York actresses have the biggest salaries and small feet. They have the biggest salaries and the smallest feet in the world. (In setting this story to music, strike the lyre here.)—New York World.

Scott County's Meteorite.



That a "part of the meteor as big as a house" fell in Elkhorn Creek, or in a flooded ravine near Elkhorn, where, because of the swollen waters, it could not be visited and inspected, is an impression of an observer.

Although the popular idea that solid masses fell from the sky when meteors were seen is so old that the "black stone" suspended in the Kaaba in Mecca is reputed meteorite, and the Palladium of Troy also was, astronomers would not until recently accept the theory that "shooting stars," "fire balls" and other similar phenomena were solids. The scientists were wrong, and finally admitted it, after the "shower of stones" in Northern France in 1803, which, upon investigation, proved to be a fact.

Meteorites, according to modern scientists, are solids which traverse space at thirty miles or so a second and their burning is caused by the friction with the air which is created by the rapidity of their movement. A body moving through the air at a mile a second becomes red hot by friction, and a meteorite's speed brings it into incandesence, at a very high temperature, melting and liquifying, or vaporizing, its surface, and thus the train of sparks or flame following a meteor is created. The speed of meteors decreases as they increase their distance from the point of projection. Usually they are traveling a comparatively slow gait, about a mile a second, when they become visible at 100 miles from the earth's surface. Their size, after reaching the ground, according to Garrett P. Serviss, varies within wide limits; some are known which weigh several tons, but a great majority weigh only a few pounds, and many only a few ounces. They seldom are visible after having descended to within five miles of the earth unless the observer happens to be near the striking point.

Should it be found to be actually true that a meteorite "as big as a house" fell in Scott county, the fact would be of interest—and the meteorite would be of interest—to astronomers all over the world. The probability is that the meteor which was seen in its swift passage before daylight on Wednesday morning disappeared from the view of the interested observer in Scott county beyond a cliff across Elkhorn, giving him the impression that he witnessed it falling in the neighborhood.—Courier-Journal.

Some of the machinery in the State Journal's office at Frankfort certainly is jumping cogs, and those who have subscribed for it through the Recorder are raising ned because of so many copies of the Journal failing to come. Some of the subs. are making life of the rural carriers miserable because of the Journal's nonappearance on time.

GRACEFUL OLD AGE.

A Woman of Fifty Should Have Acquired a Few Compensations.

Being not so young as you were is not all loss. If maturity of years is an ailment then youth is another. To be fifty years old is to have made a fairly complete recovery from the ailment of youth, and that is no small achievement. It is not everybody that does it. The person who remembers statistics will tell you what proportion of us struggling mortals succumbs to youth and its mischances and hardships. It is a large proportion. The rapids of the river of life, the rockiest places, the swiftest descents, are apt to be up stream. To have passed them all and get down into the calmer levels of the fifties is a feat that justifies a good many comfortable thoughts.

Women especially who have had full measure of youthful beauty part with it usually with sighs and reluctance. Gray hair seldom pleases them; they don't like wigs; the "ravages of time" are real and sad to them, and they repair them with diligence and what skill they may command. Beauty in a woman is power. To be noticed and admired and courted for it is no doubt a very considerable stimulation and entertainment not to be indifferently parted with and not in all cases offset by gains in authority or the tribute of deference that is paid to character or the tribute of love that comes to unselfishness and gentleness and power of sympathy. What a woman loses by the years in freshness of physical beauty she ought more than to make up in wisdom that comes from living, in the fuller understanding of people and of life, in all the kinds of knowledge in self possession and increased skill in the arrangement and discharge of the parts of speech. So it does happen with able women who have had a chance to develop and who have lived good lives. They are vastly more interesting at fifty than at twenty two, and many of them are lovelier to look at. But beauty comes readymade, and those maturer attractions have to be earned, and not all women earn them.—Harper's Magazine.

The Old Locust Tree.

Few of the readers of the RECORDER, who pass by the large tree on the Lexington pike as they enter the town of Florence, realize the interesting fact that this is the largest Locust tree in our county, and, perhaps, the largest in the state. The tree is fifteen feet in circumference one foot above the ground, and measures 50 feet from the highest twig to the ground. It is not known just how old the tree is. It is estimated the tree is a century and half old. It is one of the old landmarks and the pride of out little village.

RIDES EIGHT LONG MILES IN DARK WITH LUNATIC SOLDIERS

American Auto Ambulance Driver Dodges Vehicles on Congested French Road While Trench-Crazed Man Grabs at Steering Wheel When Not Fighting Mate—"Thank You Very Much for the Ride," Says Maniac at the End of the Journey.

Paris.—A correspondent of the New York Sun has received the following letter from a member of the American ambulance corps at the front:

"I was on duty last Sunday at S——, a typical French front town just behind the woods in which most of the fighting of the section is carried on. There the two ambulances on the watch were lined up in the usual place at the telephone bureau along the side of the road most protected against sudden shrapnel bombardments. Shrapnel shells explodin into the street usually land their cont nts into the side of the street facin the German lines.

"All was quiet in th trenches; only an occasional crack of a rifle, the sharp detonation of a grenade now and then and a constant far away booming denoting an attack in a distant 'secteur.'

"Darkness had settled without any wounded being brought in. This was unusual. The 'poste secours' of the various regiments along the street were empty save for a few sick soldiers being held over until the light of the early morning. An ugly rain had set in, making difficult the run of eleven kilometers in total blackness without even the guidance of a feeble oil lamp among the never ending wagons and contrivances of the road. It appeared unnecessarily long to the men in the vehicles, who were those not needing attention at the hospitals back.

Stealing a Little Sleep.

"We turned into the telephone bureau to get what sleep we could, using stretchers from our cars. The blanket rolls unfolded over these, making beds not half bad. Before retiring the men take off their shoes, leggings and coats.

"The incessant rumble of wagon wheels and the rattle and clink of chains outside were beginning to blend with the distant booming in the other 'secteur' as I drowsed when I was awakened by the telephone bell. 'Brancardiers' at P——, a dressing station about a kilometer on the other side of town at the edge of the woods, were calling for an ambulance.

"'C'est urgent,' said the operator, and then rang off. They had replied that it was pressing.

"After a quarter of an hour's driving I arrived at the post. It was necessary to go exceedingly slow and stop frequently to avoid running into something in the blackness. At the post two 'brancardiers' came out to meet me.

"A door opened on the side away from the trenches, throwing enough light on the road to turn the car round. I walked toward the door to see if the wounded were inside, or still on the road down, as is often the case. Before I had gone far the attendants came up and solemnly placed their fingers over their lips.

"'Grave?' I asked.

Surprised by the "Wounded."

"They replied yes, and pointed through the door. Inside were two soldiers sitting on a bench facing us. That was all. As we came in one of the soldier said 'bon soir' and smiled.

"The 'brancardiers' then told me the men were violently insane and they were under orders to send them to the rear immediately. They had been rendered mad by the fire of the day, they said, and were not to be trusted to be in the same party with wounded.

"'Make them lie inside the car,' they said, 'and they'll be all right for you.'

"However, not wishing a mixup on the eight-mile stretch back, I thought it better to have one fellow lie on a stretcher inside and the other one ride on the seat with me. The soldier who had bidden me a good evening got inside willingly enough, and lay down. We got the other soldier on the seat after several minutes of inducing. He seemed to have an idea he was about to be taken prisoner.

"The two 'brancardiers,' and a couple of others I had not seen before gave me their best wishes as I left. Later, I concluded that they shook hands among themselves when I disappeared in the darkness.

"The run back to S—— was made without incident. The soldiers remained quiet. Then began the tedious run to the hospital at F——, eight miles back. The night was exceptionally dark and it was difficult to see my hands on the steering wheel.

Road Clogged by Vehicles.

"The 'ravitaillement' was still on the road up. Wagons of every description, some drawn by six or eight horses, jogged by on the other side of the road, one upon the other. Sometimes there was a break of several hundred feet in the line, and at times transports rushed by with a sickening clanking of chains and rumbling of massive wheels, running with more than average rate to catch up to those in front. Occasionally a heavy transport laden with ammunition, en route to some battery in the woods and driven by as many as ten powerful steeds, thundered past in the middle of the road or on the left side to pass the slower moving vehicles.

"Frequently these monsters of the road came close to collision with the frail ambulance. Sometimes a driver, far in front, contrary to rules, lighted a match and the thing flared over the country like an arc light. In order to drive at all it was necessary to blow the horn constantly and hug the right side of the road as closely as safety allowed.

Madman Becomes Restless.

"At the village of H——, half way to the hospital, the madman on the seat grew restless. He began to add to my troubles by grabbing the wheel at unexpected intervals, turning the car from its course. After each occasion he gave a gurgle of approval and muttered something in a dialect I did not understand, but evidently getting more amusement out of it than I. He was a little fellow and I did not fear him physically.

"After several sudden lurches, when grabbing the wheel seemed to be becoming a habit with him, I began to pat him on the back and look anxiously in the direction of the hospital, about three miles away. I was afraid the fellow in me might make trouble.

"Once, on losing the sense of direction, after being turned from my course, I stopped and dismounted to find the right of the road. Several feet in advance of the car I walked into something hard. I discovered a wagon stationary on the road a short distance in front with a load of long raillike burs projecting over the rear end.

"Suddenly there was a big blaze of light from the back. I stopped short, wondering what had happened. Looking back through a window in the canvas body of the car I saw the soldier inside crouching on the stretcher holding about half a box of lighted matches in his hands. He was trying to light a cigarette.

"With his face toward the floor of the car he raised the score or so of burning matches to his mouth. Instantly there was a sizzle of mustache, a loud cough and grunt, and the lunatic frantically threw the flaming sticks over the car.

——Lunatic Lit His Cigarette.

"I jumped off and ran back to prevent the flames from spreading. When I got around the passenger inside was puffing nonchalantly at a cigarette as though nothing had happened.

"But the other fellow was gone. After a few minutes search I was about to give up when I heard a confusion of voices within the ambulance. Hastening to the back again I saw that my friend had made his way into the car without my noticing it and the two were now arguing in dangerous voices on different subjects. After agreeing to many things I finally got the fellow back on the seat with me and we continued.

"The two remained quiet until within a quarter mile of the hospital. At this point the road branches off up a long winding hill. Taking the road the car lurched sharply over a gutter. Probably the soldier inside had been looking out of the little window in the canvas at the front of the car for as the car lurched I felt him brush roughly against our backs to the side.

"Immediately he seemed to have an idea that his companion was at fault, and instantly drove his fist into the canvas, catching the soldier on the seat in the back. The rest of the trip was lively enough, while the maniac in front alternately tried to jump off and sink his elbow into the canvas at his companion the latter pounded a hole through the canvas to reach him.

Busy With the Maniacs.

"On the road near the point we had reached a sentinel is stationed day and night to guard the country beyond the hill, which again leads to the lines. Directly before reaching him a road branches sharply to the left. It leads to the back of the hospital, where the ambulances go to discharge their loads.

"The sky had cleared a little, showing enough road in advance to make better speed. I lost little time in covering the last stretch. The sentinel was evidently new to our ambulances, for as the car rushed up without slackening pace he fixed his bayonet and danced over the road, thinking I was about to rush by, and wildly commanding me to halt. I disregarded him, absorbed with struggling maniacs, and skidded into the side road within a few feet of his bayonet. Later, I wondered that he did not shoot.

"As I pulled into the hospital yard I noticed the madmen's fighting had ceased and I breathed a sigh of relief. The soldier on the seat dismounted, took his pack and stood waiting without saying a word, while I explained to the 'brancardiers.'

"When I went to the back of the car to help the other soldier out he was gone. Looking around the yard, he was nowhere in sight. I found him chattering to a wild-eyed sentinel who was still wondering what had happened. How he escaped uninjured I do not know. I led my late acquaintance over to the yard, decile once more.

"'Thank you very much for the ride. Good night!' he called after me as I left on the return."

FARM MACHINERY WASTE

More machinery rusts out than wears out. More machinery is thrown away on account of a few parts giving out than because of the wearing out of the entire machine.

Who pays the bill?

Who keeps the many large machinery concerns in business?

The farmer.

When other lines of business are slack or dead, there is practically no decrease in the manufacture of farm machinery, because the farmer is a steady buyer and always in the field for another machine or for some new type of farm machine.

How waste may be stopped:

1. By more careful selection.
2. By buying from reliable dealers and manufacturers.
3. By keeping machinery in repair.
4. By sheltering machinery when not in use.—F. M. White, University of Wisconsin Bankers' Bulletin.

CONTROLLING FLOW OF MILK

Cow Is Necessarily Delicate Piece of Mechanism—Nervous System Must Be Developed Highly.

There are many conditions that may affect the flow of milk from the dairy cow. Part of these may be controlled by man and part cannot. It should always be borne in mind that an animal capable of consuming large quantities of grass or rough feed and turning it out in the form of milk must necessarily be a delicate piece of mechanism. The nervous system must therefore be developed very highly.

Milk secretion is involuntary, but may be affected indirectly by several factors. Incomplete and irregular milking and long periods between milking, even the presence of a stranger or a dog is sufficient to affect the milk flow of many cows. Such practices as sending the dog after the cows at milking time should never be encouraged, as it is a regular source of excitement and irritation.

WOOD HOLDER FOR SAWBUCK

Log Held Tightly by Means of Chain Attached to Lever—Comfortable Position for Sawyer.

Sawing wood on a buck is a very fatiguing job because the leg, in holding the log in the crotch of the buck, is in a very unnatural position. With an improvement on the ordinary sawbuck, as shown in the illustration from Popular Mechanics, the foot is placed almost on a level with the ground in a position as if standing in front of the buck, not only making a natural and comfortable position, but also causing the log to be held much more firmly and without effort.

A piece of hard wood is nailed firmly on the two back legs of the buck near the bottom, a heavy eyebolt is screwed into it in the center and a chain attached. The chain should be long enough to reach over the largest log and down to the ground in front of the buck. A lever is hinged to the hardwood crosspiece near the center and extends to the front side of the buck. A hook is fastened in the front end of the lever in which to hook the links of the chain.

A log is placed in the crotch of the buck in the usual manner and the chain is brought over the log and a link placed in the hook of the lever while the latter is raised several inches from the ground. The lever is then pressed down by the foot and the sawing started.

GANG PLOW IN GREAT FAVOR

Large Number of Implements Have Been Introduced in Recent Years —All Give Satisfaction.

No farming implement of the larger capacity is more favorably regarded than the gang plow. It is a satisfaction to note that in recent years a large number of these plows have been introduced and all are giving excellent satisfaction.

The usual types carry either 12-inch or 14-inch bottoms. The plows do good work and can be set to run as deep as may be desired.

In the absence of a tractor four horses are hitched on to a single gang, but if the ground is hard five are better, using the strung-out hitch and having three in the rear and two in front.

The latter hitch is entirely practicable and with two lead horses in the furrow it is possible to do accurate plowing.

Gauge of Milk Production.

Food is the only material from which a cow can make milk, therefore, the right kind of food and as much of it as the cow will properly use, will be the gauge of milk production.

The KITCHEN CABINET

We have most extraordinary powers of persuasion when they are exercised over ourselves.—Dickens.

The hardest and best borne trials are those which are never chronicled in any earthly record and are suffered every day.—Ibid.

OUT OF ORDINARY RECIPES.

For a simple pudding, this will appeal to the thrifty housewife:

Mountain Dew Pudding.—Add two beaten yolks to a pint of rich milk, three tablespoonfuls of grated cocoanut, teaspoonful of lemon juice and a quarter of a cupful of sugar. Mix and bake a half hour in a moderate oven. When firm and brown, cover with a meriugue made of the whites of the eggs, well beaten and sweetened with three tablespoonfuls of sugar. Set in a slow oven to brown.

Frozen Pudding.—Beat the yolks of six eggs until light, add a sirup made of two cupfuls each of sugar and water, boiled together five minutes. Beat a moment, take from the fire and beat until thick, smooth and cold; add a quart of cream, a teaspoonful of vanilla and partly freeze, then add a pint or less of chopped fruit which has stood two hours in orange juice.

Broule.—Take two quarts of fresh rich milk, add two cupfuls of sugar, eight eggs, beaten well, one cupful of brown sugar, caramelized, a teaspoonful of vanilla, a half teaspoonful of salt. Scald the milk, add the caramelized sugar and, when it is dissolved, add the rest of the sugar and the eggs. Freeze and stand to ripen at least an hour before serving.

Olive Salad.—Peel olives to remove stones, roll up around a piece of blanched almond. Cover with a French dressing when sufficient olives have been prepared and add a generous handful of chopped mint. Let stand over night to season. Drain the dressing in the morning and add fresh mint when serving the salad. This is good for sandwich filling.

Peanut Salad.—Soak a cupful of nuts in olive oil, drain and mix with two cupfuls of cut celery and a dozen chopped olives. Mix with mayonnaise and serve on lettuce. Serve ripe peaches with whipped cream and browned, chopped almonds, for a most dainty dessert.

Tongue served with raisin sauce is a dish which is nice enough to serve one's particular guests.

A new and curious malady has broken out in the Hiseville country among the stray dogs, yellow dogs and any old dog. About the commonest sight to behold in that section is a dead dog lying around at any old time and at any old place. From some unknown cause and reason, the dogs are dying by the wholsale and what disease or "what means" is sending them to "dog heaven" is not known. Some "dead 'uns" are seen by the roadside; some are found in the back yards and some lay down and die in the front yard. That part of the county will soon be rid of their canines if the dog death rate keeps up much longer.—Glasgow Times.

SWARMS WITH SPIES

Baltic Ports Crowded With Agents of Many Nations.

Heroes, Too, Smugglers, Exchange Gamblers and Fugitives Are There —Many Women in Throngs of Secret Workers.

Stockholm.—Just now the Baltic is the sea of adventure. Normally it is a dull, insipid sea. After war began the Baltic woke up a little, but its business was limited by Grand Admiral Tirpitz's command of the sea. Now about ten British submarines, backed by some Russian submarines, have awakened the ordinarily quiet waters. All Baltic ports are nests of espionage, adventure, patriotic heroism and roguery, chiefly the last named.

Stockholm ignores the war, but it is full of Russian and German jobbers who gamble in exchange. Copenhagen is the chief center of German espionage. The saloons and fourth-rate hotels are thronged with German agents. Libau, since Von Hindenburg captured it last summer, is the headquarters of a German motorboat corps which does scouting in Riga gulf. Hernosand, Oxelosund and other small Swedish eastern ports are the homes of scores of marooned German merchant captains whose ships have been torpedoed or bottled up.

The liveliest places are Haparanda and Tornea, frontier townlets on the Tornea Elf river, which divides Sweden from Russian Finland. These townlets, 30 miles from the Arctic circle, are crowded with spies, contraband smugglers and fugitive prisoners. The Russian gendarme Colonel Abassoff discovered two German spies in Tornea recently. With six gendarmes he pursued the suspects to Karungi, further up the river, and besieged them in a house. After a two hour battle the two Germans and four Russians lay dead.

In coming here from Copenhagen, via Malmo, one has to cross the sound, the entrance gate of the British submarines. The sound is an international waterway, but it is also territorial, being less than three miles across at the narrowest point. The Swedes own the east side and the Danes the west. The other entrances, the Great and Little Belt, which are entirely owned by Denmark, were mined against submarines in October, 1914.

Danes and Swedes could not agree about mining the sound. The Swedes regret this, for the submarines have disturbed the halcyon calm of the Baltic and injured Sweden's trade with Germany.

After England had got at least four submarines through, Germany mined the sound. Mines were planted in a big triangular patch in the south and German patrol boats were set to watch it. At least two English submarines have got between or under the mines and more may come any day.

From the Malmo steamer could be seen Germany's tremendous measures against submarines. South of the mine field, on the horizon, is a forest of masts and funnels belonging to the big flotilla of cruisers, gunboats, armed trawlers and motor patrol boats. Their business is to watch for and destroy submarines that get past the mines. Ahead of the flotilla flew a hydroplane. The Malmo steamer captain said that when he had sailed a boat south a few days before he had counted about fifty German craft of different kinds all on the lookout. From the sound down to the broad water between Sweden and Rugen island every mile of sea has a small German warship on the watch.

At Copenhagen the police brought aboard for transit to Russia an alleged spy. In the Baltic ports are swarms of purely military and naval spies who serve belligerent governments, many "trade spies," and large numbers of spies of the neutral Baltic powers whose work is to spy on spies.

The trade spies, all British, haunt commercial ports. Their function is to collect facts about Scandinavian firms' trade with Germany, which firms trade, what they sell and to whom. London takes care that overseas goods consigned to Scandinavian firms which trade with Germany do not reach the firms. The trade spies pose as language teachers or drummers. Many have been expelled.

Milé. Assanovitch, a handsome, black-eyed Russian girl, who, posing as governess, spied on a great scale, was expelled recently. The spies who spy on spies are mostly Swedish. They watch all foreigners, particularly those who speak English. Two days after an Englishman reached Stockholm he visited a dentist. Half an hour later an agent telephoned to the dentist to ask who his patient was.

Copenhagen is the center of the false passport business. Danes point to the Cosmopolite hotel and say: "There can be had passports of any nationality." The false passport business was started in order to save Russians from capture by German cruisers.

Indians Full Citizens.

Pierre, S. D.—It is reported from Cheyenne reservation that more than seventy-five Indians on that reserve will be reported as competent to be given full citizenship and title to their property. With this privilege the Indian obtains all the rights and has placed upon him the responsibility of any other citizen of the state, including the payment of taxes.

ALL SHE HAD TO DO

By KEITH KENYON.

It just happened that day that everything had been going to the everlasting bowwows, as Hampden himself expressed it through his clenched teeth. The New York wires were delayed on account of the storm and even on the local line it was almost impossible to get a clear, connected message through.

"Central!" he called. "Central! What's the matter with this wire, anyhow? I've been hanging on to the end of the line for an hour trying to get a number."

"Wires down below Grand Indian," she answered pleasantly. "Kingston does not respond."

Hampden muttered something which sent both places hurtling merrily after Sodom and Gomorrah's fate, and called again.

"Look here. I've got to catch New York tonight before six. It's more than my luck that hangs on it. There's a fellow down there who may commit suicide tonight if he doesn't get my word that things are all right, see? I got a letter—hello, hello! Don't cut me off, please—"

"I'm listening," said Central.

"He thinks he was ruined in a plunge of stock this morning, and I've got over half of his cash safe, see? Pulled it out with my own on yesterday's sales. My wife's sick up here, and I had to come. He thinks I got cold feet and ran away. Now, we've got to get word to him at once that he's all right. You and I have got to put this through or there's going to be one dead boy down there by morning. Take a message, can you, and get it through by telegraph anywhere along the line?"

"Hold the wire. I'll see," said Central.

Hampden held it, frowning out at the trees, crystal white with ice and snow.

"Hello, just a minute, please," she called back. "I think we can get it through by way of Newburgh. Newburgh seems to respond."

Newburgh did respond. The wires that way were all up. When the connection was made, his voice sounded husky to him as he got the office and asked for Ted.

"Why, he's just left, sir," the boy at the switch answered. "Maybe I can catch him in the hall." There was a pause and something seemed to break before Hampden's eyes like a great noiseless skyrocket. His brain grew numb except for the pain through his shoulder and he slipped limply to the floor.

Back in New York, Ted turned moodily from the elevators and followed the boy to the phone booth. His head throbbed with pain. He hated New York, Hampden, fate, everything. All he wanted was to get out of it. Then the girl at the end of the wire held him. Her voice was beautiful, sweet, cheery, most of all full of human interest.

"Hello, is this Mr. Curtis? This is Central at Grand Indian. Long distance reports Mr. Hampden who was calling you fails to respond. I have his message. Ready?"

"Ready," answered Ted eagerly.

"His wife is sick. That is why he was called here suddenly. Wishes me to state that he took your money out of the market yesterday with his own with profit on sales. Over half safe. Come to Grand Indian, New York, at once. Signed, Hampden."

When the night train pulled into Grand Indian, a tall figure in a storm ulster swung off and into the little station. He made straight for the desk, but the ticket agent said the telegraph room was upstairs.

"She lives there," he added. "Miss Hewitt. Just knock on the door. She's up till twelve."

Ted took the narrow stairs in three steps and rapped on the door quickly. He had made up all sorts of speeches on the way to this girl who had given him the word of good cheer, but when the door opened and he saw her standing there, all he could do was to reach out his hand and say:

"I'm Curtis, Ted Curtis. I wanted to thank you for hauling me up here. How's Mr. Hampden?"

"Better." She smiled up at him in the friendliest way. Her white sweater was buttoned close to her chin, and her hair was rumpled as if she had been sleeping, but her eyes were bright and happy as she looked at him, "sizing him up," as Ted himself would have expressed it. "He must have had some sort of a shock following nervous strain, the doctor said. They haven't told his wife yet. They're both coming out of it all right. I called up twice after you left New York to make sure. You see, he had already given his message when he fell, so all I had to do was push it through and get you. Only I did put in for you to come at once."

All she had to do. Ted simply stared at her. Did she know just what a fool he had been, just the sort of a quitter it was that wrote the letter up to Hampden, just how it had been her call at the end of the wire that had pulled him back to sanity and love of life, the realization that up there in the mountains somewhere there was a girl with a voice like that who could make New York look like thirty cents in the big reckoning.

"I'm going right up to the house now," he said. "I'll get the station hack to pull me through somehow, but I'm coming back to see you."

IN THE SCHOOL LUNCH

SANDWICHES NECESSARILY PLAY AN IMPORTANT PART.

So Great a Variety Is Possible That the Children Will Not Soon Tire of Them—Some Substitutes for Meat.

Well-prepared sandwiches should form an important part of every school lunch. They are easily made and should be very wholesome and palatable. Variety is the spice of life here as elsewhere, and there should be at least two kinds of sandwiches in each lunch. The number and kind may be varied from day to day.

Cut the bread for sandwiches into thin slices of uniform thickness with a sharp knife, and spread the butter evenly over both slices of bread in order to keep it moist and prevent any fruit filling that may be used from making the sandwiches soggy or indigestible. Sandwiches made several hours before they are to be eaten should be wrapped in a moist cloth and kept in a cool place, or wrapped in wax paper, to prevent them from drying or absorbing odors.

In giving these directions for making sandwiches, Miss Bab Bell of the University of Missouri, college of agriculture, says little about meat sandwiches because most people are familiar with the ordinary ham sandwich, and in many cases such meat substitutes as peanut butter, eggs or cheese should be used instead of the more expensive meats.

Here are some good sandwich materials:

Bread and Butter.—Cut the bread in thin slices. Spread the butter evenly on both slices and press together.

Lettuce.—Make a bread-and-butter sandwich and place a leaf of crisp lettuce, washed and thoroughly dried, between the two slices. Put a teaspoonful of mayonnaise dressing on the lettuce leaf.

Nuts.—Make a lettuce sandwich, spread one side with nuts, chopped fine, and mixed with good dressing.

Chicken.—Chop cold boiled chicken and moisten with mayonnaise dressing. Spread between bread. Add a lettuce leaf.

Eggs.—Chop the whites of hard boiled eggs very fine. Mix the yolks with mayonnaise dressing and season with pepper and salt. Add the whites and spread between bread. Lettuce may be used also.

Dates.—Make a filling of one-half cupful of stoned dates, one-half cupful of sweet cream; spread between slices of buttered bread.

Pimento and Cheese.—Make a filling of one-half cupful of cream cheese and one-fourth cupful of chopped pimento, two tablespoonfuls salad dressing, salt and pepper. Spread on butter evenly. Cottage cheese may be used or the pimento may be left out.

Peanut Butter.—Peanuts ground and mixed with a salad dressing make an excellent filling. The commercial peanut butter may also be used. Spread evenly between buttered bread. A crisp lettuce leaf adds to the attractiveness of this sandwich.

Beef Patties.

Take thick slices of bread—a week old if it can be obtained—make them the desired form and size with a tin cutter; scoop out the middle to receive the mince; dip each piece of bread into cream and when drained brush them with the white of egg; dredge bread crumbs or bread rasps over them; fry in good fresh butter, then fill them with the following mince, made hot: Shred one pound undercooked beef, a little fat and lean together; season with pepper or cayenne, salt and a little onion or shallot.

Cocoanut Custard Pudding.

One-half cupful prepared cocoanut, two cupfuls milk, one-quarter cupful sugar, one cupful breadcrumbs, yolk one egg, a little nutmeg, one teaspoonful butter. Soak cocoanut and breadcrumbs in milk an hour. Bake about an hour. Frost with white of one egg beaten, two tablespoonfuls powdered sugar and one tablespoonful cocoanut. Brown slightly in oven.

Orange Trifle.

One teasponful gelatin, one-fourth cupful boiling water, one-fourth cupful cold water and three-fourths cupful of cream whipped, one-half teaspoonful lemon juice, grated rind of one-half orange. Soak gelatin in cold water, add sugar and fruit juices, strain in chilled bowl, cool, beat until it begins to thicken, fold in beaten cream and mold.

Keeping Yeast.

Where convenient purchase yeast cakes just before using. However, the yeast will remain fresh and sweet for a week or ten days if kept in a cool, dry place, preferably a refrigerator. A slight discoloration has no effect on the quality of yeast. If it is firm, it is suitable for use—if too soft to handle, it must be used.

Macaroon Pudding.

Yolks of four eggs, add two-thirds quart of cold milk, one cupful sugar and two tablespoonfuls gelatin dissolved; stir the mixture over the fire until it boils, beat the whites of eggs until stiff and flavor with vanilla. Put all in a mold and throw macaroons in the mixture.

When Baking Potatoes.

Butter potatoes when putting them into the oven to bake, as the fat softens the skin and makes a more attractive vegetable to serve.

The Money or No Bills.

Governor Stanley has notified a number of the members of the Legislature, who have called to consult him concerning the passage of certain measures, that these bills calling for revenue must be suspended until the revenue is provided.

It is a wise rule of action. If the Governor can establish it in the face of constant pressure to consent to legislation involving expenditures without a new tax rate, he will render the State a very great service and relieve his administration of innumerable difficulties.

One of the most unfortunate features of State government in Kentucky is that we have for years gone on expanding the expenses and then trying to conceal the fact from the taxpayers by making no addition to the tax rate. The result is that we have a debt of two millions or more, which ought not to have been created.

Many of the bills that are involving us in most of these difficulties would never have been passed if the promoters had to stand up and plead for a special tax to cover those expenses. If our philanthropists, our promoters of what is called social welfare, our reformers generally, have not faith enough in their own works, in their own measures, in their own bills, to call for a tax to meet fully the estimated expenditures, then they should abandon those measures and turn their attention to other things.—Louisville Post.

After a man has taken out an accident insurance policy his wife thinks it a waste of money if nothing happens to him.—Chicago News.

Money talks. That is why they put a woman's head on the silver dollar.

Mrs. Thos. McElroy has been ill the past week but is now better.

Mrs. T. F. Chambers spent last week in Cincinnati with relatives and friends.

Mrs. Mattie V. Doubman has been confined to her home the past week with lagrippe.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Vest of Verona, were guests of his brother Jno. L. Vest and wife Sunday.

Harry Simmons opened a moving picture show at Glencoe last week with tri-weekly exhibitions.

Richard Best of Bracken county, spent last week here, the guest of his son Chas. T. Best and family.

Thos. Griffin has bought a Gray gas engine from Robert W. Jones to use in his shoe repair shop.

Miss Alpha Hance who has been quite ill with bronchial affection for several weeks is much improved.

Mrs. Mamie Smith and little son Allen of Covington, spent Saturday and Sunday here the guest of A. W. Smith.

Edmund M. Johnson is canvassing the territory about Visalia in the interest of the Farmers Nursery Co., of Troy, Ohio.

Robt. W. Jones, our popular druggist, spent the past week in Louisville the guest of his brother Dr. R. M. Jones and family.

Howard Ameigh of Addison, N. Y., has accepted a position as stenographer in the law office of J. G. Tomlin and Jno. L. Vest.

Mrs. Chas. Best spent part of the week at Alexandria with her husband who is canvassing that territory for the sale of nursery stock.

E. K. Stephens was confined to his home a part of last week on account of illness, and during his absence his grocery store was managed, by A. R. Johnson and Thos. Percival.

Miss Martha Rouse who has been quite ill at Asheville, North Carolina returned home here last week. Her brother Clifford Rouse went there to assist her home as she was very weak.

Chester Rice who has been the bookkeeper for the G. W. Maines Lumber Co., has accepted a similar position with the Fourth National Bank of Cincinnati, and began his duties there Monday.

Rev. Olus Hamilton, of Louisa, Lawrence county, preached for the congregation of the Walton Baptist church with a view to having them to call him to take charge of the church as pastor.

J. W. Houston, Superintendent of bridges and buildings on the L. & N. Railroad, has been confined to his home several days with a severe cold bordering on pneumonia, but he is now much improved.

Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Strickland of Atlanta, Ga., spent Sunday here the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Tompkins. Both gentlemen are traveling salesmen for the same firm, the Graf-Morsbach Harness Co., of Cincinnati.

Dr. W. W. Evans who has been confined to his home the past three weeks with lagrippe, is much improved and will soon be able to be about. Dr. Evans has many friends who have missed his genial presence and hope he will be soon restored to health.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Walton Christian church met with Mrs. Geo. W. Ransler at her hospitable home last Thursday afternoon and elected officers for the ensuing year as follows: President, Miss Alpha Hance; V-President, Mrs. Scott Chambers; Secretary, Mrs. B. K. Menefee; Treasurer, Mrs. A. N. Jones.

The cold weather that made its appearance in this quarter Monday was by far the coldest we have had this winter, the thermometer showing eight degrees below zero early Monday morning. Ice formed to sufficient thickness on the ponds to furnish excellent skating facilities for those who enjoy this exhiliarating sport, and quite a large number availed themselves of the opportunity.

H. F. Wood of Napoleon, Gallatin county, was here last Tuesday arranging for the purchase of building material with which to rebuild his store building at Napoleon which was destroyed by fire last Saturday night. The origin of the fire is a mystery, but it is the belief that the store was robbed and afterwards set on fire, as the door of the safe was found blown off and lying on the ground. Mr. Woods carried $700 insurance on the lower story of the building in the Home Company of New York, and $900 insurance on the stock of goods in the Henry Clay of Lexington, Ky. The upper story of the building was owned by the Odd-Fellows Lodge and it was insured for $900. Mr. Woods' residence near by was not damaged to any degree worth mentioning. Mr. Woods expects to rebuild the store room at once and the Odd-Fellows and the Junior Order expect to join him and erect a second story on the building for the lodge purposes.

To induce the younger generation to make a showing in the agricultural work, C. L. Griffith started a movement to offer prizes for the best samples of corn, making the offer to give a high bred Poland China gilt, big type, for the best acre of corn raised by a boy under 16 years, during the year 1916, Jacob F. Cleek supplemented the offer by agreeing to give a fine Durbe Jersey calf for a similar purpose and under the same conditions. Both gifts are valued at $20 each and are thoroughbred. Mr. Griffith advocates the teaching of agriculture in the schools, the planting of shade trees for the comfort of the people and to beautify the landscape, and the continuous discussion of the upkeep of the public highways. D. B. Wallace also agrees to donate $20 for premiums on best tobacco samples raised during 1916. The entire matter to be under the direction of a County Farm Agent, and the chief object is to have a county farm agent, which Boone county is so greatly in need of if we intend to keep up with the progressive class in agriculture. The writer who owns a 200 acre farm in Grant county would not take $100 for the benefits derived from the services of the Grant County Agent. D. H. Fullerton in advice about soil, crops, live stock, etc., on the farm which he visited at various times.

A Narrow Escape from Fire

The residence of Harry Simmons narrowly escaped destruction by fire last week, originating from a peculiar source. Some matches were in a bureau drawer and mice gnawing them for the phosphorus ignited the matches and a good sized blaze resulted before discovered and extinguished.

Peter Pan's Demise is Mourned

"Peter Pan" the little poodle dog belonging to Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Stephens was poisoned last week by eating some poisoned food, in all probability placed on the street by someone who desired to deplete the dog population. The dog was a great pet with Mr. and Mrs. Stephens, and they were considerably distressed by its death.

A High-Class Entertainment

The entertainment to be given at the Verona High School building next Saturday evening, Jan. 22d, for the benefit of the Civic Improvement League of that place, should be well patronized as an excellent program will be rendered consisting of music, monologues, impersonations, etc. Miss Jean Conner, of Cincinnati, an elocutionist of much merit, will head the program.

Clever Detective Work

E. P. Northcutt whose store was broken into about a week ago, caused the arrest of Gus Wilson, a young colored man who had been employed by Cloyd Powers, last Wednesday afternoon and when taken into custody the negro was wearing the pair of felt boots taken from the store. The arrest was made by Constable Thos. Johnson on a warrant issued by 'Squire John C. Bedinger, and was the result of some very clever detective work on the part of E. P. Northcutt, who contended that the robbery was committed by a man and a woman. Wilson's wife had gone to Georgetown and Mr. Northcutt caused her detention there and found in her possession a trunk containing the balance of the stolen goods. Constable Johnson and Mr. Northcutt went to Georgetown and brought the woman back Friday when Wilson and his wife were given a preliminary trial before 'Squire Bedinger, who appointed J. G. Tomlin as attorney to defend the accused, and after a complete hearing Wilson and his wife were bound over to the Boone Circuit Court in the sum of $300 each and being unable to execute bond they were remanded to jail at Burlington. Sheriff W. D. Cropper coming over in his auto and taking the prisoners to the county jail. Both negroes came here from the south during the railroad construction work on the Q. & C. double tracking.

Splendid Farmers

The Neumeister family are among our very best citizens, being public spirited, enterprising, progressive, industrious, and all that constitutes up-to-date people. But as farmers they rank with the very best and their crops bear this stamp. It is a pleasure to see these things about them because they demonstrate to others what successful farming means and in addition by the example they stimulate many to improve conditions on the farm and produce the best which means the greatest profit on the farm. Ed. Neumeister raises some very fine fruit and he gets the highest market price for it because it is worth it. Recently the State Agricultural Department arranged to have a horticultural display at the Experiment Station at Lexington, and Mr. Neumeister was requested to send a sample of his apples for the show. Complying with the request he won first premium on Delicious and second premium on Black Bon, and Jno. H. Carmody, the extension horticulturist, writes that the fruit was complimented on every hand for its high color, and the beautiful display the fruit made. Mr. Neumeister sprays every one of his trees, something you could hardly get the average farmer to do if you gave him $5.00 per day, and it is not half as hard work as raising tobacco, and he sold these apples at $1.00 per bushel and that very readily.

Bond Issue Carried.

The election in Scott county Saturday on the proposition of issuing $100,000 Road Bonds, resulted in favor of the bond issue by an overwhelming majority; the total vote being 1074 in favor of the bonds, and 357 against the bonds, making 717 majority in favor of the bonds, and 120 votes more than the required two-thirds vote needed. There are 18 precincts in the county, and of these 14 voted in favor of the bonds and four precincts voted against it.

Muir's Wonderful Clock.

The famous clock of the late John Muir, the noted naturalist and explorer, which not only woke him up in the morning but dumped him out of bed; which delivered his book to him in regular sequence when he was studying and which lighted his fire in the morning, has just been presented to the Wisconsin State Historical Society's Museum at Madison, by the Wisconsin Alumni Association of Northern California.

The clock was used by Muir during his school days at Wisconsin university in the early '60s, because of his desire to work, he kept late hours and found it hard to get up. First he tried tying a string to his toe and having the janitor pull it at 5:00 a. m. This worked until some of the students nearly pulled him out of bed. Then he built a clock which would do the work.

He built a bed of pine boards with three legs, two at the head and one at the foot. The leg at the foot was in two sections and operated on an elbow. The elbow was held by a peg so that if the leg was released the bed would drop to an angle of 45 degrees. A strong cord, fastened to the peg led to the clock; on the end of the cord near the clock was a large stone. Before retiring the cord was attached to the clock and at five o'clock would do its deadly work. The noise of John falling out of bed and the falling stone awakened everyone in the building.

While teaching in a country school house he used the clock to start a fire before he arrived at school. The clock upset a tube of sulphuric acid into a mixture of chlorite of potash and sugar placed under the kindling and wood the night before. Instant combustion took place.

He also used the clock to open and shut his books when he wished to study. By arranging his books in a small car which operated on his study table they arranged themselves in a certain order and were then placed before him at a stated time by the movement of the clock.—Milwaukee Journal.

A Great Advance.

A Louisville policeman who was bitten by a dog which, examinaproved, subsequently, was a victim of rabies, has been ordered back from a furlough for preventive treatment.

The discovery of the germ of rabies was a great advance of medical science. It removed hydrophobia from the border line between fact and fancy, leaving no longer any doubt about the reality of the disease. Methods of fortunately, can be applied with hope of good results, some time after the exposure of the patient to possible infection. There is time in which to examine the dog. It is a matter of general knowledge that there is a system of preventive treatment, seemingly successful, and the element of horror which formerly attended being bitten by a possibly rabid dog is eliminated or greatly reduced. Far fewer persons have hysteria as a result of fear. Death from panic —"false rabies"—will, no doubt, be reduced to the vanishing point "Scares" resulting from the presence of a dog believed to be rabid will be transformed to common sense activity to bring the dog, dead or alive, under observation and secure definite information as to its condition. Other dogs which may have received infection from the suspected animal may be isolated and kept under observation.

Muzzling laws breed bitterness in the hearts of lovers of dogs. Because they are unpopular and are not always enforced, they do not, as a matter of American experience, bring about the extinction of rabies. But the constructive value of the discoveries of medical science with regard to the nature of the disease and preventive measures applicable after exposure, cannot be overestimated. And there is comfort for anyone who has been bitten by a rabid dog in the fact that infection may not have taken place.

In the light of scientific knowledge that is available to everyone, there is reason for prompt precautionary measures, but there is no reason for a feeling of hopelessness and terror because of having been bitten by a dog believed, or known, to be rabid.

Drew Up the Agreements.

Greenville, Ky., Jan. 13.—Something of a sensation was caused in the cases of Edgar Knight, Geo. Sturman and R. R. Knight, on trial here in connection with the alleged "possum hunter" raids at Powderly, in this county, several months ago, when Milton Clark, one of the attorneys for the defense, was called to the stand, and, on being questioned by the Commonwealth, admitted that he had presided at the meeting at which the lodge of the Amalgamated Workers of the World was formed and that he drew up the agreement.

This agreement follows the lines of other agreements in similar lodges and obligates the members to answer a summons at any time of the day or night, to stick together and not to divulge any of the secrets of the organization.

Tired ot the Prestdential Primary

Did you ever see the "dear people" get sick of anything in so short a time as they have of the presidential primary? Four years ago it was swearing everything before it. Now the leaders of every party—the Progressives no less than the old timers—are sitting up nights to devise methods of evading the spirit if not the letter, of the already enacted statutes, and as for President Wilson's elaborate proposals in this direction, made early in the Administration, neither he nor anybody else is now giving them the slightest attention. We need, in time, more responsibility in President-making rather than less, and the country seems happily to have found that out.—Boston Herald.

An eclipse of the sun, February 3d, will be partially visible all over the United States.

WALTON.

Prof. J. C. Gordon of the Walton Graded School, spent the first of the week at Pt. Pleasant attending the funeral of his brother-in-law Malchus Souther.

Geo. B. Powers, the popular real estate agent, has moved his office in with the Equitable Bank and Trust Company where he or his representative will be found at any time ready to give information relative to the buying, selling, or renting of real estate.

Geo. P. Nicholson, the clever contractor, was badly burned on the hand and arm Tuesday by the explosion of some asbestos while doing some repair work on the roof of the Baptist church. Medical attention was immediately given but Mr. Nicholson will be out of commission for a couple of weeks.

Arrangements have been made with the State Experiment Station of the Agricultural Bureau to hold a Special Dairy Institute at Walton, Saturday, March 4. Prof. T. T. Bryant and Professor W. D. Nichols, of the State University, Lexington, are preparing a splendid program for the occasion, and it is hoped that everyone interested in the dairy business will make it a point to attend.

The movement to organize agricultural clubs and have a County Agricultural Agent seems to be meeting with much approval, and in addition to the premiums offered as per last week's publication the following additional offers have been made: E. L. Goodridge, fruit trees to the value of $5, H. C. Diers, trees to the value of $10; Harry Mayhugh, Big Type Poland China gilt; J. G. Tomlin $10 cash; J. C. Bodinger, $10 cash; G. B. Powers $10 cash.

J. M. Arnold, agent for the Standard Oil Company, states that some thieves have been breaking into his oil house in the north part of town and stealing gasoline, as he has missed quite a quantity of gasoline in the past several weeks showing that the parties have been making a practice of stealing from the oil house for some time. It is quite evident that it is some one connected with an automobile as no one else would have use for such a quantity of the "juice."

Rev. Rivolette F. DeMolsey has been employed as the pastor of the Hickory Grove Baptist church in Kenton county, preaching two Sundays in the month. He is becoming quite popular with his congregations for a young preacher of limited experience, and he is making good every where he fills an appointment. Arrangements are being made to ordain Rev. DeMolsey as a minister of the gospel at the Walton Baptist church, Thursday, Feb. 22d, with an all day service, and some of the leading ministers in the church in Kentucky will participate in the exercises.

During the past week, a man apparently about sixty years old, has been roaming around the country in the neighborhood west of Piner, Kenton county, acting in a queer manner. He has been approached by several men and when asked his name gave it as Osborn. His peculiar actions lead those who have seen him to believe he is mentally unbalanced. The women and children of that section are considerably frightened and afraid to venture very far from their homes. No one seems to know him or where he came from, and if mentally unbalanced he has probably wandered from his home into that locality. When questioned he could give no lucid account of himself. He has been seen at times waving a large stick in the air and waving his hands aloft and shooting some jargon. As he seems to be harmless he has not been molested.

Owen S. Watts, who went from here to St. Cloud, Florida, several years ago to accept the position of assistant cashier in the First National Bank, has been given the position of cashier of the Farmers Bank in Petersburg, this county, and expects to arrive here about February 1st to begin the discharge of his duties. Hubert Walton, the present cashier, owns a beautiful farm, and being tired of the drudgery of the banking business, resigned to give his attention to the farm. Mr. Watts is a native of that part of Boone county, and has never been satisfied since he left the good old county and he is delighted to be able to be back with "home folks" again. He was with the Equitable Bank and Trust Company for a while and demonstrated that he would make an excellent cashier, as he has all the characteristics that spell success in a bank, and more particularly safety, as there is no question about his integrity or his prudence in handling funds belonging to a bank. Mr. and Mrs. Watts are expected in Walton next week.

Mrs. Susan Carlisle-Green, the venerable mother of Robert C. Green, of the Walton Bank and Trust Co., passed to her heavenly reward last Saturday morning about six o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Rouse with whom she had resided for several years past. Mrs. Green was eighty-two years old, and while she had been ill but a short time her death was the result of the infirmities of old age. She was born and reared in Kenton county, and her maiden name was Carlisle. The many years of her useful life was spent in this neighborhood, where she was beloved by everybody for RICHWOOD.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Carpenter were Sunday guests of Eli Carpenter.

Ben Yowell and Clarence and Robert Tanner have sold and delivered their tobacco.

Everett Dixon has returned after several weeks at a Tenn., hospital, improved in health.

Our rural mail carrier is having a hard time of it. His horses have given out on several trips but he sends out S. O. S. and after relief jogs on to Richwood.

No Evidence of Pollution.

Prof. Caywood sent a specimen of the water in the school house cistern to the State Board of Health at Bowling Green for examination for typhoid germs and he received the following: "Does that institution last Tuesday.

"We have made bacteriological examination of the sample of water submitted by you from the cistern of the Boone County High School and find absolutely no evidence of pollution of the water. You may therefore regard this cistern as perfectly safe as a source of water for drinking purposes.

Very Truly Yours.

Senator Littrell Voted Nay

State Senator Leslie C. Littrell of the Owen-Boone-Gallatin district, is proud over landing the chairmanship of the Senate Committee on Education, the one place he sought above all others, as he has always taken an active part in education. Senator Littrell aspired to the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction in 1911, but was defeated in the Democratic primary. His defeat, however, did not deter him from giving valiant service to the ticket, which goes without saying of a Democrat from "Sweet Owen." Louisville Times.

Has Seen Some Country.

Lloyd Underhill, grandson of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Tanner, is visiting his grandparents and other relatives in this neighborhood. He has just completed four years in the service of the navy. The young man has seen a great deal of the country, and recites in a most entertaining manner his experiences while in the service. He has not made up his mind as to whether he will reenlist. His term of four years in the service has been an excellent educator.

BEEF CATTLE INDUSTRY

More Attention Is Urged to Steer Classes at Stock Shows.

Whatever May Encourage Production of More and Better Beef Is of Interest to All Humanity—Breeders Merit Recognition.

The beef steer, after all, is the basis upon which the beef cattle industry is based. All the breeding, fixing and fitting of the show herds tends toward the creation of a better animal for beef. This being true, then why not pay a little more attention to the steer classes at the big stock shows? Why not increase the prizes and the classifications so as to make more of a display out of this end of the cattle business?

The breeding of fine bulls and fine cows is all right; the classification as at present defined in these shows is all right, so far as it goes; but since the end of all cattlekind is the butcher's block, it seems as though there is a lack of encouragement of the feeder and the producer of beef cattle. The carlot show of feeders and fat steers is made a feature that has carried a great deal of weight with it. This cannot be overdone; it is the practical demonstration of the influence that beef cattle breeding is having on better type, better quality, and better animal tendency to beef production.

Beef is the watchword that is being passed down the line from the breeder to the consumer. Whatever may encourage the production of better beef and more beef is of interest to all humanity. The breeder of each breed of cattle should be interested in having his breed fully represented in the steer classes The breeder who breeds and feeds so as to demonstrate his work on the practical side of cattle growing is a public benefactor, in the fullest sense of the term, and deserves the recognition of all stock associations and exhibition enterprises.—Twentieth Century Farmer.

WINTER ATTENTION TO EWES

Overcrowding Animals Heavy With Lamb Is Very Dangerous—Provide Plenty of Exercise.

In housing breeding ewes during the winter, attention must be given to the arrangements of the pens and yards. Overcrowding ewes that are heavy with lamb is very dangerous, and during the cold days, when the ewes are kept confined inside of the barn, too large a flock has a tendency to raise the temperature in the barn until they become too warm and sweaty, and when turned out in the cold they get chilled and the result is catarrh. It is also much better to keep them in small bunches of, say, twenty to forty ewes. With the smaller breeds a few more may be kept together, but with the large mutton breeds you will obtain better results by keeping fewer in a bunch. Plan to provide means for the ewes to get exercise, for breeding ewes cannot well bring vigorous lambs unless they have plenty of exercise.

BIG INCREASE IN FOOD VALUE

No Home-Grown Feed Becomes More Indispensable Than Silage When Given Fair Trial.

That the feeding value of corn is increased 40 per cent when made into silage is no longer questioned by those who are feeding it. In fact, it is not uncommon to hear farmers say that it increases the value of corn even more.

It is a well-known fact that 50 per cent of the value of the corn plant is in the stalk and leaves. Not only is it true that silage increases the value of corn, but of all other foods fed to live stock.

There is no home-grown feed which becomes more indispensable than silage when it has been given a fair trial. The greatest proof of this is the fact that farmers who have one silo are building another.

Does Prohibition Raise Taxes?

The interesting discussion on Monday afternoon on the subject, "Does Prohibition Raise Taxes?" was entered into enthusiastically by a large number of delegates. Delegates from Dawson Springs, Calhoun, Stanford, Madisonville, Central City, New Castle, Wilmore Smith's Grove, Monticello, Sturgis —all testified to the fact that taxes had not been increased, and that improvements had been extensively made and conditions bettered since these towns had been without the saloon. New Castle declared her indebtedness had been greatly reduced.

Millersburg reported new electric light plant, an improved fire department and new school buildings.

Greenville reported a "boom" in business.

Eminence has paid off indebtedness with a clean town and taxes unchanged.

Port Royal, no saloons, no jails, no town marshal.

Harrodsburg delegate reported new banks, new cold storage and ice plant, new buggy factory, new school house, white way, pavements improved and a new moral life in the town without saloons

On the other hand Hopkinsville, with twenty saloons, declared they had reached the limit in tax rates.

Ft. Thomas reported saloons and taxes raised.

Owensboro—Promise that new streets should be paid for out of city revenue—unredeemed.

Louisville—Jails full, seven hundred saloons.

Taxes at limit with twenty saloons in Henderson.

Paducah—Seventy-five blind tigers in a whisky town.

Law Shall Be Enforced Says Governor Mannin

"With the help of God and the support of the people the prohibition law and all other laws of our great state shall be rigidly enforced so long as I am governor," said Governor Manning in his New Year's greeting to the people of South Carolina.

"Many problems must be met during the year 1916. The death of the dispensary system, after a stormy life of 23 years, and the enactment of a law prohibiting the sale of alcoholic liquors, place a responsibility upon our people that can not be shirked or thrown off without grave danger. Law is the result of the demand of the people, and the people, in order that their law be properly enforced, must stand even closer togeth er and continue the fight for its enforcement, upholding and assist int those officers who are striving to do their duty without fear or favor. With the help of God and the support of the people this and all other laws of our great state shall be rigidly enforced so long as I am governor."

Out of Darkness into Light.

One of our most earnest Y. P. B. members in Boston, Massachusetts is a dear Russian girl whose name is Mary Anderson. Mary spoke a few words at the temperance rally held in Washington, D. C., on Dec. 12, 1915. In her sweet simple way she told in broken English about her country:

"For years people knew my country as 'dark Russia.' I do not blame them, for it was so dark there seemed no light at all. All you know, my country is big—with over a million and a half square miles, and one hundred and sixty million people, and all was darkness and sorrow because of vodka.

"The children had vodka given them to drink; even school children were often found drunk. At births, weddings and deaths people celebrated with vodka. The people—many of them—worked hard in the field, and then would go and spend their money for drink, and their little children would have to go hungry and often without learning in the schools.

"Every village had a shop run by the government for the sale of vodka, and I have seen the men line up before the store on Sunday mornings after the church service was over and drink until they dropped upon the sidewalk or in the gutter. Sometimes they froze, but always, unless they disturbed the peace, as you say in this country—they were allowed to lie wherever they fell.

"But now all is changed. The dark is light! You may think the change came all in a moment, when the prohibition bill was signed, but I know that for many years there have been Christians in Russia who have sacrificed everything, who have been exiled to Siberia where they have died from their heavy labors in chains, because they worked and prayed and spoke for freedom from vodka. While it took for freedom from vodka. While it took only the signing of the bill to finish the work, I am sure God has not forgotten those who gave their lives to bring this freedom to the slaves of drink.

"Before I came to your wonderful country I heard about the 'land of liberty'—but when I came and saw the slavery here I thought there must be a mistake!

"I used to be ashamed of my flag, but now I am proud because my country of Russia is free. Now I am ashamed to think these Stars and Stripes are stained."

The Owen County Board of Education has paid $2500 on out standing notes and vouchers since January 1st, 1916, and has the interest paid up on most of the unpaid notes and vouchers. Has Common "Hoss" Sense.

There has been a lot said about schools and how to run them. The writer has never taught a school, in fact he never had the opportunity to attend as much as some, but he has plenty of common old "Hoss" sense and knows what she does know as well as a full grown man, and and can tell some of the things that are being done that are not the best for the people.

While we are glad to encourage the young people, and are glad to see them forge to the front, yet we do not want to see them to it at the expense of the poor child who has no way of helping itself.

There are some "Teachers" who ought to be in school themselves. The law of Kentucky requires that one must be over the age of eighteen years before a certificate can be issued to them; the law is three years shy in our opinion. The one thing that is hurting our schools is the little girl in her short skirts, low necks and short sleeves, with no experience and less qualifications, that has been employed because she is some man's daughter who has influence in politics, or possibly religion. She ought to wait until she has attained the age that she herself can break away from silly and childish ways; then, and not until then, should she be placed in so high and responsible a position.

On the other hand, we often see the boy start out to instruct the young boys and girls who himself is nothing more than a mere child, with not even a whisker to mark him as a man.

We do not say this with any teacher in mind. Knox county has an excellent set of teachers. They are of the kind that are qualified, and are made up of people who do things, and do them right.—The Mountain Advocate.

BURY THE DEAD ANIMALS

Often when animals die on the farm no disposal is made of their carcasses other than to drag them into a field or a near-by woods, where they are left on the surface of the ground to decompose or to be eaten by buzzards, crows, dogs, and other scavengers, or animals which feed on carron.

This practice can not be too severely condemned, because it contributes seriously to the dissemination of disease germs and the perpetuation of infectious diseases

The carcasses of animals which have succumbed to infectious diseases like anthrax, hog-cholera, blackleg, etc., are charged with myriads of virulent disease germs and just as long as they remain where scavengers can reach them and portions of them can be carried away promiscuously, they are a dangerous manace over a large territory to all animals which are liable to be attacked by disease germs. Even carcasses of animals which have died from other causes than infectious diseases, unless they are disposed of in a proper way, are a source of danger. Left on the surface of the ground their odor soon invites scavengers to congregate and to bring with them the infectious material with which they may have become contaminate by eating cerrion elsewhere.

Dead animals on the farm should be buried deep enough to prevent them from being dug up again, or they should be burned. To burn large carcasses like those of dead horses and cattle is difficult and laborious and requires a large quantity of fuel. In most instances it more economical to bury them All animals which have died of infectious diseases and are buried should be covered with a heavy layer of lime before the grave is closed.

In the winter when the ground is frozen it is more difficult to dig graves than at other seasons of the year, but it is just in cold weather that disease germs remain alive and virulent longest in dead organic matter, and that scavengers travel the longest distances, have the best appetites, and are most lukely to carry disease germs on and in their bodies The extra trouble of digging graves in the winter is easily offset by the greater danger it counteracts Low temperature prevents the multiplication of disease germs, but many kinds of disease germs are not killed or deprived of their pernicious possibilities by exposure to a lower temperature than the lowest reached during an icy, arctic winter.

Everywhere farmers not only should attend to the proper and safe disposal of the bodies of their own animals which unfortunately die, but they should insist on the proper disposal of the bodies of all animals which die anywhere in the regions in which their farms are located.—U. S. Department of Agriculture.

LIME IS NOT A FERTILIZER

Applied to Soil to Correct Sourness or Acidity Where Such Exists—Some Other Effects.

(By M. F. MILLER, Missouri Experiment Station.)

There is a general impression among farmers that lime is a fertilizer. The prime reason for applying lime to the soil is to correct sourness or acidity where such exists. The legume crops, such as clover and alfalfa, do not thrive on sour soil, unless the soil is very rich. Sour soils are not well suited to the development of beneficial bacteria, which are found in the tubercles of these crops. It is mainly for the purpose of favoring the growth of these bacteria that lime is applied to soils. Ground limestone is the form of lime which is usually cheapest as a soil sweetener.

There are other effects of lime, but most of them are of less importance. Lime tends to make plant food available from the soil, although this is largely through its beneficial effect on the bacteria. In large quantities it tends to make clay soils more friable, but this effect of lime is usually observed only where the freshly water-slacked or air-slacked lime is applied in large quantities. Ground limestone has much less effect in this respect.

A fertilizer usually gives a quick response in the crop to which it is applied, provided the soil is in need of the plantfood added. Lime, on the other hand, usually has a less immediate effect, the benefit being distributed through a number of seasons. On very sour soils, however, where enough lime is added to entirely sweeten the surface of six or seven inches, the effect upon crops, particularly clover and alfalfa, is often immediate and striking.

GOOD QUALITY OF LEGHORN

Does Not Require as Much Food as Larger Breeds and Produces More Eggs the Year Round.

Poultrymen who object to the Leghorn because its carcass is not so large as the Rocks, Reds or Wyandottes must bear in mind and consider in favor of the Leghorn, the fact that on the feed required for one Red or Rock or Wyandotte, two Leghorns may be readily maintained, and that two Leghorns will furnish the table the equivalent, at least, of one fowl of the larger breeds and, in the meantime, the year round, the two Leghorns will easily produce more than three times as many eggs. With fresh eggs commanding the present high price throughout the year, the egg-producing side of the question should not be slighted or overlooked.

For one who is looking for a breed of fowls bred for business as well as beauty, the Leghorns are unequaled. They mature early, the cockerels being easily marketed for squab broilers at weight from one and a half to two pounds. Leghorn cockerels are always plump at this age when cockerels of the larger breeds are mostly frame and bone. Early maturity means early laying. Leghorn pullets lay well at four and a half to five months, being among the earliest of early breeds. Leghorns are excellent foragers, and on the other hand stand confinement well. Being active and vigorous, they are not easily overfed, therefore not prone to sickness. Leghorn eggs always run high in fertility, and the chicks are exceedingly handy and easy to rear.

PASTEURIZING MILK IN BULK

New Process Eliminates Danger of Bottle Infection—Saves Much Loss in Evaporation.

That the process of pasteurizing milk in bulk and then bottling it while hot in hot steaming bottles produces as satisfactory bacterial reductions as pasteurizing the milk in bottles, is one of the conclusions of a recent investigation which the department of agriculture has conducted on this subject.

The investigators found that the new process eliminated the danger of bottle infection and had the further advantages of saving the loss in milk caused by evaporation over the cooler and of allowing the use of ordinary cardboard caps.

DAIRY FACTS

YELLOW CREAM AND BUTTER

Experiments Show Popular Belief That Color Indicates Richness in Quality Mistaken.

The belief that a bright yellow color in milk means richness in quality is not true. Experiments conducted at the college of agriculture of the University of Missouri show that the change from the white cream and butter in winter to yellow cream and butter in spring and summer does not indicate an increased fat percentage. The very highest colored milk that a cow can give may have the lowest fat percentage. Such a condition is found in the so-called colostrum milk, the first milk that a cow gives after giving birth to a calf.

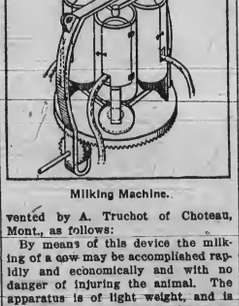
The explanation of the wide difference between the results of the experiments and the popular belief in regard to the relation of color to richness lies in the cause of the natural yellow color of cream and butter. It was found that cows were not able to produce the yellow coloring matter for their cream and butter. The coloring matter must be derived from the feed. The yellow coloring matter of milk was found to be identical with a yellow coloring matter that is widely distributed in plants and fresh grass. This coloring matter is called carotin. It takes its name from the carrot, where it is very abundant, and where it was first discovered by scientists more than one hundred years ago.

The difference in the color of cream and butter in winter and spring was found to be due to the fact that the winter feeds contain little or no carotin. No marked increase in the fat percentage accompanies the increase in color when foods rich in carotin are fed. It has been shown that the average cow gives a higher per cent of fat in its milk during the winter than in the spring and summer.

BUTTERMILK GOOD FOR CALF

Feeding Value Is Practically Same as That of Skim Milk—Some Danger of Tuberculosis.

Calves can be successfully raised with buttermilk instead of skim milk, says one farmer. The feeding value of buttermilk is practically the same as that of skim milk. There is some risk of contracting contagious diseases such as tuberculosis in feeding factory buttermilk, unless the buttermilk is from pasteurized cream. For this reason skim milk is more desirable. Buttermilk should always be fed as fresh as possible so that the degree of acidity is the same.



Buttermilk may be substituted for skim milk when the calf is three weeks old. The substitution should occupy a period of a week or ten days, so that the calf is at least a month old by the time the diet consists wholly of buttermilk.

Other feeds should be used with buttermilk just the same as with skim milk. Equal parts of ground corn and either oats or bran with alfalfa or clover hay has given the best results. Calves will usually begin to nibble a little clover hay when two weeks old. They may be taught to eat grain at the same time by placing a little in the bottom of the milk bucket after feeding.

MILK MACHINE WORKS QUICK

Task of Milking Cow May Be Accomplished Rapidly and Economically —No Danger of Injury.

The Scientific American illustrates and describes a milking machine, invented by A. Truchot of Choteau, Mont., as follows:

Milking Machine.

By means of this device the milking of a cow may be accomplished rapidly and economically and with no danger of injuring the animal. The apparatus is of light weight, and is adjustable so as to permit the movement of the animal during the milking operation. The milking operation closely simulates that of manual operation.

Cost of Keeping Cow.

The annual cost of keeping a cow is close to $65, if a man values his labor at 15 cents an hour. It takes a good milker to pay her way, one that produces anyway 6,600 pounds of milk a year separating out 200 pounds of butterfat.

Ventilation Is Essential.

Ventilation is absolutely essential for the health of the cows, but is one of the hardest problems to solve in most barns.

SUNDAY NIGHT SUPPER.

Home folks, on Sunday night, even after a substantial midday meal, feel an aching void as the usual time for the daily evening meal approaches. This is a good time to shift responsibility on the younger members of the household and teach them to prepare and serve a dainty meal. Let them plan surprises and take turns in serving. This will not only be a relief to the housemother, but will be valuable training for both boys and girls. Let the guest, for there should often be one, at the Sunday night supper, help in getting the meal ready, laying the table, preparing sandwiches or salad, or making tea, cocoa or coffee; he will enjoy it as much as she.

Fig and Nut Jelly.—Wash a cupful of pulled figs in cold water. Put them to cook in two cupfuls of cold water and stew until tender. Take them from the liquor, put into it a half-cupful of sugar and boil until the sirup thickens. Chop the figs into small pieces and add to them a couple dozen almonds, blanched and chopped. Have ready a half box of gelatin which has been soaked for half an hour in a cupful of warm water. Dissolve it in a cupful of boiling water, add to it the fig liquor (there should be three-quarters of a cupful), add a quarter of a cupful of orange juice, strain through a wire sieve and turn into a glass dish to chill. When stiff enough to keep the figs from sinking to the bottom, add the figs and nuts. Serve with whipped cream.

Tomatoes With Cream.—Cut very rich ripe tomatoes, which have been peeled, in quarters without separating them, so that the sections lie open like the petals of a flower. Heap a spoonful of sweetened whipped cream in the center of each and serve well chilled. Peel the tomatoes by scalding them and removing the skin. If served in flat glass dishes, this makes an especially attractive dish. Salt, paprika and a dash of vinegar may be added if liked before putting on the cream.

SAVORY SUMMER DISHES.

We all enjoy a new combination, especially if it be attractive in appearance. The garnishing and serving of many dishes is the main and important detail.

Savory Tomatoes. — Plunge six small, even-sized tomatoes into boiling water for a few minutes to loosen the skin. Remove the skins and place the tomatoes in a greased pudding dish. Take a cupful of cooked macaroni which has been cut in inch lengths, place over the tomatoes and cover with a rich white sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese and cover with a few tablespoonfuls of buttered crumbs. Put into the oven and cook until the tomatoes are tender.

Asparagus in place of the tomatoes may be used and, if it is cooked, the dish need only be heated to be served.

Stuffed Mutton.—Buy four pounds of the breast of mutton, wipe carefully and put into a saucepan and cover with boiling water. Put into the stew one turnip, one carrot and two onions. Grate half of each vegetable and cut the rest in slices. Simmer for one hour. Prepare a stuffing of bread crumbs, sage, butter, one chopped onion, and bind with egg and milk. Take out the bone from the mutton, place in the stuffing, roll and tie and put into a baking pan with some halved, parboiled potatoes and bake a half hour.

Buttered Apples.—Cut rounds of bread about an inch larger than the apples. Pare and core one-half dozen apples. Place the bread in a baking dish, butter it well and put the apples on the bread. Fill the cavities of the apples with butter and sugar, add a little canned fruit juice or water and bake in a gentle heat until the apples are done. Serve with a spoonful of jam on top of each apple.

Baked Mutton Chops.—Pound and trim the chops, roll each in beaten egg and crumbs, then put into a dripping pan and set in the oven; as the chops brown, baste them every five minutes; season and thicken the gravy with flour, add a few tablespoonfuls of tomato catchup and serve.

GOOD ROADS

...der:

...e Recorder I notice ...d Roads meeting held ...January court day ...ttended and considera... was manifested.

...that the good people of ... have become awak... fact that if they are ... step with the progress of ...ties in the State they ... to be up and doing. It ... is undisputable fact that this ...ly needs better roads, but as ...ow they should be obtained ...question that is puzzling the ...ds of a great many of her ...ple.

The first and most essential step ... that it takes the cash to build, repair and buy roads, and if ... at hand then a bond issue ...omes next. I believe before we can have good roads and a good road system the county must necessarily own all the thoroughfares within her bounds, which will necessitate her buying a few turnpikes built by subscription, and I believe the owners of those roads are men who will fix a value on their roads per mile at such a low figure that the county can afford to buy them in preference to building all new ones for the simple reason that they can be purchased and repaired for considerable less per mile than new ones can be built out and out. Second the subscription roads in this county that are paying investments or in other words paying a reasonable rate of interest upon the stock, can be counted on the fingers of one hand and of these I expect one half of the fingers will remain uncounted. Why should not the owners of such roads be willing to sell to the county upon the same basis that stock is sold and transferred to the individual.

The purchasing of these turnpikes has been a thorn in the flesh to those living on the dirt roads when, I feel, if they will give it the proper thought will be a money saver for reasons heretofore stated in this article. We must lay down all of these trivial matters and put our shoulders to the wheel, and if so, we will have good roads throughout the county, and when people come to our county they will brag upon our good roads instead of cursing our county for its mud holes. As an individual I would rather be praised than cursed and I believe the same kind of blood that courses thru my veins runs through most of the people of Boone.

If the county owns all the roads in common then she will purchase the necessary tools with which to build and repair her roads along constructive lines, some object to a bond issue on the grounds that there will be a graft. A pretty serious charge. I don't like to charge a fellow with stealing until I catch him ...g goods. Whenever I hear a fel... always crying graft I am going to watch him closer than anybody else, because all he lacks is the opportunity.

Let us vote for the $200,000 bond issue and each and every one appoint himself as one of a committee of one to see that no steal is pulled off. Every dollar of this money will be needed to build, repair and purchase the roads. After voting this bond issue then it is the taxpayers duty to see that every dollar of the money is legitimately expended.

The geographical lay of Boone county is convincing to the average mind that we should have better roads, Boone is the extreme northern county in the State and is bounded on the north and west by the Ohio river and on east and southeast by the Southern R. R. the average distance being 15 miles from river to railroad, which should be convincing enough. In order to have better access to the markets we should have better roads in which lies our only hope. The better our roads the better our access to the markets.

If the people of the county of Boone and every other county in the State and every State in the union will stand for better roads they will be in a position to arise en masse and demand of the Federal Government federal aid, and will get it. It is the people who demand federal aid that get it. Why is it these lock and dams are being built on the Ohio and all other navigable rivers? It is because the people most interested go after it. Let us all stand united for good roads and then we will be in a position to petition our Congressmen and Senators in regard to this matter and if they are not kindly disposed toward the improvement, seek and find those who are to fill their places.

I read from the Congressional Record that our Congressmen and Senators are continuously voting those appropriations for public improvements, and I know of no one that would be of greater benefit to these U. S. than appropriations to build better roads. Instead of bucking our government for a large appropriation for a larger navy and better defense, instruct them to be bettering our roads and communication facilities thru out the country and if war does come we can transport our forces readily and fight our battles on our own soil.

MAIN ISSUE IS PROHIBITION

Drys Claim First Heat In Having Bill Favorably Reported

ANTI-PASS GOES THRU

Much Interest Over Woman Suffrage—Stanley County Will Likely Be Made—A Business Session.

Frankfort, Ky. (Special).—Statewide prohibition, woman suffrage and an anti-pass bill are the paramount issues to be settled at this session of the Kentucky General Assembly.

There has hardly been a day since the 1916 session opened but that these three matters have been mentioned or referred to in resolutions, bills and the like.

The "wets" claim that a show-down on the liquor question was forced too early for the good of a business administration, but the "drys" claim they are determined to know where every member stands at the earliest possible date.

Elated over their victory in having the State-wide bill favorably reported by the Senate committee, the "drys" gave the administration the biggest surprise of their lives and staged a battle of more than ordinary interest, although it may be short and decisive.

Dr. Norman A. Palmer, Superintendent of the Kentucky Anti-Saloon League, and Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, President of the Kentucky Woman's Christian Temperance Union, have been on the ground since the opening of the Legislature. It is said that the usual paid lobbyists of the distillers have not made their appearance yet, but they are expected to get active soon. In the last Legislature of 1912 the State-wide question was deferred until the closing days of the General Assembly.

Drastic enough to remedy the evils so long complained of by the people, the administration's anti-lobby, anti-trust and corrupt practice measures have been introduced in both Houses and will be pushed by Governor Stanley, who pledged himself to see that they were enacted.

The bill to reimburse Kentuckians for cattle destroyed in stamping out the epidemic of foot and mouth disease is expected to pass both Houses with little opposition. It provides $68,000 to cover these losses sustained by farmers. Similar bills have been passed by fourteen States.

Representative Frank C. Greene, of Carrollton, has said that he will oppose Hon. Arthur Rouse, Burlington, for the renomination to Congress from the Sixth District. Greene is also determined to push his "Jim Crow" bill, providing for the separation of street cars with compartments for negroes.

Judge James M. Benton has made it known that he does not intend to oppose Representative J. Campbell Cantrill, of the Seventh District, in event he is not selected to succeed the late Justice Lamar on the Supreme bench by President Wilson. He was supported for the latter place by all except three of the Kentucky delegation in Congress.

The fight of the dry forces in the Legislature to secure the passage of a State-wide amendment for prohibition is only the initial struggle that will be waged during this session.

A bill is to be introduced to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors in Kentucky.

The constitution is silent on the question of the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. The sales barter or loan is permitted by Section 61 of the constitution, but the word "manufacture" was left out, so that the dry forces claim that a bill to prohibit the manufacture may be passed by a majority vote. It is in the hands of Senator Frost and Representative Hamilton, who introduced the State-wide bills in the Senate and House respectively.

Judge Joe E. Williams, of McCreary County, is in Frankfort claiming that the impeachment charges are "utterly groundless" and says that he is there to answer them in person.

The Advertisers' Clubs of Louisville and Lexington are active in having a bill introduced providing for a penalty for fraudulent advertising similar to the city ordinances which the clubs have, respectively, succeeded in getting through the city councils of each city.

Congressman A. W. Barkley has introduced a bill in Congress "to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia," and says that it is his intention to push the bill to turn the national capital dry. He said that it was a mistake to accuse Kentucky as being a "whiskey State," for 114 out of 120 counties are dry.

It is regarded as somewhat novel that a member of Congress from the State that produces more whiskey than any other in the Union, and has three-fifths of all the whiskey in the United States in its bonded warehouses, should champion the cause of prohibition, according to Washington dispatches.

Claiming to have saved the sum of $200,000 for the people of the State in fire insurance, the State Insurance Board has issued a statement showing that during the past four years the reduction in Kentucky is 5 cents more on the hundred dollars of insurance than the average for the whole country. The total amount of insurance covered by the policies in Kentucky is about $400,000,000 annually.

A property classification bill to conform with the ideas of the best posted persons in a number of States will shortly be introduced, according to Chairman W. A. Perry, of the House Revenue and Taxation Committee.

The measure providing for the working of convicts on the State roads, which was adopted as a constitutional amendment at the November election, is receiving favorable comment, and provisions will be made for the carrying out of it.

Indorsed by Governor Stanley and Attorney General Logan, the anti-pass bill introduced by Representative Strickletl, of Covington, passed the Senate by a vote of 27 to 7 after being amended to permit the exchange of railroad passes for advertising space in the newspapers. If the bill passes the House it becomes effective January 1, 1917.

A fine of not less than $500 nor more than $2,500 and a jail sentence of not less than ten days nor more than thirty days for any railroad company furnishing passes. A forfeiture of office and a fine of from $100 to $500 for any state official accepting free transportation.

The bill is one of the strong Democratic party pledges and was the first to be read into the Senate calendar.

To make the provision for the exchange of passes from the railroads with the newspapers for advertising, James B. Stears, of Nicholasville, President of the Kentucky Press Association, and G. B. Senff, of Mt. Sterling, Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the association, called on Governor Stanley to urge him not to oppose this amendment.

The General Assembly has extended an invitation to President Woodrow Wilson to address a joint session at his convenience. He has also been invited to attend a meeting that will be given by the Kentucky Illiteracy Commission. He has accepted the invitation if it is possible for him to do so.

• • •

Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, President of the Illiteracy Commission, will probably address a joint session of the General Assembly Thursday, February 17, as a joint resolution was offered in the Senate by President Pro Tem. Combs inviting her.

At the request of Covington ministers, a bill was introduced by Representative Green, of Carroll County, prohibiting the use of screens and blinds which now protect the interior of saloons from public view. It is claimed that the bill will enable the "drys" to better handle the liquor problem in that locality.

In an effort to carry out the Republican campaign pledges, Representative Stone, of Crittenden County, introduced a bill which will be pushed for the abolishment of the State Fire Marshal Department.

Announcing his candidacy for Congress in the Eighth District, Representative George L. Pickett, of Shelbyville, a cousin of Governor Stanley, says that he is going to give Congressman Harvey Helm the battle of his life.

A house-to-house canvass will be made all over the state by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union securing signers to petitions requesting the Legislature to pass the amendment providing for a statewide vote on prohibition. It is their plan to send a petition of at least 1,000 names to the General Assembly each day.

• • •

Mrs. Beatrice Hale, of New York, one of the leading suffragists of the country, received a warm welcome on her visit to the State Capital and in her address to the joint session of the General Assembly. She was introduced by Lieutenant Governor James D. Black.

Suffrage leaders claim an abundance of confidence in passing their bill providing for a statewide vote next year.

Statewide prohibition was given a start in the Senate when the Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments decided to report favorably Senator Frost's bill providing for the amendment to be submitted to the people of Kentucky at the 1917 election.

The vote on the committee, which was taken in executive session, was: For, Williams, Montgomery, Frost, Antle; against, Knight, Littrell and Strickletl. Senator Zimmerman refrained from voting.

One hundred citizens from Pike County arrived in Frankfort to use their concerted action against the proposed bill to divide the county and make Stanley County out of the partition. They appeared before the General Assembly in a body.

It is claimed that it will be a constitutional impossibility to divide the county since Pike County at present contains only 785.55 square miles. This question, however, is in dispute, and it will have to be determined by the Virginia line. The constitution provides that a county must contain at least 400 square miles.

ASSIGNEE'S SALE.

BOONE COUNTY COURT.

In Re Assignment of Edmund Stephens.

By virtue of an order of the County Court, of Boone County, Ky., in the foregoing matter, I, as Assignee of Edmunds Stephens, will, on

at 1 o'clock P. M.,

same being County Court day, at the Court House Door, in Burlington, Boone County, Kentucky, offer for sale to the highest and best bidder, on a credit of six and twelve months, the following described real estate, towit:

Situated, lying and being in Boone County, Ky., and described thus: being lot No. 4 in parcel A, beginning at a stone in the Union road, a corner with lot No. 3 and also in a line of lot No. 1; thence with a line of W. Carpenter, s 1¼ w 44.05 chains to a stone and corner with B. Dixon; thence with his line n 85½ w 8 chains to a stone and corner with lot No. 1; thence with a line of lot No. 1 n 3¾ e 43.35 chains to the beginning, containing 33 acres, 3 rods and 24 poles, and being the same property conveyed to Amanda Rice by deed of partition in the action of Jerry W. Carpenter, et al., for the division of the land of W. E. Carpenter, said deed being recorded in Commissioner's Deed Book No. 2, page 146, of Boone County Records, at Burlington, Ky.

Also the following described real estate, situated in said county and state, beginning at a stone in the Union and Mt. Zion Road, a corner with Mrs. Julia Amanda Rice; thence with her line s 2½ w 43.35 chains to a stone in a line of B. Dixon's tract; thence with a line of said tract n 85½ w 7.82 chains to a beech tree, a corner with the Mike Rouse tract; thence with the line thereof n 1½ e 43.04 chains to a stone another corner of said tract in the aforesaid road; thence with the road s 89½ e 9.42 chains to the beginning, containing 37,19 acres, and being a part of the same land conveyed to D. E. Castleman by the Master Commissioner of the Boone Circuit Court, on the ——day of April, 1906, and recorded in Deed Book 48, page 440.

The foregoing tracts of land make a total of 71.09 acres, and being the same property conveyed to the said Edmund Stephens by Mary F. Surface, et al, by deed dated November 10, 1910, and recorded in Deed Book 52, page 44, of the Boone county records at Burlington, Kentucky, and being the same property described also in the deed from W. A. Rice, et al., to the said Edmund Stephens, dated December 14, 1910, and recorded in Deed Book 52, page 46, of aforesaid records.

Carpenter, by deed dated the 14th day of May, 1906, and recorded in Deed Book page —, of the Boone County Court Records at Burlington, Kentucky.

Said real estate will be sold in two separate tracts; the 71.09 acres in one tract and the remaining 20 acres and 16 poles in another tract.

Said sale will be made on a credit of six and twelve months. The purchaser will be required to execute bond for the purdhase money, with approved surety or sureties, payable to my order as Assignee, which said bonds shall bear 6 per cent. interest from date until paid and have the force and effect of a judgment.

O. M. ROGERS, Assignee of Edmund Stephens.

ROUSE'S BILL.

Congressman A. B. Rouse has introduced the following bill in the House of Representative, for the purpose of expending the unexpended balances and surplus postal revenues on rural post routes:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any unexpended balance in the appropriations for the Rural Delivery Service and all surplus postal revenues for the fiscal year nineteen hundred and sixteen, and for subsequent fiscal years, may be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperation with the Postmaster General, in improving the condition of roads to be selected by the Postmaster General over which rural or star route service is or may hereafter be established, such roads to be known as rural post roads: Provided further, That the State or the local subdivision thereof in which such improvement is made under this provision shall furnish for the improvement of the road or roads so selected double the amount of money alloted by the Government.

Sec. 2 That sums expended under the provisions of this paragraph shall be apportioned among the various States on the basis of one-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States, one-third in the ratio which the population of all the States according to the latest decennial census, and one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural post roads of each State bears to the total mileage of rural post roads all the States: Provided, That any State failing to avail itself of its apportionment of said fund within six months after being notified of the amount available therefor, shall forfeit its right to same and such sum shall be again apportioned among the remaining States: Provided further, That in no case shall the total cost of a road improved under this provision exceed $10,000 per mile: And provided further, That no portion of the amount made available under this provision shall be expended in improving the condition of roads located within the corporate limits of towns or villages having a population of two thousand or more according to the latest decennial census.

A CARD OF THANKS—

I wish to tender to Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Rouse my sincere and heartfelt thanks for their kindness and attention to me during my severe illness. Had I been a relative they could not have shown me more attention and kindness. I hope to be able to repay them in some way in the future. The inmates of the infirmary who helped to nurse and wait on me, I heartily thank; also the citizens of Burlington and vicinity I wish to thank for their courtesy and kindness to me since being an inmate. I can truthfully say from experience that there are no more courteous, kind hearted, better people living anywhere than in Burlington and vicinity, and may the Lord bless them all is the wish of your humble servant.

WORK OF THE CRIM REAPER.

Malchus Souther.

Malchus Souther died at his daughter's, Mrs. Howard Tanner, in Pt. Pleasant neighborhood last Sunday morning, of heart failure. He had been ailing just a week, having been taken ill while on a visit to his daughter, Sunday preceding his death. He is survived by his wife, three sons and two daughters.

Malchus Souther was born August 22d, 1855, and had farmed all his life. October 16th, 1881, he was married to Miss Alice Gordon, daughter of the late Frank Gordon, of Hebron neighborhood. Mr. Souther was a member of the Masonic order, Patron of Husbandry, a member of the Christian church, and for several years was Secretary of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Co., of Boone county, which position he resigned about two years ago to make the race for Sheriff. Malchus Souther was a very correct business man, affable and companionable, and never better satisfied than when doing a friend a favor. His wife and children have the sympathy of a host of friends in the county in their sad bereavement.

The funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Runyan at the home of his daughter, Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock, after which the remains were taken to the cemetery at Hebron where they were taken by Undertaker Bullock and laid to rest after the Odd-Fellows performed their burial service.

Marcus Collins.

The remains of Capt. Marcus Collins, who died at his home in Prescott, Arizona, were interred in the family lot in the old cemetery at Burlington last Friday afternoon. The funeral was in charge of undertaker Chas. Donnelly, of Covington, and the remains were accompanied by the son and the widow of the deceased and several of his relatives and friends. The only services at the grave consisted of the reading of the Odd-Fellows' burial service, the deceased having been a member of the order for many years. Mr. Collins was fifty-eight years old and died of nephritis of which he had been a long sufferer.

James Burns.

James Burns died last Friday of pneumonia at his home in Plattsburg neighborhood on Woolper creek. The remains were conveyed to Petersburg last Sunday by undertaker C. Scott Chambers, of Walton, where they were interred in the presence of many relatives and friends. Mr. Burns was a hard working man and had many friends in the several neighborhoods in the county where he had lived. He is survived by his wife and several children.

Mrs. Clyde Berkshire Buried

The remains of Mrs. Clyde Berkshire were interred in the family lot in the Odd-Fellows' cemetery here at two o'clock last Thursday. C. Scott Chambers, of Walton, had charge of the funeral. Very few were present at the interment owing to the fear of diphtheria of which she died. The bereaved husband has the sympathy of all who know of his terrible affliction.

L. J. Riley.

Layfayette J. Riley, 71, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lucien Stephens, in Lexington, last Thursday. The remains were brought to Big Bone Baptist church cemetery and interred last Monday. He was one of the old rebel soldiers of Boone co., and a member of Big Bone Baptist church. He was a son of the late John C. Riley, and a kind hearted, obliging gentleman, whose demise is deplored by a host of relatives and friends.

Mrs. Isabella Brady.

Miss Isabella Hill Brady, widow of the late S. P. Brady, died at her home in Burlington last Sunday morning at 11:15. Her death was the result of general breakdown owing to her extreme age, 94 years, six months and five days. Mrs. Brady was born in Philadelphia, and was a daughter of Jas. Hill, a wealthy Louisiana planter. Her mother was a Philadelphia lady whose maiden name was Hubble. She was the third wife of S. P. Brady, to whom she was married September 20th, 1883. He departed this life Dec. 29, 1896.

The remains will be taken to Belleview today, Thursday, by undertaker Allison, where Rev. Baker will preach the funeral discourse in the Baptist church after which the remains will be deposited in the private vault in the new cemetery near the town.

Mrs. Brady was possessed of numerous Christian traits that endeared her to all who knew her. She had long been a member of Belleview Baptist church, and attended services with great regularity so long as she was able to leave her home. She put her religion in practice and the poor and distressed were always given such relief as she was capable of administering. She resided in Burlington away from her kindred for no other reason than because she loved the people here, altho she was devoted to her relatives. In her latter days she was looked after in the most faithful manner by Miss Sallie Vaughn and Miss Mary Furlong who saw that everything possible was done to make her comfortable.

Mrs. Julia S. Dinsmore, Mrs. Pattie Selmes and Mrs. Frank Cutchon arrived in Burlington Tuesday morning, having been summoned by wire on account of the death of Mrs. Brady.

URGES REFORM IN COURT PROCEDURE.

State's Attorney Moorman Arranges For Introduction of Criminal Practice Bill.

Commonwealth's Attorney Henry DeHaven Moorman, of Hardinsburg, member of the Law Reform Committee of the Commonwealth's Attorneys' Association of Kentucky, was in Louisville last night after a trip to Frankfort, where he arranged for the introduction in the Legislature of a law reducing the number of peremptory challenges allowed defendants in felony cases. The bill, which repeals Section 203 of the Criminal Code Practice, cuts down the fifteen challenges allowed defendants in all felony cases to 10 in willful murder cases and five in other felony cases.

Mr. Moorman said Senator W. A. Frost, of Graves county would introduce the bill in the Senate, and W. E. Doling, of Anderson county, would introduce it in the House.

"Human life is cheaper in Kentucky than anywhere else in the world," Mr. Moorman said last night." "Kentucky must do something to lessen the number of homicides committed every year. In Hickman county, in Senator Frost's district, there have been twenty homicides since August, one every week. The number of challenges allowed the defense is sometimes taken into consideration by men planning to commit murder. The new law will save the state the expense of summoning so many men for jury service, act as a deterrent to crime, and give the State a better name."—Louisville Times, January 18, 1916.

A SLIGHT LEAK

Came Near Disrupting the Order, but With Carburetor Properly Adjusted, Went Rambling On.

There was not much doing with the Hog Wallow Debating Society last week, on account of one of its members talking too freely on the outside, and getting its name in print, but after giving said member a strong reprimand, and he promised that nothing of the kind should ever happen again, quiet was restored and everything was smoothed over. A lengthy program for discussion was laid out for the rest of this month. Some of the most important questions to be disposed of are:

How far will a man float in the river with a grindstone as a life preserver?

Is it true that water during a flood will seek the lowlands first?

Is it the proper thing to do for people living in glass houses to take baths in the day time, or with bright lights after night?

The arguements for and against these questions promise to "bristle" with oratory and "balloon" raising laughter.

At a recent meeting of the society the letting of the contract for carrying the mail on the Burlington and Erlanger route was thoroughly discussed, but the proper annual pay for the service required was not determined. This will, in all probability, be the leading topic at several more meetings of the society.

Elmer Kirkpatrick, Treasurer of the Society, has been quite ill of Pork Gout.

Turnpikes are going to pieces badly.

Read two good agricultural articles on the inside pages.

Jas. Brown, of Pt. Pleasant, was a caller at this office, Tuesday.

Thos. Dinn, of Bullittsville, was transacting business in Burlington Wednesday.

Some of the water in the public cistern was sent to Lexington to be tested for typhoid germs, but nothing has been heard from the test.

In some parts of the county last week it was reported there were as many as thirteen cases of diphtheria in the town of Burlington, when there was not one. The only case that appeared in the town was that of Robert Gaines, who was taken to his home in the country Tuesday afternoon, following which the building in which he was sick was thoroughly fumigated, and every precaution possible was taken to prevent the spread of the disease. Few children and younger people were seen on the streets during the week, and by Sunday there was no further fear of the disease. How such exagerations got started will never be known, but under like circumstances they always have and always will prevail.

Cincinnati handlers of eggs, it has leaked out, had in the refrigerators the past winter some 15,000 cases more of eggs than ever was known in this market. The figures of the storage, public and private, show that the refrigerators in Cincinnati at one time had a record of 72,278 cases.

Commenced raining again Wednesday about 11 o'clock.

Trustee's Sale!

Farm of One Hundred and Eight and One-Half Acres to be Sold at Public Auction, on Monday, Feb. 7, '16

At 1 O'Clock P. M.,

The same being County Court Day, at the Court House door, in the town of Burlington, Boone County, Ky., as Trustee of the last Will and Testament of D. G. Rice, deceased, I will sell to the highest and best bidder the following described real estate, to-wit:

Situated in Boone County, Ky., on the Ohio River, at the mouth of Gunpowder Creek, and bounded generally as follows: On the North by the Ohio River; on the West by the lands of Lucian Harris; on the South by the lands of E. Ogden and William Shinkle; on the East by the lands of Mary L. Ryle and Gunpowder Creek, containing one hundred and eight and one-half (108 1-2) acres.

Eighty [80] acres of this land is river bottom and very productive. The remaining twenty-eight and one-half [28 1-2] acres is hill land, inclosed by a good fence and is good grass land. A county road separates the hill from the bottom land. This farm is improved with a good tenant house, barn, new corn crib and other out-buildings, all in fair state of repair and is splendidly adapted to the business of stock raising, especially hogs. This sale is being made in order to settle the estate of D. G. Rice, deceased, and as Trustee under his Will, I have full and complete power and authority to make the sale and conveyance. Here is a splendid opportunity for some one to buy a good farm at a moderate price.

TERMS OF SALE.

One-third of the purchase money must be paid in cash and the balance in two equal installments, evidenced by promissory notes, payable to my order as Trustee, due in one and two years from date, bearing 6 per cent. interest and payment thereof secured by a lien reserved in the deed. The purchaser will be given the privilege of paying cash.

I reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

S. D. RICE, Trustee of the last Will and Testament of D. G. Rice, deceased,
Dillsboro, Indiana

ALFALFA

And How to Grow It Successfully in Boone County.

Walton, Ky., Jan. 20, 1916.

I have been asked to write an article for publication on the above named subject. Important things seem to start with some little incident not apparently important of itself. Some years ago with a party of friends I made a trip through the Southwest and stopped a few weeks in the valley of the Great American Desert, where at one time, a crow could not live, but under modern methods they had harnessed the waters of the mountain streams by diversion dams and canals were carrying it through the valley for irrigation purposes and there I saw Alfalfa fields of my life. An Alfalfa field in full bloom reminds one of a rose bed in full bloom. May 25th the first crop was in the rick and the second crop was being cut. There was no other grass growing there and when I returned home I brought with me my love for the Alfalfa plant.

One thing that made an impression on me was to see hogs around Alfalfa ricks eating hay like cows. All the stock in the valley was fat and fine with nothing to eat except the king of forage plant, (Alfalfa.) I have had eight years actual experience in trying to grow Alfalfa. The first four years were an entire failure, the the next two years by using double inoculation did fairly well, but the yield was light and for the last two years with the liberal use of ground limestone I have made a wonderful success, getting four cuttings and making as high as five tons per acre a year. This letter is from actual experience and observation and reading government bulletins and hearing such noted lecturers as Joseph E. Wing, of Ohio, and W. C. Smith, of Indiana.

To make this problem simple and easy this letter will give you in answers to leading questions. Why is there at present an Alfalfa craze? Because it yields from 3 to five tons per acre of the most palatable forage plant that grows in our nation today, is very rich in protein and as a bone and muscle builder it has no equal, and when fed with corn gives a perfect balanced ration.

Why should I grow Alfalfa? Because it is a very heavy yielder of the most nutritious feed that grows. All of my stock relish it and do fine on it. I have a horse that is hard to catch with corn but I have never failed to catch him with a bunch of Alfalfa hay. I am wintering eighty hogs, varying from 30 pound pigs to three hundred pound brood sows, and their racks are filled with Alfalfa hay twice a day, and they stand at the racks and eat like cattle and are doing fine. I also feed about one-third as much corn as I would without hay.

Can I grow Alfalfa on my farm? Yes, if the soil is sweet, if not use ground limestone. Get the stone out of the hillsides and hollows, grind them to a dust and put them back on the land at the rate of two to four tons per acre. That will sweeten the soil so the bacteria or germ that must be present can thrive and feed the plant with nitrogen from the air.

Hon. D. Coburn, in his treatise on Alfalfa says, "Alfalfa, after a few months of its life, obtains its whole supply of nitrogen from the air."

Does Alfalfa improve the soil? Yes. Its deep feeding roots Yes. Its deep feeding roots and its deep feeding roots and its marvelous renavators, reaching into the subsoil, being nearer the surface the minerals of plant food where the shallow rooted crops can make use of them. The soil is also enriched in nitrogen taken out of the air by the germs which live on the roots of the alfalfa plant.

Is Alfalfa an early plant? Yes. The first cutting is about three weeks earlier than red clover.

How deep should Alfalfa seed be planted? From ½ to 1½ inches.

Must the soil be limed before planting Alfalfa? Yes, if the soil is sour. Alfalfa will not grow on acid soil. As soon as the nitrogen present in the soil is exhausted the plant perishes.

Why is lime so necessary to Alfalfa? Alfalfa is a great lime feeder, there being about fifty pounds of lime taken from the soil for each ton of hay. Lime makes the help ful bacteria thrive. They cannot exist without it.

What kind of lime should be used? Ground lime rock, the kind we have on our hillsides and in our hollows. Grind it fine and it will inoculate the Alfalfa and feed the nitrogen from the air and Alfalfa will feed the stock and the stock will feed your pocketbook and you can feed the soil by returning the manure.

How much lime should be used? That is a difficult question to answer and just how much, can be determined by testing the soil with bitmus paper.

When is the best time to apply lime? Never plow under lime or your surface soil will not get full benefit from it. Its the surface soil that needs the most lime because the Alfalfa germs and other helpful bacteria remain near the surface. It takes some time for lime to perform its work, so get it in the soil a few weeks before seeding.

How can I test the soil for acidity? By the muriatic acid or bitmus paper test. I advise the bitmus paper test. Get five cents worth of blue bitmus paper at drug store. Go into the field you want to test. The dirt should be moist enough to hold together in balls. Split ball open with knife and place a piece of the paper between the parts and press together tightly. Let remain half an hour, then open and examine color of paper. If the paper is turned slightly pink use no less than two tons of the ground limestone to the acre. If it turns decidedly pink apply not less than three tons per acre. If red, not less than four tons per acre.

Besides correcting acidity how else does lime help the soil? It makes available the plant food which is already in the soil.

How should lime be applied? It should be spread evenly—some use shovel, some manure spreader, but the best way is by a lime distributor, a machine made expressly for the purpose. One machine is sufficient for a whole neighborhood.

Which is best, spring or fall seeding of Alfalfa? That depends on conditions which must be considered. Hillsides, of course, loose soil that is not seeded with crabgrass or foxtail. The chances are best with spring sowing. Sow early that the Alfalfa may get an even start with the weeds. Ridge lands seed ed with foxtail and crabgrass, should be plowed in the spring, and given a shallow working about every two weeks to start and destroy the weeds until August The sooner you plant your seed after the first of August the bet ter.

What nurse crop do you advise? None. A nurse crop shades and draws the moisture from the Alfalfa, both of which are detrimental to the plants growth. After sowing and you get one shower to start the seeds, you are safe. I would prefer rather dry weather and it roots deep and if there is any dampness below the roots will reach it.

How about sowing Alfalfa in corn after laying by? Every case of that which has come under my observation has been a failure, due to the shade and the corn getting all the moisture.

What kind of seed do you use? I have used mostly Kansas and North Dakota seed. Use nothing but the best grade and buy them direct from the farmers who grow them. I prefer the Dakota seed as I think Northern grown plants the hardiest.

Alfalfa sowing or planting? Alfalfa should be sown both ways or planted. I advise planting with an up-to-date seeder, such as the American Seeding Machine Co. makes. You should test your seed before planting. Ninety per cent germination is good and 20 pounds of seed should be planted to the acre. A thick stand of Alfalfa will be more able to combat successfully the weeds.

Inoculation and what it does? Inoculation as applied to Alfalfa means artificial supplying the soil with the necessary germs or bacteria. U. S. Department of Agriculture Farmers' Bulletin No. 273, says, Nitrogen can be taken from the air and added to the soil by means of legumes, but this takes place only when the roots of the leguminous plants bear bacteria, nodules or tubercles. The amount of nitrogen that any particular legume can add to the soil depends upon the number and size of the tubercles on its roots.

How can I put these nitrogen gathering germs into my soil? There are two ways to do this. Firt, by soil transfer. That is to get dirt from around well inoculated Alfalfa plants or a sweet clover patch. The bacteria on their roots are just the same. This should be done of an evening. If the sun is shining hot it is likely to kill the germs. I do this by loading dirt in lime distributor, and following it with the harrow. Two to four hundred pounds per acre is sufficient.

Second, by pure cultures which the U. S. Department of Agriculture furnished me free of charge, only asking me to report results to the department. I consider either way good and use both at the same time, but the most important in connection with them is lime.

How about cultivating Alfalfa with harrow? After the Alfalfa is one year old you will get good results from use of spring tooth, immediately after first and second cuttings it drags the weeds out and loosens the soil, forming a mulch, but never use a cutting harrow as it cuts and bruises the roots and dirt gets in the wounds, preventing their healing and in time very injurious to the plant. I believe I have give necessary information for growing Alfalfa up to harvest time, and I hope and trust by that time we will have a county Farm Agent, best to be had, to continue the good work by making demonstrations that will convince the farmers, and, in time one-fourth of Boone county should be planted to Alfalfa which would mean millions of wealth added.

C. L. GRIFFITH.

The Special Dairy Institute at Walton, March 4, 1916.

Ever since I have owned any land, now about twenty years, I have advocated dairying. I have at different times started several men in it, in a small way, who have nearly always been successful. For the last several years I have had some four or five dairies run on a small scale and in different ways, according to the wishes of the men engaged. The highest number of cows in any one place has been fifteen. The degree of success has only been fair at the best place.

I have noticed in the large amount of land I have owned and sold and in the large amount of land I have known about people going in debt for, that the man who makes his living on butter and eggs can always pay for a farm and the man who don't do it will hardly ever succeed in paying for a farm. Also I have read and observed that the dairy business is one of the great businesses of the world and that there are examples of good size fortunes being accumulated in it and that there are whole communities which have grown rich in it and that there are whole states, notably Wisconsin, which have prospered by it, and that a whole nation, namely Denmark, depends upon it.

The degree of success or failure which my tenants and partners have had is a fair criterion of the success or failure of all other engaged in the business in this territory, say within five or ten miles of Walton. The conclusion is inevitable that there is something wrong with the way and manner in which the business is conducted. In order that we may find out what the wrong is and find a remedy for it, I have caused, through the kindness of Professors Bryant and Nichols, of the State University at Lexington, a Special Dairy Institute to be held at Walton on Saturday, March the 4th, beginning at the first forenoon. This will be a rare opportunity for everyone directly interested in the business or interested in the welfare of the community to gain some knowledge, both theoretical and practical, of a business, not only of first importance but of absolute necessity, for the welfare, the growth, and the development of this community.

While the dairy business is simple and easy, yet there are certain fundamental principles necessary to its success, which this community seem to be both ignorant of and derelict in putting into practice. So far as I know, there is not a single place where provision is made for caring for the manure in the simple, easy, way necessary to get the benefit of same. There are not more than two or three persons feeding with any regard for a balanced ration. Only by testing the milk are weeding out the unprofitable cow. Likewise little attention is paid to pure breeds of stock. All these questions and many others must receive careful and presistent attention if we wish to compete in this business. Also it will be well for those interested in the business to form an association with the view of more systematically marketing their products.

I have said above that the dairy business is a necessary one in this community. I base this statement upon the facts established, that this section is undoubtedly deficient in phosphorus and lime. We cannot therefore produce as large grain crops as formerly and the longer we go, without replenishing the soil, the less will be our grain crop production. By the dairy business and the purchase of a portion of the feed and the use of phosphate the soil can be replenished at the same time it is making more money in the dairy business than can be made, for the same amount of work and expense, by grain farming. This is so by reason of the fact that our community is so closely located to a great center of population. We do not have to go outside of Kentucky for examples of what may be done in the dairy business. In the north half of Boone, Kenton and Campbell counties where it is true they are more contiguous to the city, the dairy business has become an established one and also almost uniformly successful, but inquiry among those people will reveal the fact that they are paying considerable attention to the fundamental principles necessary to the business to wit—feeding and testing. But clearly as good an example of uniform success may be found in Shelby county, which is at a greater distance from Louisville than we are from Cincinnati. Inquiry there will reveal the fact that they are paying due regard to the questions of feeding and testing and breeding.

I dare say that all things considered this community is as favorably located for the dairy business as either the northern portions of the counties named or the county of Shelby. Our ill success therefore must be attributed to the ignorance, neglect, and the oversight of persons who are engaged in the business. Now we know that the people in this section are just as intelligent and just as capable of learning and understanding as must be the people in any other section. What we have done or have failed to do and what we may do or fail to do hereafter, therefore becomes a matter of only one word, namely, attention. Just the simple thing of putting our minds to the question and then exercising them.

Having in view the welfare of the whole community as well as having in view my personal interests in the business, I have thought proper to have this special institute called and now that it is called, I deem it proper and within my rights to insist upon every man who is renting my land or renting land which I control or others, to attend this institute and then go home and put into practice what the experts teach him, and to read the bulletins which the experiment station has published in regard to the business, and to pay some regard to putting in practice what they teach.

The people of Kentucky have provided one of the best Agricultural Colleges in the world and an experiment station which ranks among the highest and for one citizen of Kentucky, I means to have some benefit of it, by more intelligent farming and especially more intelligence in the dairy business. Since by just a little science and common sense in farming the land, will pay me better and the tenant better, naturally I and every other man who has land to rent will favor those tenants who will thus operate the land. My suggestion therefore to tenants and always has been to attend every institute within their reach and as soon as they can get money enough ahead to make a payment, to buy a farm of their own. But I am compelled now and from this on, in as much as so many tenants refuse and neglect to learn when the opportunity is given them, to say that I positively will not rent land to a man who will not attend the institutes. It will be observed that this institute is a Special Dairy Institute.

I do not claim to know much about the dairy business. I don't want to know much about the business; it is not my business; but I must insist that my whole interest is bound up with it in a way that I must rise or fall with it and while morally and intelligently there are as good and as intelligent people here as there are anywhere, I must say that in their methods of farming and in their methods of running dairies they are slow to learn and still slower to put into practice the simplest fundamental principles which have been established as sure and profitable. With our soil and climate and transportation facilities and the price of land and the road material and the school facilities, we have it in our power to make this particular section of ten miles square one of the most attractive, healthful, prosperous, beautiful and richest sections in the world. Just a little hard work. The thoughtless person should be universally criticised who refuse to understand with their heads what they do with their hands.

HIS LIFE EXCITING

Famous "Prisoner of the Mahdi" Visits Medina.

Man Held in Chains for Twelve Years by the Mahdi and Freed by Kitchener Has Had Most Romantic Career.

Constantinople.—Bronzed like a native son of the desert and in dress, speech and manners an Arab, the only white man who ever openly visited Medina, the holy city of the Mohammedans, recently returned here. The pilgrim was Dr. Karl Neufeld, the famous "prisoner of the Mahdi," who was liberated by Lord Kitchener in the Sudan many years ago.

Few men have had a more romantic and exciting career than this celebrated traveler. As a physician, teacher, merchant and contractor he went to the Sudan in 1886. When the uprising of the natives began he was taken prisoner by the Mahdi and kept in chains for twelve years. Freed by Kitchener, he returned to Germany, but after a lecturing tour he made his way back to the Sudan. Shortly after the outbreak of the present war he had to leave his adopted country again, as he was expelled by the British authorities.

After his return to Germany he was sent to Constantinople, where he placed himself at the disposal of the Turkish government. He was used as an emissary to the Arabian tribes, and for this work probably no man is better qualified. As he speaks the dialects of all the Bedouin tribes, knows their customs and has embraced the Mohammedan faith, he wins confidence wherever he appears in the world of Islam.

After organizing the Arabian tribes on the Peninsula of Sinai for an invasion of Egypt this strange man went to Damascus and decided to visit Medina.

Accompanied by four Arabs he left Damascus in June. After his train passed Maan and El Ulla the Turkish officers with whom he traveled became distrustful and they even kept aloof from him when they saw him say his prayers like every pious Mohammedan. When he reached Medina, the Ramadan, the great Mohammedan festival, had just begun. He placed himself under the protection of a prominent native who has charge of the pilgrims from the Sudan and his host conducted him to the Harem-es-Sherifa, the temple where Mohammed is buried with his favorite daughter Fatima and his son-in-law.

When he stood before the crypt of the prophet the German traveler was surrounded by an angry mob. His position became quite critical until two Arabians made their way through the crowd and declared:

"We know him; he is the effendi of Omdurman and Assuan, a good man and true Mohammedan."

Even this did not entirely satisfy the mob and Doctor Neufeld was only permitted to stay in the temple after he affirmed his faith with a solemn oath. For two or three weeks he was continually watched by natives who were not convinced by his religious professions and by Egyptian spies in the service of England.

The latter tried in every way to inflame the natives against him by calling him an infidel and "Christian dog." At a meeting of the scribes and sheiks he was asked where he came from and there was great excitement when he calmly said: "From Germany."

The priests and chiefs were satisfied, however, when he related how he was converted to Mohammedanism by a pious sheik in the Sudan.

Doctor Neufeld remained in Medina nearly two months in continual intercourse with the sheiks, ulemas and prominent pilgrims from Tripolitania, Tunis, Morocco, Persia, Afghanistan and India. He obtained much valuable information. From the pilgrims he learned that the Jehad (holy war) movement is fast becoming general in all Mohammedan countries. He found that the Arabs are especially bitter against the British, because the English government has closed the Red sea and stopped the great annual pilgrimages from Egypt and India to Mecca and Medina. Still more bitter were the Mohammedans over the fact that the English have proclaimed the new ruler of Egypt appointed by them "sultan of the two holy places," because all of the faithful insist that this title only belongs to the caliph at Constantinople.

"By their attempt to establish an Egyptian caliphate the British have made one of their greatest mistakes," Doctor Neufeld said on his return to Constantinople. "The Arabs will never forgive them this interference with their religious affairs, and the blockade of the Red sea.

"The population of the whole western part of Yemen is in uprising against the British. In this part of Arabia only the sheik Ebesi is in the way of the English and he possesses little power and influence."

All Arabs are fervent admirers of Germany, he said, and every one of them knows the name of Field Marshal von Hindenburg. When the telegraph brought the news of the fall of Warsaw to Medina there was a great celebration. The whole population assembled before the house of Doctor Neufeld to express its joy. An old priest, who mildly protested and expressed doubts in regard to the righteousness of the sultan's alliance with the German infidels, was howled down by the mob.

UTILIZING HIGH-PRICED MEAT

If Nothing Is Allowed to Go to Waste, Writer Asserts, It Is Cheaper in the End.

A good tenderloin steak may run in price today from 22 to 40 cents a pound; a round steak may be purchased for from 12 to 20 cents a pound. Now, which is the greater economy in handling the home pocketbook—to purchase the round steak or to take the high-priced tenderloin? The wife has it within her power to make the high-priced tenderloin an economy.

She serves it first as a broiled steak. With the remnants left, including the bone and fat, there are yet eleven different ways in which she can make palatable additional meals for her family and not have them feel that there is a monotony in their food. When she reaches the final rag end of that high-priced tenderloin she still has a fertilizer for her garden, and the steak has really cost her not more than seven cents a pound.

It is all in knowing how to do it, and in this knowledge or the lack of it lies the fact that the mother is either making or losing money for the home. The housewives of foreign countries have learned this lesson far better than American women.—New York Tribune.

WHITE BREAD AT ITS BEST

Quick Method of Making Has Been Adopted by Those Experienced in the Business.

Two cakes yeast, one quart lukewarm water, two tablespoonfuls sugar, two tablespoonfuls lard or butter, three quarts of flour, one tablespoonful salt.

Dissolve yeast and sugar in lukewarm water, add lard or butter, and half the flour. Beat until smooth, then add salt and balance of the flour, or enough to make dough that can be handled. Knead until smooth and elastic. Place in greased bowl, cover and set aside in a moderately warm place, free from draft, until light—about one and one-half hours. Mold into loaves. Place in well-greased breadpans, filling them half full. Cover and let rise one hour, or until doubled in bulk. Bake forty-five to sixty minutes.

One cake of yeast may be used with good results; but remember the quicker and stronger the fermentation the better the bread. The best bread bakers have adopted quick methods.

Chocolate Sausage.

One cupful of bitter grated chocolate, one cupful sugar, two teaspoonfuls of vanilla extract, one-fourth pound of almonds, one-half cupful of powdered sugar and two whites of eggs.

Blanch and chop the almonds into very fine pieces. Crush the sugar with a rolling pin on a baking board and grate the chocolate. Beat up the whites of the eggs in a saucepan, then heat them over the fire and stir with a spoon until warm. Add the chocolate, sugar and almonds and stir until the mixture is hot. Remove from the fire, add the vanilla extract, pour the hot mixture on the powdered sugar and knead it on a baking board. Form into a large sausage or several small ones. Allow to dry for 12 hours, then cut into slices. This is a delicious sweetmeat.

Fudge That Is Fudge.

Two squares of chocolate, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of milk, melt these; a large piece of butter, one teaspoonful of vanilla; boil until it forms a ball in water; after removing from the stove put a scant tablespoonful of cream in the fudge and stir a few minutes. This makes it smooth and creamy. Just before the fudge is done put in a cupful of chopped walnuts or one-half cupful of raisins. I sometimes pour half the fudge on a buttered dish and over that a layer of marshmallows, then the rest of the fudge.—Boston Globe.

Versailles Custard.

Cook a cup of granulated sugar over a hot fire until it becomes caramel. Turn quickly into your baking dish, moving it so as to coat the sides and bottom with the mixture. This must be done quickly, as the caramel hardens rapidly. Make a custard as usual, turn into your well-coated dish and bake until firm in the center. Chill thoroughly. To serve turn out on a glass dish. The caramel gives a delicious flavor and makes a splendid sauce.

Hash With Eggs.

This is delicious. One cupful of boiled ham, chopped fine, one cupful of potato, mashed or chopped, one cupful of cracker or bread crumbs; season well, mix all together with water, put in a deep plate, smooth it over and then make little dents in the top large enough to hold an egg. Put it in the oven and heat it through, then remove and drop an egg in each of the places and return it to the oven till the eggs are cooked.

Veal Salad.

This is nice when you have finished with a roast of veal: Cut up veal in dice, also bunch of celery diced, place on bed of lettuce leaves. Pour over dressing place a few olives; stuffed ones with red peppers look attractive and add a delicate flavor, too, by chopping in a few with the salad.

Good Washing Material.

Two potatoes grated in a basin of warm water give better results than soap in washing delicate flannel or woolen goods, ribbons, etc.

LIVE TO BE 100

(Chicago Herald.)

How to live to be 100 years old is told by "Uncle Cape" Stanley, the centenarian of Downers Grove.

Here are some of the rules that have governed his own life, 74 years of which have been lived in Chicago's western suburb:

Mind your own business.

Don't quarrel with your neighbors.

Pay for what you get when you get it.

Live within your means.

Laugh every time you find something to laugh at.

Don't eat between meals.

Eat plain food and plenty of it.

Don't drink intoxicating liquors.

Don't smoke or chew tobacco.

Keep up your interest in the news of the world.

Go to bed early with a clear conscience and get up with the birds.

Sleep eight to nine hours out of the 24.

Don't worry about things you can't help.

Work and exercise outdoors as much as possible.

Keep your thoughts pure.

Memorize Bible verses.

Remember your obligations to your Creator.

During the interview which lasted almost an hour the other afternoon Mr. Stanley took a keen interest in the comments made by his daughter, Mrs. Alice S. Edwards, and his wife, who celebrated her eightieth birthday on Christmas day. Up to within one week ago, when he was attacked by the grip, from which he is now suffering, he read the newspapers every morning. He said he could read the headlines without glasses.

"I've always been a Republican," he said, "but I like Wilson because he minds his own business.

"Will you vote for Wilson next election?" he was asked.

"Well," he said, after a slight pause, "if I feel as I do now, I'll vote for Wilson next November."

"Father has never tasted a drop of liquor in his life," said his daughter, Mrs. Edwards, with apparent pride.

"Oh, but that's not so," interrupted the old man.

"Why, father, you don't mean to say you ever drank a glass of liquor?" she cried.

"No, but I did taste it when you gave me that little dose as medicine when I had that cold," he replied.

"My father's life is a sermon showing the value of clean living," said Mrs. Edwards. "I want my boy to follow his example."

Stanley's mother lived until she was 97 years old and two of his brothers until they were 82 and 84 years old. He was married in 1855 and expects to celebrate the sixtieth wedding anniversary on October 22. Mrs. Stanley is enjoying excellent health.

A HARD STREAM OF WATER

(Popular Science Monthly.)

"A factory in Grenoble, France, we are told, "utilizes the water of a reservoir situated in the mountains at a height of 200 yards. The water reaches the factory through a vertical tube of the same length, with a diameter of considerably less than an inch, the jet being used to move a turbine. Experiments have shown that the strongest men cannot cut the jet with the best tempered sword; and in some instances the blade has been broken into fragments without deflecting a drop of the water, and with as much violence as a pane of glass may be shattered by a blow from an iron bar. It has been calculated that a jet of water a small fraction of an inch in thickness moving with sufficient velocity, could not be cut by a rifle bullet.

"The engineers of some big water power projects of the Far West are willing to wager that a two-hundred pound man, swinging a four-pound ax with all his might, cannot make a "dent" in the water as it emerges from the nozzle at the power house. Burrying an ax in a stream of water looks like child's play, and the average two hundred pound visitor is likely to "bite." He invariably loses. So great is the velocity of the water emerging from the nozzle in these modern power plants that an ax, no matter how keen its edge, is whirled from the hands of the axman as soon as it touches the water. The water travels under a pressure exceeding 500 pounds to the square inch in many instances, and no power on earth can turn it off at the nozzle, once it gains momentum. It has the same effect on one's fingers as a rough emery wheel, and will shave a plank with the nicety of a razor-edged plane."

Easter Comes Late.

Easter comes later this year than it has since 1905. April 23 is the date of the end of Lent, Easter Sunday was the same date in 1905. Easter will not come as late as April 23 again until 1943, when it will be two days later, April 25. In 1886 Easter Sun day fell on April 25, the latest date for Easter from 1801 until 2,000. In the year 2,000 Easter Sunday will be on April 23. With the exception of 1943 there will be no Easter Sunday as late as April 23 until 2,000.

Coming on April 23, Easter Sunday will be nineteen days later than last year. Next year it will be fifteen days earlier. In the retail business world Easter furnishes the great spring trade stimulus.

I will give $5 reward for goods stolen from my buggy house Jan. 10, 1916, consisting of one new storm front with green lining, one winter lap robe, black on one side and green on the other; also a pair of backing straps. Notify

NOTICE.

We, the undersigned, owners and tenants in charge of land bordering on the Ohio river at Rabbit Hash, Boone county, Kentucky, hereby give notice that all persons are forbidden to land or tie up any wreckage of any kind on or in front of our land without our consent.

We further give notice that all persons are forbidden to take anything out of any drift pile that may lodge on or in front of our land without our consent.

The courts have decided that the laws of Kentucky give us ownership to such drift piles, and as we have to clean them off of our land year after year, we desire the benefit of anything of value they may contain, and any person disturbing them will be prosecuted;

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

Farm For Sale.

PUBLIC SALE!

In order to settle up the estate of my mother, Mrs. Mary Farrell, deceased, I will, on Tuesday, February 15th, 1916, sell to the highest bidder the following property:

The farm of 100 acres, a lot of livestock and farming implements, corn, etc. Twenty shares of the capital stock of the Verona Deposit Bank for cash. Also personal property as follows: 3 young horses, 200 bushels of corn, 8 tons of clover hay, road wagon, Deering mowing machine, 2-horse cultivator, 1-horse wheat drill, 1 set double carriage harness, etc., will be sold on nine months time without interest. The farm consists of 100 acres lying on the Mudlick and Verona turnpike 2½ miles west of Verona, on which there is a six room dwelling, 1½ stories high, all the necessary out buildings, 2 large barns, well watered, cistern at barn and a never-failing spring. The house is newly repaired and all the buildings are under good roofs, line fences all good and plenty of cross fences. Land is all in good state of cultivation. Ten acres of woods, a No. 1 sugar orchard. It is safe to say half is good tobacco land, 6,000 pounds raised and sold this year at 13 cents all around. Land will be sold in two lots, 100 acres with all the improvements, and lot No. 2 containing 60 acres, and then it will be sold as a whole. Terms on farm, one-third to one-half down, balance to suit purchaser. Remember the date, Saturday, February 15th.

WM. FARRELL, Adm'r.
W. B. Johnson, Auctioneer.

The spirit of progress which struck the town of Walton, this county, several years ago, has extended to the surrounding country in which it is becoming more intense and a very different spirit from that of a quarter of a century ago prevails in that territory today.

BIG BONE.

Morning Star D. of A. Lodge No. 22, was organized Friday night Jan. 28th, at Big Bone, by Mrs. Hester Runner, State Councilor, of Louisville, and Mrs. Emma N. Whiting, State Treasurer, from Newport, two very brilliant and efficient ladies, who won the highest esteem of everyone present.

It was one of the most delightful sessions when forty-eight candidates were introduced to the mysries of the Daughters of America Fraternal Order and took upon themselves the oaths and obligations thereof. Only two of the candidates were given the initiatory degree. The work was very impressive and beautiful, each participant excelling in correctness and forceafully rendering of the respective parts. The drill team won the highest esteem for the way in which it rendered its part to make the floor work so impressive.

During the evening the State Councilor and the State Secretary made several interesting talks for the good of the order, and everyone was delighted with the way these two ladies instituted this order.

In the middle of the evening a very elaborate supper was served which had been carefully prepared by the ladies, and consisted of all the dellcacies of the season, which everyone did justice to. Very beautiful music was rendered by Courtney Day, Manley Moore, J. D. Moore, Mrs. Lizzie Miller and Mrs. Clara Hamilton.

The State Councilor spoke a word of high praise for Mr. O. D. Day for his untiring efforts in gathering together such a fine large assembly.

There are many people who do not understand the principles and good work this fraternal order is doing all over the country. The Daughters of America stand for Loyalty, Love and Patriotism. They seek to develop a higher and better manhood and womanhood. They seek to aid in preserving and perpetuating the public school system, they create a spirit of patriotism among the youths of our land by placing our flag over every school house, and promote the reading of the Holy Bible therein, and in protesting against the immigration of paupers and criminals.

The Councilor said in her speech of the 87 councils in the state this council had one of the brightest prospects for the future, and never before while she served as a State officer did she ever institute so fine an order with a membership so large where the enthusiasm running so high; each realizing only in union is there strength. Its influence and work is like a pebble dropped into the ocean, "the waves do not stop here but spread farther than we can imagine." The young people going forth in this order will be filled with patriotism and will make better men and women.

After all expenses were settled we had in the Treasury $44.50, which is an excellent treasurer in the beginning of a new order. On the list we had 50 names, all of which had paid their fees, but owing to the inclemency of the weather two failed to come. Out of the forty-eight candidates who wer. introduced into this fraternal order two candidates were tak en in as honorary members, their age being over fifty.

The following is a list of the names of officers elected for the ensuing term of the Morning Star Council: Councilor, Minnie S. Miller; Associate Councilor, Ollie Carpet; Vice Councilor, Eva Rich; Associate Vice Councilor, Louie Bea Wilson; Conductor, Sallie Hamilton; Warden, Clara Hamilton; Recording Secretary, Lizzie Miller; Assistant Recording Secty., Sallie Day; Financial Secretary, Pansy Day; Outside Sentinel, Rosa Black; Inside Sentinel, Inez McIntye; Jr. Past Councilor, Pearl Allhpin Associate Councilor, Maude Dunnigan; State Representative, Pearl Allhin; Past Councilor, Will Pelphin, Russell Sparks; Host. J. D. Moore; 18 months Trustee, Hortense Ross; 12 months Trustee, Ida Moore; Six months Trustee, Goldie Black.

The Jewish Relief Fund.

Inspiring, though tinged with pathos, is the nation-wide response to the request for money to aid destitute Jews in the European war zone. There is inspiration in an act that proves the indestructible brotherhood of a widely scattered people. No matter whence comes the cry of Jewish anguish or distress, compatriots more fortunately situated are quick to respond with balm and healing.

Oppression and repression to which the European Jew has been subjected in the past pale in comparison with the indignities and rigors that have been laid upon him since continental conflagration began to sweep Europe. Homes and fortunes have been sucked into the maw of the maelstrom and thousands upon thousands are destitute even to the point of perishing. Sick, impoverished and helpless, the Jew turns his face to the land of promise for aid, and he looks not in vain.

The report of the American Jewish Committee made public in New York yesterday says:

"Ninety-three million Jews are facing destitution, their homes having been pillaged or destroyed, their industries and trade ruined and the entire fabric of their economic life torn asunder. Hundreds of thousands were forced from their homes at a day's notice, among them even the immediate families of the 250,000 Jewish soldiers at the Russian front, the more fortunate being packed and shipped as freight, old men, women and children locked together with the sick and the insane in sealed freight cars, shuttled from town to town, sidetracked for days without food or help of any kind, and the less fortunate being driven into the woods and swamps to die of starvation."

Response to the appeals for Jewish relief in the great cities of the United States has been prompt and generous. New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago and San Francisco have already contributed heavily, and they are not through. Cincinnati has done well, but should do much better. If $60,000 was secured at the rate of $1,000 a minute for 60 consecutive minutes there should not be great difficulty in raising the remaining $40,000 necessary to complete Cincinnati's allotment within the time set. The cause is more than worthy, and the need is great.—Enquirer January 31.

CARD OF THANKS—

We take this method of expressing our thanks and gratitude to the many friends, who gave us their sympathy and rendered service during the illness and interment of our husband and father. May God in his goodness and mercy reward you more than we can express.

THE FAMILY.

Foolishness,

A farmer went into a hardware store, where a clerk wanted to sell him a bicycle. "A bicycle won't eat its head off, and you can ride round your farm on it. I can let you have one for thirty-five dollars."

"I'd rather put the money into a cow," said the farmer.

"You'd look mighty foolish riding around on a cow," said the hardware man.

"Well, no more foolish than I would milking a bucycle, I reckon."

According to the United States public health service, a new disinfectant, derived from pine oil, a by-product in the manufacture of turpentine, possesses qualities superior to ordinary disinfectants, being more than four times as powerful as carbolic acid for disinfecting purposes, yet nontoxic and without harmful effects when it comes in contact with delicate membranes or with fabrics or metals. This discovery is particularly valuable at this time because of the shortest of coal tar derivatives for disinfectant purposes.

Very great difference in the temperature now and at this time last week.

BLEACHED BONES ARE FOUND

Remains of Indiana Man Who Disappeared Some Months Ago, Are Discovered.

Elwood, Ind.—"I have the stuff to put myself out of the way. It's no use for you to look for me, for you won't find me." This note David Davis, fifty-one, left for his children when he disappeared from his home in Elwood on August 7. Recently, while James S. Edgell, tenant on the Washington McCoy farm, just west of the city, was husking corn in a field an eighth of a mile west of the old McClay glass works, he found the bleached bones and weather-beaten clothing of the long-missing man. Exposed to the elements and to the attacks of feathered and fur-covered scavengers, every particle of flesh had disappeared from the bones, and identification was possible only through the clothing.

WON'T BE DECLARED DEAD

New Jersey Wanderer Decides to Return to His Home After Many Years.

Brielle, N. J.—Paul Hosp has gone back to his home in the Roseville section of Newark after an absence of many years. When he became a tramp he left behind a wife and family. He followed many kinds of work in many places, and only the merest chance led him to look through a newspaper a few weeks ago in which was an advertisement which stated that unless he returned before a certain date he would be declared legally dead. He thought it over and decided to keep alive.

If his story is true he is the nephew of a prominent physician, Dr. Paul H. Hosp of 18 Waverly street, Newark, for whom he was named. His memory failed him when he tried to think how many years had elapsed since he left home.

BAR SCHOOL FRATERNITIES

San Francisco Pupils Give Pledge to Forego Secret Societies in the Future.

San Francisco.—As a precaution against the revival of sororities and fraternities in the public schools of this city, the board of education has adopted a rule, it was announced, whereby every high school pupil, before entering school, must sign a pledge against becoming a member of any forbidden society. Parents and guardians also must sign a card pledging co-operation with the school board. More than 100 pupils in the San Francisco high schools were suspended because of their membership in secret societies. A state law forbids the existence of school secret societies.

Kansas Man Declares There Is Nothing in Prospecting, but Cow Pasture Pays.

Marion, Kan.—Sam Shreve came home recently. He had been nearly forty years prospecting for gold in the far West. Sam was penniless.

But there was an old cow pasture which Sam had almost forgotten. Sam didn't think much of it in his youth.

But that pasture today is the site of this town's residential section. So Sam should worry—he's $20,000 richer, or will be, when the residents pay him his legal dues. And Sam is glad he's back.

Bags Black Eagle.

Sisseton, S. D.—The first black eagle seen in this locality in at least thirty-four years was shot recently by John Korte, who saw the bird perched in a tree near Jay McFand's poultry yard. The bird measures seven feet five inches from tip to tip and appeared to be a young bird.

U. S. NEWS.

(Furnished by Mrs. Belle Dickey.)

Altho the State-wide bill was defeated in the Senate 20 to 14 it was a great gain over past years, and forecasts victory at no distant day. It might easily have won this year if professing temperance men had sent temperance men to the Senate to represent them.

State Wide Prohibition.

The full text of the State wide bill offered in the Senate by Senator Frost is as follows:

"An act to amend and re-enact Section 61 of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

"Section 1—That Section 61 of the Constitution of the State of Kentucky be amended and re-enacted by striking out all of said section, so that said section when amended and re-enacted will read as follows: That upon the concurrence of three-fifths of all the members elected to each house the yeas and nays being taken thereon and entered in full upon their respective journals, that Section 61 of said Constitution be amended and re-enacted so that said section will read as follows: On and after June 30, 1919, the retail sale, the keeping for retail sale or barter, the retail sale under any pretext, of malt, spirituous, vinous or any intoxicating liquors are forever prohibited in this state except for medicinal, scientific, mechanical or sacramental purposes. On and after June 30, 1920, the manufacture, sale, the keeping for sale or barter, the sale or barter under any pretext, of malt, spirituous, vinous or any other intoxicating liquors are forever prohibited in this State, except for medicinal, scientific, mechanical or sacramental purposes.

"Sec. 2—This amendment shall be submitted to the voters of the State for their ratification or rejection at the time and in the manner provided for under Section 256 of the Constitution of Kentucky and under the provision of the act of May 12, 1898, same being Section 1459 of the compilation of the laws known and designated as Carroll's 1915 edition of the Kentucky Statutes."

Is It a National Issue.

They say that prohibition is not a national issue; they say that the prohibition of the liquor traffic is an issue that must be segregated and divided among the several states. They tell us that at Washington forces that are strong today and that are to be strong for all time to come in this country assert that we cannot take up this question of prohibition of the liquor traffic in a national way and thus wipe it out thruout the length and breadth of the land. They tell us that issues relating to ordinary affairs are national issues; they tell us that things that involve great expenditure of money are national; they say it is a national issue to try to wipe out the hog cholera, but that drunkenness in human beings is not a national issue. They say it is a national issue to eradicate ticks from cattle, but that it is not a national issue whether the women in their homes shall be protected from drunken husbands. They expend millions of dollars for lighthouses as a protection to navigation, and is that any more a national issue than the question of eliminating and putting out of business an institution that is responsible for human wrecks all over this country?

Frances Willard.

And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love—I Cor. 13:13.

Thy gentleness hath made me great.—Ps. 18:35.

The above texts expressed, or as an underlying thought have characterized the tributes written in memory of our promoted leader, our beloved Frances E. Willard—who, from manhood to the meridian of life, has been a living epistle of these beautiful attributes. We find no account in history of so rich a legacy of womanly character being left to any age.

Young women who knew her, or who may come to know her thru her writings, have fallen heir to possessions of untold value. A great responsibility rests upon all in the use of such riches, but that should not cause discouragement.

Frances Willard did not obtain this wealth all at once; with a divine intent it was acquired, and best of all, she who said, "Only the golden rule of Christ can bring the golden age of man," left as among her "personal effects," the largest amount of this alchemistic gold.

What she was, what she did, the lives she touched, the truths she has uttered, her unique comprehensive, practical, beautiful, uplifting writings, all are handed down to us.

Her birth, training, environments were the providences of an All-Wise Father; so also were her sensitive nature, her fragile body, her high temperament, and her great mental power. These were not early controlled and equalized, but by the grace of God, coupled with faith in His purposes in life, for her, how marvelous became her equipoise!

The prayer of her girlhood, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit," was always uttered in the present tense, and later on, the plea, "Fail me not Thou!" linked aspiration and response in blessed unison. "What I ought to do, I will do," became the incentive of her life, and has made her, in turn, the greatest incentive in the lives of young women this century has known.

Her life history permits us to make no excuse for our failures be cause of birth, training or environment; though her fine discernment and kindly judgment would overlook all shortcomings. She does not ask of us the impossible. We cannot be like her. We may never measure up in our short lives to any such height as she attained on earth, but we can accept our conditions as she accepted hers. We can aspire as she aspired. We can overcome as she overcame. We can seek to know the Great Designer of our lives, and to comprehend His pattern for us with the same earnestness of purpose. "She was never untrue to her conception of duty, however much it might cost her to be faithful." Obedient to the heavenly vision, which ever seemed before her eyes, she followed steadily on.

A QUEER PERFORMANCE.

It may or it may not be true that there is no good Indian but that there seems to be no two sides to the proposition that there is no surely good Legislature but a dead Legislature. At least it is never safe to praise a Legislature as good until it has completed its record.

Yesterday the Courier Journal had some complimentary words for the Kentucky Senate because it had the good sense to put down the effort to plunge the State into a commotion on the question of State-wide prohibition. To-day it is called upon to note that the same Senate has voted to request Kentucky's members of the United States Senate to urge that body to move for Nation-wide prohibition.

In other words the Frankfort statesmen who so emphatically rejected the bill looking to state-wide, within twenty-four hours even more emphatically indorsed a resolution looking to Nation-wide.

It is true that this resolution as adopted was amended with the provision that property destroyed by Nation-wide prohibition should be paid for by the Government but if the gentlemen who are responsible for that amendment assume that such a provision can meet the objections of those who are opposed to prohibition on principle or even approaches the fundamental basis on which their opposition is grounded, they betray a cloudiness of any real comprehension of the issue which would seem to be about hopeless.

No fair mind will deny that if the Government is to forbid the manufacture of liquor it should not ba at the cost of the confiscation of the property of those whom the Government has permit ted to engage in the manufacture of liquor. That, however, is altogether a secondary matter. The real question is not whether the distiller shall be allowed to get out of the business without loss of the capital which he has put into it, but whether the American people under the governmental system of democracy which they have erected for the protection of their rights, shall be denied the protection of their rights of personal freedom against the sumptuary usurpations of those bigots who insist on measuring everybody's cloth by their own yard-stick. The issue of prohibition, State-wide or Nation-wide, is not primarily whether the distiller shall be saved from loss, but whether the man in the street, in the home, in the club, at his table, on the sick bed, shall be denied the right to take a drink, because his neighbor does not approve of anybody ever taking a drink, or thinks it to his personal advantage, social, political or otherwise, to pretend such disapproval.

The intelligent distiller cannot favor any such resolution as that passed by the Kentucky Senate yesterday, for the intelligent distiller knows that if the prohibition craze is to be opposed on no other ground than that of the property interests of the distillers and saloons his case is hopeless. Unquestionably reasonable men would not destroy the distiller's or brewer's business without some payment for his property, but the prohibition crusaders are not reasonable men, and if the case against them rents on no stronger support than resistance of the destruction of the property of distillers and brewers then we shall have a Nation-wide prohibition which, while it will not prevent the consumption of liquor, will destroy, without payment, the property of distillers and brewers.

Is there not intelligence enough and Democracy enough in the Kentucky Senate to evade such a blow?—C. J.

Elizabethtown News.

C. L. Pemberton shipped out of Elizabethtown last week three carloads of mules and went to Letich field yesterday to buy a lot more. Mr. Pemberton is buying artillery mules, which are large and heavy animals for foreign governments. He is also buying for shipment abroad, small draft mules and cotton mules for the southern markets. Since last fall he has bought and sold 2,000 head of the long ears. At the fair estimate of $150 per head this purchases are close around $300,000.

BRAIN AND CAPITAL CAN OBTAIN MUTUAL BENEFIT

When College Trained Men Apply Knowledge to Practical Farm Problem.

It is clearly recognized that a boy who has been graduated from the Agricultural College should go back to the farm, fitted to do better work there on account of his training. In some respects he should also become an example to his neighbors and thus enable them to farm a little better. Through this kind of betterment, supplemented by the extension work of the Agricultural College, that institution becomes a paying investment to the State.

It is a regretable fact that some of the young men who finish the course in agriculture have no farms to which to return, and the alluring positions offered by agricultural papers, packing houses, food products companies and rail roads, as well as the government, take away many of our most capable young men.

There are many land owners in Kentucky, some living on their farms and some in cities, who would do well to take these young men into partnership either on a profit sharing basis or on a salary. Such an arrangement is surprisingly profitable to both parties as has been repeatedly demonstrated. In addition, Kentucky would retain the services of her best trained sons.

EDUCATIONAL

In an effort to have better rural schools, m any have overlooked the things, most needed. No school will be a success without a number one good teacher. No school will have a full attendance without a first class teacher at the head. No neighborhood will have the proper school spirit in it unless it has within its boundary a first class teacher. No person who does not attend the summer normal to keep up with the times and to review his college and highschool work will be a successful teacher.

The majority of the teaching force is weak and needs to attend school or quit the profession. The rural schools need better teachers and trustees. There are twenty-five per cent of the country schools that will not show 30 per cent attendance. Why? because the school spirit does not exist in the teachers, trustees or parents. Give us better teachers, trustees and parents with more school spirit and we will have better schools.

The future of the successful teacher is filled with success and better salaries. The future success of the rural schools depends largely upon better educated teachers.

Will History Repeat.

One hundred years ago, 1816, was "a year without a summer." Will history repeat itself this year it being the one hundredth anniversary of that mementous year, says the Paris Democrat. In 1816 it snowed every month in the year. An old man in Kentucky told me he had heard his grandfather talk of that year and one incident has impressed itself on his mind. His grandfather said that he and his "girl" started for a Fourth of July celebration, but were compelled to turn back on account of a terrific snow storm. The old man told me that in the spring of 1817 his grandfather and another man rode from Kentucky on horseback into Pennsylvania and paid $5 per bushel for seed wheat with which to plant their fields. The past year was a step in that direction. We did not have any snow during the summer but at the same time we did not have two weeks of real summer weather during the entire year. Possibly the weather man was waiting for the one hundredth anniversary to roll around so that history might have a chance to repeat itself.

To Vote on Road Bonds.

Petitions asking that an election be called for Saturday March 18, in Christian county on the proposition to issue $400,000 worth of bonds for extensive good roads operations during the year have been filed.

The expenditure of the money is to go altogether in the hands of a commission of four men, two of whom are to be Republicans and two Democrats, and who are to be selected solely for their qualifications and honesty. These men are to be named at a meeting of the Christian County Good Roads Association, and the Fiscal Court will formally cede to it, by official resolution to be passed, all right or authority they may have in handling the road matters. The names of these Commissioners will be printed on the ballot along with the statement of the bond issue proposition.

Eight negroes were nearly suffocated in the city jail in Eminence when a straw mattress in the cellroom burned. About forty farmers have entered into an agreement in Garrard county that they will not hunt on their farms for a period of three years, nor will they permit others to do so, and further agree to animal will have to be destroyed. prosecute all persons who violate this agreement. If the farmers all over Kentucky will do this, there will be plenty of game in a few years.—Larue County Herald.

In Adair county all work has been retarded on account of bad weather, but farmers are generally fairly well up with their work. All the roads in the county, with the exception of the pikes, are almost impassable and our country cousins can now see where they made the mistake in voting down the bond issue. Wheat, oats and grass are looking fine, and our farmers will put out extra large crops this year on account of the high price at which all farm products are selling.

PETITIONS NOT NECESSARY.

It has been reported that the Senator and Representative from this county, asked for the circulation of petitions to get the mind of the people on the State-wide prohibition question so that they would know how to vote. So far as the Senator is concerned, and we speak for him only, we wish to say this is untrue. The fact is it is not only untrue, but unreasonable, as a Democrat with a party platform laid down for four years, which says that the party shall stand by the county unit law, and the party's decision at the last primary giving nearly forty thousand majority for this platform, the Senator would certainly be very slow to understand the meaning of this enormous majority which completely snowed under the advocates of State-wide prohibition if he did not know how to vote.

No, we stated both privately and on the stump, that we would stand by the party platform, and this we expect to do, and those who press prohibition at this time to sign petitions contrary to principles of the party platform fail to acknowledge the will of the people in the last August election.

When the Democratic party puts a State-wide prohibition plank in its platform we will cheerfully vote that way, because we are not bigger than our party. The Senator from this district is a Democrat, governed always by the principles in the platform of that great party.

These issues are being forced in the legislature at present by the majority of the Republican members whose platform was the same as that of the Democrats, but their object is to put the Democratic members in a hole and profit by it at the next election. Those of the dry faith upon the Democratic are helping them regardless of the the fact that in so doing they are not bowing to the will of the majority, and that being defeated at the polls they are willing to resort to methods which will antagonize the present administrations the officers of which were elected upon a platform containing the county unit plank which should be lived up to as should all measures contained in the Democratic platfor.—Owen County Democrat.

TESTING SEED CORN.

Especially Necessary This Year to Determine Viability of Seed in Advance of Plantion Season.

Testing seed corn for germination—always a profitable farm practice—is an absolute necessity this year in many sections. In a number of districts the last corn crop from which seed for the corning planting will be taken was late in maturing or so moist when harvested as to call for special precautions.

A high moisture content makes seed corn particularly susceptible to damage from freezing or heating. Farmers in the sections where corn failed to ripen normally who do not test their seed early enough to be able to replace their own bad seed with good seed secured from other sources will be taking an unnecessary risk. It is also especially important for holders of seed in such districts to take unusual care during the remainder of the winter to protect it from freezing.

While complete testing for germination should take place shortly before the seed is planted, the specialists of the department believe that it will be simple forehandedness for farmers who have any reason to be doubtful about the viability of their seed to make a preliminary germinating test with a few typical ears taken at random from the rack. If these preliminary tests show that the seed is good, the owner then can continue his precautions to guard it from weather damage. If, however, this test with a few ears indicates that the seed is of low vitality, the farmer should at once make further tests to satisfy himself as to whether his seed corn generally is good or bad.

If a farmer finds his seed is bad he should take steps at once to meet the difficulty. The purchase of seed should not be delayed till spring, especially when so much corn in various sections has been damaged. The farmer should secure his seed from well-known sources, buy it upon a germinating guaranty basis, and get his seed or typical samples early enough to make his own germinating tests. It is probable this year that many farmers who have not followed the wise practice of selecting enough special seed from good crops to last them in an emergency for two or three years will have to buy seed. In buying seed, farmers should try to secure corn of varieties known to prosper in their section. The safest seed would be that carefully selected from good corn grown in the immediate neighborhood, but at any rate effort should be made to obtain seed grown in districts where climate, soil, and farming conditions in general are similar to those at home.

If the farmer happens to have a stock of seed left over from the 1914 crop and doubts the seed saved from his 1915 crop, he would do well to test the older seed also and then use whichever shows the greater vitality. Seed corn if properly cared for will retain its vitality for several years. Many farmers knowing this always select an extra amount of seed from an unusually good harvest.

The following method of testing seed corn is taken from Farmers' Bulletin 701. The corn is placed on drying racks made by driving wire finishing nails about four inches apart on four sides of a stick. A numbered is placed over the nail and the butts of the ears are put on the nails. If wire fencing or other seed racks are used, the ears can be numbered in other ways.

In single ear testing, two kernels from opposite sides of the ear on the top, two from the middle, and two from the butt are put in numbered squares or portions of germinating boxes or other testers. The kernels are kept moist at a room temperature not above 90 per cent F. nor below 50 per cent F. After six or 7 days the seed should begin to sprout. Only those ears from which all the kernels give strong sprouts should be reserved for planting.

Under ordinary circumstances, it may not be absolutely necessary to test every individual ear. If a large number of typical ears show germinating tests as high as 97 per cent, the seed in general may be considered good. Under the unusual conditions prevailing this year, especially in neighborhoods where the corn did not mature normally, it should well repay a corn grower to test every ear that he intends to use for seed. If he has any reason to doubt the quality of his individual stock the ear-by-ear testing is simply a form of labor and crop insurance.

Before testing germination, the farmer should examine each ear and throw out all the ears which do not look right or which have several withered or damaged kernels. He should strive to make up his seed from ears which in size and appearance seem to be normal for his variety of corn. Seed corn should be shelled if possible by hand to avoid the risk of damage by mechanical shelling. Before shelling the owner should pick out peculiar looking kernels and separate the seed into sizes so as to make certain that the corn drill will plant regularly.

WAR TALK ALARMING.

Washington, Jan. 30.—War talk of an alarming nature sidetracked all other topics here today. The aggressive speeches of President Wilson are fanning a war spirit into a flame that may start a conflagration at any time. At least, that is the way things look here.

The pacifists especially are agitated. They say that the sort of speech making in which the President is now indulging will foster a war spirit which will be hard to control.

Aside from what the critics have to say on the subject, there is a wide spread view among leaders of both parties that the United States may be not far from the brink of war. The Democratic leader of the Senate is quoted as saying he believes war is certain to come. Representative Mann, Republican leader of the House, believes war is inevitable and is saying so.

The Lusitania case is the crux of the present critical situation.

That case has reached a stage beyond which it is seemingly not going to be possible to carry negotiations much further without a show down. Germany will have to yield or the impasse must break.

Is it possible that Germany might actually be willing, deliberatively, to force this country into war? is a question being asked here.

It is pointed out that the answer may be found in the facts concerning our exports of war materials. These have only very recently been going forward in immense quantities. The volume will increase for a long time.

American war supplies will be absolutely necessary to maintain Russia at her full fighting capacity. Japan can help greatly, and is doing it. Russia herself can do and is doing wonders. Her allies can contribute and are contributing much. But America's capacity must be heavily drawn upon, nevertheless, if Russia shall be raised to and kept at the point of fullest effectiveness.

Germany, then, might have decided that the time was right for a break with the U. S. with the hope that our government would commandeer the military supplies that the allies have expected to get and use. Thus the allies, especially Russia, would be crippled while our own fighting force would be augmented in no effective way, because we have not the men to use the munitions that we would keep away from the allies.

It seems, at least, the most obvious and probable explanation of the solemn warning from the President.

GOOD ROADS.

I have lived in Boone county all my life. I lived at Beaver until of age and shortly thereafter I bought a farm in the Verona neighborhood, where I lived for about twenty-five years. Because of the mud roads and the apparent impossibility of ever getting pikes, I sold my farm there of 300 acres at fifty dollars an acre and bought a farm on the Lexington pike of 390 acres at ninety dollars an acre. As to the lay and productiveness of the soil the Verona farm and the farm on the Lexington pike are about on a par. The difference in prices must therefore be in the location and particularly in the pike.

I am glad to know that the people of Boone county are going to take a vote upon the issuance of $200,000 in bonds, for the purpose of building roads and bridges. It will be a great thing for Boone county when all the roads are piked, and all the roads are free, and after waiting a lifetime to see it done, I am firmly of the opinion that it cannot be done in any other way than by a bond issue.

Having suffered all the hardships and inconveniences of bad roads, and having, for a limited time enjoyed the pleasures and conveniences of moderately good roads, and although I have sacrificed to a certain extent one of the best farms in the county, because of bad roads, and having paid a good long price to get a farm upon a good road, and having at the same time my own interests in view and the welfare of the whole county, I will cheerfully vote for the bonds and urge all my friends and neighbors to do the same, no matter where situated nor what little apparent differences of opinoin and different views of equity may exist, that is as to what has been done heretofore and what may be done hereafter. What we want and what we need is a good road system. This will bring people to the county; this will add to the valuation of property; this will tend to equalize the valuation of property as well as to equalize the people socially and financially.

The talk of favoring one portion of the county to the exclusion of another is without foundation. We can trust our Fiscal Court upon that matter, aided and supported and guarded by public sentiment as they will be.

By my action I have proved that I would not live on a mud road when I could do otherwise, no matter what the loss is in money; I now solemnly declare that were I a young man without means I would not take the best 500 acres of land in the county as a gift if it were located on a mud road and agree to live my life on it. I am for a road system that will pike every road in the county and free every pike of toll gates. JAS. W. CLEEK.

WAY IS PAVED FOR BUSINESS

Committees Are In Shape and Good Legislation Is Promised

PLAN BONDS FOR DEBT

Woman Suffrage May Be Left Out—Stamp of Approval Given Corrupt Practice Bill—Important Insurance Matters.

Frankfort, Ky.—(Special)—With the various committees well organized and carrying out the Administration's pre-election pledges and suggestions, some real business legislation is promised by the General Assembly during the early days of February.

Louisville bankers have discussed the matter of arranging the state debt and it is generally believed that the Governor and state financiers will float bonds to take care of the present large state indebtedness which the present administration inherited.

The Vance-Sheer corrupt practice bill, endorsed by Governor Stanley and known as an administration measure, passed the House by a vote of 80 to 8. The measure as adopted fixes the maximum amount of money that may be spent by any candidate for an office in Kentucky, including the primary and general election.

The amounts follow: Governor, $20,000; other state officers, $10,000; Railroad Commissioner and Judge of the Court of Appeals, $6,000; Circuit Judge and Commonwealth's Attorney, $5,000; county officials in counties having cities of first class, $5,000; county officials in counties having cities of the second class, $4,000; county officials in counties having cities of the third class, $3,000; county officials in all other counties, $2,000; Representatives, $700; Senators, $2,000; for any other office, city, county or district not mentioned, $1,000.

The bill repeals the statute which requires two witnesses to convict for bribery in elections.

The amount of money spent by candidates must be filed for publication 15 days before and 15 days after election and a fine of from $100 to $1,000 for failure is provided.

In order that they may lend every assistance possible to help the state liquidate the present debts and carry out the Administrations' "economy pledges," President Henry Hardin Cherry and the Board of Regents of the Western Kentucky State Normal School have decided not to ask for any additional appropriation this session, even though the good work of this institution, of which thousands of Kentuckians are very proud, has steadily been increased and is today accommodating more students then ever before.

It is considered safe to predict that the bill of Senator J. B. Hiles, of Bracken county, appropriating $20,000 annually for five years to the Kentucky Illiteracy Commission, of which Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart is the head, will go through both houses as rapidly and as certainly as any measure of the session.

A bill intended to do away with racing in the state by banishing the pari-mutuel machines and prohibiting betting in any form, has been introduced by Representative Jack Oliver, of Scottsville, Allen county, a Republican. It is said by his opponents that he hails from a county, which is a day's journey from a race track.

Only two constitutional amendments are permitted to be passed at any regular session of the legislature and no more amendments can be voted upon at the same time.

If the House concurs in the action of the Senate on the Combs-Hobbs bill, amending the constitution to permit telephone companies to merge, and the Knight-Meyers bill to amend the constitution so that a proper workmen's compensation act may be adopted, the woman suffragists who are appealing for the ballot in Kentucky will be locked out until the next session of the General Assembly at least.

Should the House reject one of these amendments, then the Senate would be free to act upon the Woman Suffrage question but it is not believed that the women will have it come up again.

The legislators do appear to be ready to give them much encouragement right now.

A bill introduced in the Senate by Senator Glenn, provides that all appointments of assistants made by heads of the different departments of the state government be made with the consent of the senate.

If the bill becomes a law the Senate will in the future confirm the appointment of assistant secretary of state, deputy auditor, assistant commissioner of agriculture, deputy clerk of the court of appeals, deputy treasurer, the three assistant attorney-generals and the assistant state superintendent of public instruction.

Favorable reports have been made on the following bills. To make holder of equitable title to property responsible for listing it for taxation as between him and legal holder; to permit taxpayers to pay their portion of special levy to redeem railroad bonds and be exonerated from liability; to regulate toll bridges to be erected over navigable streams; to amend state text books laws limiting changes to three branches in one year; to permit fiscal courts to anticipate revenues and borrow money for less than six per cent; to provide for submission of question of substitute county commissioners for fiscal court, at any general election; to extend bonds of public officers to cover acts done while holding beyond regular terms of office and the anti-pass measure of Senator Zimmerman.

Senator H. M. Brock, Republican floor leader in the Senate and who has occupied that position for the past two sessions, will be a candidate for election as delegate to the Republican National Convention from the Eleventh District, according to leaders in Frankfort.

Providing for the abolishing of the First and Second Assistant Attorney General, Representative Jackson, Republican, Lee County, has introduced a bill, and says that he is of the opinion that since the Governor and Attorney General have authority under the law to employ special assistants as the need for them arises, the permanent employment of assistants is unnecessary.

Much curiosity is being expressed as to the investigations into the State printing expenses. The committee is composed of Senators Helm, Huffaker and Brock, but so far the probes have not been sharpened, according to reports.

The roll call in the Senate on the Prohibition question was the longest on record, taking nearly an hour to complete. The time was taken up by the universal desire of the senators to explain their vote.

Endorsed by State Superintendent of Public Instruction, V. O. Gilbert, a bill introduced by Representative Radcliffe, of Henry County, provides for the taking of the school census every two years instead of annually as has been the custom. He claims that this will save the State $35,000.

A bill to prevent the activity of office holders in working to increase the salaries of their own and other offices, introduced by Senator Porter, of Webster County, is taken quite seriously by the Senate and is likely to pass.

A model bill providing for working of convicts on the public roads will be drafted by Senator Webster Helm, of Campbell County, who is chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Roads and Highways.

A resolution requesting the Kentucky delegation in Congress to support a bill making national prohibition possible, provided the brewers and distillers receive compensation for their plants, passed the Senate.

It was first introduced by Senator Huntsman, of Warren County, merely requesting them to support the national prohibition. This was amended by Senator Huffaker, of Louisville, providing compensation. This amendment was adopted by a vote of 17 to 15.

The resolution then passed as amended 23 to 6. Those voting against it were Senators Frost, Huntsman, Porter, Sanders, Scott and Taylor. Those declining to vote were Senators Clay, Hildreth, Montgomery, Moore, Peak and Salmon. Senator Ford was ill and not present.

Carpenter, by deed dated the 14th day of May, 1906, and recorded in Deed Book page ---, of the Boone County Court Records at Burlington, Kentucky.

Said real estate will be sold in two separate tracts; the 71.09 acres in one tract and the remaining 20 acres and 16 poles in another tract.

Said sale will be made on a credit of six and twelve months. The purchaser will be required to execute bond for the purdhase money, with approved surety or sureties, payable to my order as Assignee, which said bonds shall bear 6 per cent. interest from date until paid and have the force and effect of a judgment.

O. M. ROGERS, Assignee of Edmund Stephens.

To the Superintendent of Schools and the Teachers of the Public Schools of Boone County, Ky:—

As you are probably aware there has been a movement inaugurated to encourago the study of Agriculture among the younger generation and so far prizes and cash to the amount of $130 have been subscribed to be offered in various contests covering various fields of Agriculture, and to the success of the movement we are respectfully soliciting your assistance and cooperation. The subscriptions are based on promise that there will be a County Agricultural Agent employed as the conditions of the subscriptions are that all the contests shall be under the direction and supervision of a County Agricultural Agent. One of the subscriptions is for the best acre of corn, twenty-five to compete, the contestant to be boys not over 16 years old. What we'd like for the County Superintendent and teachers, is to mention the matter to the pupils in the several schools, enlist the boys and girls in the respective contests, make suggestions as to the kind of contests as would best serve to cause the young people to become attached to the farm and improved methods of Agriculture; to suggest the nature of the contests and the prizes to be awarded, and to make such suggestions along the line of bettering farm conditions. We feel that there should be a County Institute held in the fall of the year when all the prizes are to be awarded and the farm interests discussed. As it is an educational movement, and there should be an organization, it is further suggested that the County Scool Superintendent act as chairman of the movement with the cooperation of the County Agricultural Agent whenever one is elected. All of the teachers who manifest an interest in this matter will please communicate with the County School Superintendent, E. C. Riley, Burlington, Ky., so that a concert of action will begin at once. The subscriptions were given by a few public spirited citizens about Walton, but as it is anticipated that many more times the amount will probably be subscribed, the list will be left open for further subscriptions to be indicated to the County Superintendent, who, when the plan is entirely formulated, will cause the full list to be published in the Boone County Recorder.

Very respectfully yours,
C. L. GRIFFITH.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, God, in his infinite wisdom, has seen cause to call from his labor on earth to that celestial lodge above, our beloved brother, Malchus Souther, who departed this life Jan. 22d, 1915, at about 6 o'clock, p. m., aged 60 years and 6 months, having been an Odd-Fellow for many years; and while we are deeply grieved at his death we humbly bow to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That this lodge has lost a worthy brother, that the community loses a useful and honorable citizen, his family a kind and loving husband and father.

Resolved, That we deeply deplore the loss of our brother and extend our heart-felt sympathy to the family and friends.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on our Minute Book, a copy sent to the family of the deceased, and a copy to the Boone County Recorder for publication.

THE PUBLISHER.

Sam Johnson's saw mill has been in operation the past week.

The Burlington diphtheria scare that extended to the entire county has subsided.

Mesdames R. S. Crisler and Wm. Hughes were in the city shopping one day last week.

A. F. Milner, of Point Pleasant neighborhood, sold his farm last week to Geo. Werns.

This is the shortest month of the year, and a little more than one-twelfth of 1916 is gone.

Henry Wingate delivered 5,200 pounds of tobacco to Albert Conner, one day the past week.

Yesterday was ground hog day and you know what kind of weather to expect for the next six weeks.

Born, Jan. 26, to Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Kelly, 320 Johnson Street, Covington, an eight pound daughter, Londa Lee.

Albert Conner was well pleased with his sale of tobacco on the breaks in Cincinnati, last Wednesday and Thursday.

Cecil Gaines and wife will move from Erlanger to Burlington shortly, and occupy the residence of his father, Judge Sidney Gaines.

According to a report from the State agent, a boys' corn club in Minnesota last year sold between 200 and 300 bushels of seed corn at $4 a bushel.

Benj. Hensley, of Flickertown, was in Tuesday and placed an advertisement for a sale of his personal property on the 24th inst. He will move to Petersburg.

A party of Cincinnati hikers took dinner at the Boone House last Sunday. They came by the way of Lawrenceburg and returned by way of Anderson's Ferry.

Miss Sopha Belle Buckner, daughter of the late Hub Buckner, died at her home in Erlanger, last Saturday, having been a great sufferer for many months.

J. E. Snyder, of Erlanger, was a caller at this office last week. He represents the Cincinnati Oil Works and makes that firm an excellent road man and is kept on the move all the time.

Several Burlington terpsichore artists attended the Leap Year party given by the young ladies of Erlanger, last Friday night. They tarried in the ball room until the near approach of another day.

Master Robert Clore came in last publication day and introduced his subject by exclaiming: "Well, what do you think I caught a mess of fish this morning, and papa and I are going fishing again this evening.

The rain fall during the month of January was unusually large and the ground has in it all the water it can contain, and everybody is anxious to see a change in the weather conditions that prevailed thru January.

As Asa McMullen was coming from Limaburg, last Thursday morning he found a black snake about two feet long, which he killed. Asa does not imbibe, consequently you need not inquire what brand he is using.

Circuit Judge Sidney Gaines will begin a three weeks' grind at Williamstown, Grant county, next Monday. Grant county has more circuit court business than any other county in the district, much of which is very important.

Japetha P. Tanner, who resides about two miles out on the Burlington and Union road, was stricken with paralysis about four o'clock last Thursday morning, since which time he has been in a critical condition. Mr. Tanner's right side is involved.

The first electric push button was made by Benjamin Franklin, who used it in connection with a device for charging the metal railing before his house, much to the surprise of certain learning loafers for whose proximity the great man did not exceedingly yearn.

L. M. Collins, of Prescott, Arizona, Secretary of the Fortune Mining Company, will be in Burlington next Saturday, and desires to meet as many of the stock holders as can make it convenient to be in Burlington at 10 a. m., that day or in the afternoon.

Assessor W. P. Beemon and his deputy Boone F. Rogers, found taxable property in the county on their 1915 assessment to the amount of $7,191,955, being an increase of about thirty thousand dollars over the year before. County Clerk Rogers finished totalling the assessor's books last Thursday.

EXTRA DAY IN 1916

Should Be Used to Celebrate Prosperity.

The year 1916 is going to be particularly kind to us in one respect at least. No matter how events may turn out in Europe, or whether "times" will be good or bad nothing can alter the fact that during the year that is here we are to be presented with one whole extra day. Tuesday, February 29, has been given us to do what we like with, and the 29th day of February doesn't come so often that we can afford to disregard it. One single extra day may not seem so very much to the individual, but when you come to add together all that the total of individuals can do and earn in 24 hours the aggregate is enormous. The suggestion is made that we take that extra day and make it a Prosperity Day. The name is a good one, because on that day each one of us will receive an extra day's revenue and, as has been said, the total for all of us is a large amount of money. But, aside from the money end of it, let us on that day think and talk prosperity, let us get together and try to realize just how well off we are and how fortunate our country is. We are all convinced that, kind as Providence has been to us even better things are in store for us in the immediate future. It is a good idea to devote this extra day to an open expression of the faith that is in us.—Harrodsburg Herald.

Received Bad News.

Mr. Noah Moody received word a few days ago of the death of his nephew, Charles Darlinglouse, of Dearborn county, Indiana, who fell off of a load of tobacco and was run over by the wagon. In a few days thereafter came the sad intelligence of the death of his brother Geo. Moody's wife, also of Indiana.

Prices Encouraging.

The prices for which tobacco has been selling is very encouraging to the growers and may result in a considerable increase in the acreage that will be pitched in this county this year. The growers will begin preparing plant beds as soon as the weather permits, following which work an estimate of the acreage for 1916 can be approximated.

Mrs. Frances Adams Dead.

Mrs. Frances Adams, of Erlanger, widow of the late Wm. Adams, died Friday and was buried in the family lot in the Odd-Fellows cemetery at Burlington, last Monday. She was a daughter of Samuel Delph, a pioneer citizen of this part of Boone county, and was 73 years old. She is survived by two sons, Dr. James L. Adams and Attorney Samuel W. Adams.

Believes in Preparedness.

One member of the Hog Wallow Debating Society is an ardent supporter of President Wilson's "Preparedness" program, and last week he opened a deep trench and threw up earthworks on his premises, and has furnished R. S. Crisler with specification for the manufacture of half a dozen disappearing guns to guard the ramparts.

The Worst Ever

Turnpikes were never known to be in a worse condition than so far this month. It is not one or two but all the pikes in the county have become almost impassable for loaded wagons which cut through, leaving deep, ugly ruts. At this time of the year there is generally a lot of heavy hauling to do and the roads are left in a bad condition. But what are roads for if not to be used when needed?

Cut Out a Pool

A short distance below the mouth of the Miami the action of the water has scoured out a hole about 100 feet in diameter and from twenty-five to thirty feet deep. On account of the mud it is not convenient now to get near the hole, but those who saw it previous to the last rise say the excavation is as smooth and regular as if it had been dug for a huge reservoir.—Lawrenceburg Press.

Well Equipped Undertakers

Fitch Bros., Liverymen, Funeral Directors and Licensed Enbalmers for Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky, have added to their fine horse drawn equipment an elegant Automobile Hearse and Ambulance which is the first in Southern Indiana and in connection with their complete motor equipment makes them prepared to furnish either horse or motor drawn funerals. They appreciate your patronage with the guarantee of satisfaction both in price and service.

Also auto livery, larage and supplies. Phone 56, Lawrenceburg Indiana.

Fifty-two Lined Up

The rural mail carrier's job is very popular in Grant county, and when there is a vacancy the inhabitants go after it by the dozens. As proof of the above statement the following from last week's Grant County News is offered:

"Fifty-two men took the rural carrier examination held here last Saturday. On account of the large number of applicants the chapel of the school building was requisitioned by the postmaster for holding the examination. There are only two jobs in view, one at Williamstown, the other at Elliston. The Williamstown job will pay about $1,200 per year, while the one at Elliston will only pay about $840 per year. There were seven applicants from the Elliston postoffice, the remainder being from Williamstown. Among those examined were several school teachers."

ROAD BILL PASSES HOUSE.

Under Provisions of Measure Kentucky Would Receive $580,274 Annually.

Washington.—The Kentucky delegation to a man voted in favor of the Shackelford Good Roads Bill which passed the House 28 to 81. During the debate on this bill Representative D. H. Kincheloe, W. J. Fields, A. W. Barkley and J. W. Langley spoke for it.

The bill provides for Federal aid for good roads in the sum of $25,000,000 and in many respects follows the lines of the bill offered by Mr. Kincheloe. Under the terms of the Shackelford bill, Kentucky would receive $580,274 annually from the Federal Government for improvement of its rural post roads.

On basis of population, Kentucky would get $273,500; on basis of mileage of rural and star routes the State would receive $241,774 and the arbitrary appropriation of $65,000 given alike to all States. Indian a would receive $854,868 and Tennessee $694,050.

The States would share in the appropriation on the basis of their population and the number of their post roads. The money would be disbursed through the various State Highway Commissions.

Opponents of the measure insisted that this proposed appropriation would be only the forerunner to requests for others of a similar nature.

Representatives from the larger cities generally opposed the project on the ground that the roads would not be of general benefit and would go to favored sections of rural districts.

It was freely predicted that strong opposition would be encountered in the Senate.

WASTE FORTUNES

A Billion Dollars' Worth of Cornstalks Is Lost Annually.

The enormous waste in crops and money which is now experienced generally on the farms of the U. S. was declared preventable in a striking address recently before the delegates of the National Implement and Vehicle Association by H. M. Coltrell general manager of the Bureau of Farm Development of the Business Men's Club, of Memphis, Tenn. "Extended investigations in many states have shown," he said, "that one-third of the dairy cows in the United States are kept at loss. The food they eat could be sold for more than their milk brings. Another third of the dairy cows in the United States barely pay for their food. The average hog grower raises four pigs a litter to weaning time. Other growers, with great care but with no more expense, raise six, and men who select breeding animals from prolific strains raise an average of eight to weaning time. In the winter wheat belt, he continued, "tests extending over several years show that land prepared by the middle of July yields twenty bushels more an acre than land prepared in the middle of September. Starting with July, each month's delay in the preparation of the land reduces the yield ten bushels an acre. Yet most of the wheat land remains untouched until August, and a large area until September and October. Sixty per cent of the food value of a corn plant is in the ear and forty per cent in the stalk. Food to the value of $1,000,000,000 is wasted every year in this country in corn stalks that are not used. No industry except farming could or would stand such an annual waste."

The people along the East Bend road are talking turnpike again.

Several loads of tobacco have been received by Albert Conner this week.

L. C. Craig, of East Bend, called on the Recorder yesterday. He will have a sale some time this month.

Farmers Institute

The State Farmers Institute will be held in Frankfort, Feb. 15th, 16th and 17th, 1916. An excellent program has been arranged for this occasion, a copy of which will shortly be sent you.

Who is Correct?

A sample of the water in the cistern at the school house was pronounced not polluted by the State Board of Health several days ago, and now comes along the bacteriologist at the State Experiment Station at Lexington, and pronounces the water in the same cistern as unfit for drinking purposes. Doctors disagree and patients die.

What appears to be the only portion of last week's meteorite so far found in Scott county is that discovered by former Constable Quince A. Stockdell in his back yard. It is 2 by 4 by 7 inches in size and weighs exactly 2 pounds. Cupped deeply in two places, it resembles iron ore, and when found was sunken deep in the ground.

It Takes Money and Work.

While talking about making good roads why not talk a little about taking care of our roads.

Our neighbor States have good roads and they know how to take care of them. They don't allow heavy hauling on their roads in wet weather. Unless we adopt something of this kind I don't see any need of voting the bonds.

I am in favor of good roads, but think we ought to make a provision for them. I don't see why Kentucky cannot have just as good laws as Indiana.

It takes work and money to build good roads, and these days very few want to work on public roads. To make these good roads it takes feet, arms and legs. You cannot simply make them with your mouth.

Trustee's Sale!

Farm of One Hundred and Eight and One-Half Acres to be Sold at Public Auction, on Monday, Feb. 7, '16

At 1 O'Clock P. M.,

The same being County Court Day, at the Court House door, in the town of Burlington, Boone County, Ky., as Trustee of the last Will and Testament of D. G. Rice, deceased, I will sell to the highest and best bidder the following described real estate, to-wit:

Situated in Boone County, Ky., on the Ohio River, at the mouth of Gunpowder Creek, and bounded generally as follows: On the North by the Ohio River; on the West by the lands of Lucian Harris; on the South by the lands of E. Ogden and William Shinkle; on the East by the lands of Mary L. Ryle and Gunpowder Creek, containing one hundred and eight and one-half (108 1-2) acres.

Eighty [80] acres of this land is river bottom and very productive. The remaining twenty-eight and one-half [28 1-2] acres is hill land, inclosed by a good fence and is good grass land. A county road separates the hill from the bottom land. This farm is improved with a good tenant house, barn, new corn crib and other out-buildings, all in fair state of repair and is splendidly adapted to the business of stock raising, especially hogs. This sale is being made in order to settle the estate of D. G. Rice, deceased, and as Trustee under his Will, I have full and complete power and authority to make the sale and conveyance. Here is a splendid opportunity for some one to buy a good farm at a moderate price.

TERMS OF SALE.

One-third of the purchase money must be paid in cash and the balance in two equal installments, evidenced by promissory notes, payable to my order as Trustee, due in one and two years from date, bearing 6 per cent. interest and payment thereof secured by a lien reserved in the deed. The purchaser will be given the privilege of paying cash.

I reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

S. D. RICE, Trustee of the last Will and Testament of D. G. Rice, deceased,
Dillsboro, Indiana.

For further information, inquire of O. M. Rogers, Attorney, Covington, Ky.

NOTICE.

FARMERS—The tobacco season is now on us and I want to acquaint you with this fact, that I am better prepared and better equipped to take care of you and make you feel at home than I ever was before. Warm and well ventilated rooms, hot and cold water all over the house, large and roomy lobby, and the best 25 cent meal in the State of Kentucky.

I thank you for your past patronage and hope to merit and do solicit a continuation of the same.

In Memory of Malchus Souther.

"The air is full of farwells to the dying."

Malchus Souther departed this life January 22, 1916, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Howard Tanner. The cause of his death was an annurism of one of the large arteries of the chest.

He was born, reared, lived and died in the same community and was too well known in his dealings with his fellowmen to need comment. He was united in marriage to Sallie Gordon, of Hebron, Ky., and by this union there was given three sons and two daughters, all of whom are living in this county, and were present when the death angel summoned him.

He united with the Christian Church early in life, and was a consistent member until his death, ready and willing, at all times, to serve his congregation in his humble way; he was an ideal neighbor, a true and loyal friend, willing to sacrifice for those who confided in him. He was a big man in every sense of the term. "A Prince in Israel has fallen" in his taking away.

In sickness, distress or death he was there to serve with big and willing hands, to comfort by sharing heavy grief, to sympathize with a big heart, and to mourn with a deep soul.

Malchus Souther was a devoted husband thoroughly tried in sickness and in health; he was a father faithful and self-sacrificing to his children, a counselor to those who asked advice, but never forced his judgment upon any one when uncalled for. He always had a kind word for his friends and acquaintances. Here was a well spent life of three score years. The many deeds of kindness shall live in the memory of those who knew and loved him.

May his loved ones emulate his life and take comfort in the thought that "Eye has not seen, neither has it entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

USING THE LEFT-OVERS

MAY BE MADE FOUNDATION FOR APPETIZING DISHES.

Clever Housewife Will Quickly Learn How to Prepare Them So That There Is No Hint of Rehashing—Some Directions.

(Prepared by Nellie Maxwell of the Department of Farmers' Institutes, University of Wisconsin.)

Left-overs, like the poor, "are always with us."

There are none who care to know that they are being served with left-overs, no matter how appetising these may be made. Yet, even in the best-regulated families there are bits of left-over food which, if care and thought is used, may be served again without a suspicion that they are rehashed.

The soup kettle has been aptly termed the kitchen waste basket, receiving many a choice manuscript which might otherwise go for naught. Foods thrown away by extravagant cooks would feed an entire family, and well.

Now for a few examples: The bones and carcass of a turkey cracked and put into cold water, then brought to the simmering point and cooked for several hours, makes a good flavored broth which may be used in any number of ways—to make soup, as a liquid for meat sauces, and as a flavor for gravy. The bits of meat left on the bones of the carver, if cut in bits, added to thick, well-seasoned gravy (also a left-over) placed in a baking dish and covered with seasoned mashed potato, brushed with egg to make a nice brown crust, then baked, is a dish which the entire family will like.

A half cupful of stewed tomato, less or more, may be added to the turkey bone broth with celery salt, salt, pepper, and two tablespoonfuls of boiled rice, and you have a fine hot soup to serve on a cold night.

A half cupful of canned salmon is left over from a previous meal. Shred the fish with two forks, add a chopped sour pickle or a few olives, some chopped cabbage and a little celery, with a simple boiled dressing, the result is a most appetizing salad which may be served on lettuce or shredded cabbage. Tuna fish is especially good served this way or with hot riced potatoes. Place the hot fish in the center of a hot platter, surround with seasoned riced potatoes, then around this pour a thick, rich white sauce.

When cooking carrots to serve in any ordinary way, reserve a few cooked whole, then later serve them cut in strips seasoned with butter and lemon juice. Serve very hot. A grating of nutmeg or a dash or two of cayenne pepper is liked by some for a little zest.

Any small amount of cranberry jelly, if cut in cubes, may be served as a pudding garnish, with hard sauce or whipped cream.

Fruit juice, left from canned fruit, will make delicious pudding sauces or as liquid in fruit cake and as salad dressings for fruit, particularly if it is light in color, like peach, pear or pineapple juice.

Delectables.

One-half cupful butter, one cupful sugar, two eggs, one tablespoonful milk, two and one-half cupfuls flour, two level teaspoonfuls baking powder and one-quarter teaspoonful salt. Roll thin and cut round.

For filling for this use one cupful chopped raisins, one-half cupful chopped pecan nuts, two tablespoonfuls lemon juice, one tablespoonful flour and one-half cupful water. Boil until thick, let get cold. Put teaspoonful on center of cookie, cover with another, pinch edges together.

Chicken Turnovers.

Instead of making chicken pie from boiled creamed chicken use it up in turnovers. Make a good family pastry. Cut out in rounds the desired size and lay in a tablespoonful of the creamed chicken seasoned with a green pepper chopped fine, if liked, or a little chopped tongue or ham can be used, if on hand. Either gives a good flavor. Fold over as a turnover and bake until a light brown.

Hamburg Steak Soup.

Have lean beef hamburg and place on stove with cold water. Boil three-fourths to one hour only. Nice with rice and carrots, or rice only, also served as vegetable soup. Vegetables must be put in at once with the hamburg, as they will be done together. Season to taste. Quickly done and precisely the same as other soup. Nice also for supper to put the little ones to sleep on.

Chiffonnade Sauce.

Mix, with a pint of French dressing, some parsley, fresh tarragon, chervil, chives and shallots, all finely chopped. Add two spoonfuls of catchup. Pour over the lettuce two spoonfuls of catchup. Pour over the lettuce cut into four quarters.

Grind the Pork With Beans.

If one is not fond of pork baked in beans it is better to grind the pork up in a food chopper and add to beans after they are parboiled. It will season the beans better and there will be no pork to be left over.

To Clean White Kid Shoes.

A lather made of pure white soap [illegible] cleaning for canvas shoes. Scrub [illegible] with a brush dipped in the lather and rub dry with a soft cloth. Polish with the finest powdered pumice stone.

SHOULD BE OFTEN ON TABLE

Apples May Be Served in So Many Ways That It Will Be Long Before They Pall.

Apples served raw should be ripe. If they have come from the market they should be washed before being served.

Pared and sliced apples may be kept from discoloring by putting them into a salt solution, one level tablespoonful of salt to three pints of cold water.

Fine-flavored, fresh apples are not improved in cooking by the use of cinnamon or other condiments.

To make "bird's nest," fill a pie tin which has perpendicular sides, with apples cored and cut into eighths. Add a very little water, cover with a biscuit crust, and bake 25 minutes, or until the apples are tender. When baked, turn the crust side down on a large platter, sprinkle with sugar and serve with cream.

For apple sauce, prepare apples as for bird's nest, place in an acid-proof saucepan with a small amount of water and cook until tender but not mushy. Add small amount of sugar, continue the cooking for a minute or two, and then remove and allow to cool.

DO DRY CLEANING AT HOME

Satisfactory Results May Be Obtained Without the Expense of Professional Services.

Make a stock solution of eight ounces strong ammonia, one-half ounce chloroform and one-half ounce ether. Cork tightly and keep away from the face, says the Scientific American. Dissolve one bar of naphtha soap in three gallons hot water, add one-half teaspoonful each of baking soda, salt and alum and three tablespoonfuls of the ammonia-chloroform-ether mixture.

To clean oriental or other rugs to their original brightness make a lather and dip a brush in it, shaking out superfluous water. Go over the rug with this brush and the lather dries out almost immediately. No harm whatever is done to the best oriental rug.

To sponge spots from clothing, even delicate silk, and upholstery, dip a soft sponge in the lather, wring as dry as possible and sponge off the spot.

To wash sweaters, blankets or other flannels let the mixture become nearly cold, soak the garments in it half an hour or less, squeeze dry, rinse in clear water, squeeze dry and hang up.

The various ingredients used not only remove grease and dirt but set and brighten colors.

Boiled Potatoes With Onion Sauce.

Boiled potatoes in their jackets with bacon and onion sauce. The potatoes are cooked soft in boiling water and sent to table smoking hot, still in their skins, with a bit of salt sprinkled over them. Each person peels his own potato and eats it with this sauce. Get half a pound of smoked bacon, not too fat, remove the rind and chop into small dice; fry until they begin to crisp, then add an equal amount of chopped onion, mix and cook slowly, stirring occasionally until the onion is a fine yellow color, but not to blacken. Serve hot in gravy boat. It has a delicious flavor and is not as indigestible as it sounds.

Cocoa Cake.

Here is a very inexpensive cake which is original with me. It is very moist, and never fails. Put into your sieve one cupful sugar, one and one-half cupfuls flour, two level teaspoonfuls baking powder (or one-half teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful cream of tartar), one teaspoonful cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful cloves, one-half teaspoonful salt. Sift all this into your mixing bowl. Break in one egg. Add three tablespoonfuls melted butter, also two-thirds cupful warm water (hot boiling) and a teaspoonful vanilla. Beat well. Bake rather slowly. Frost when cool with white frosting.

Household Help.

A good idea is a list of all jellies and preserves either in the kitchen or fruit closet where it may be added to or checked as preserves are made or used.

In making suet pudding if you grind the suet and steam the pudding in a tube pan it will be infinitely improved.

Homemade pistachio flavor is made in the following way: Tie in muslin a handful of bruised peach leaves, cover with either water or milk, and let stand to absorb the flavor. Either milk or water in quantity to use in the cake or dish you wish flavored.

Neatness in Buffet Drawer.

Bleached canton flannel is used to make these handy knife and fork cases. Bind them with blue ribbon and use the same ribbon for tying the cases when rolled up. Stitch places for a dozen knives. The outline "Knives" and "Forks" may be done in blue also on the cases. A case like this will add much to the tidiness of buffet drawers.

Raw Carrots.

Take nice, fresh, crisp carrots, scrape and put through a food chopper, using the coarse knife. To each pint of carrots add two tablespoonfuls melted butter, one teaspoonful sugar and salt to taste.

Sand Soap in Your Food Chopper.

If the knives of your food chopper become black and dull, run a piece of sand soap through the chopper as you would a potato. It brightens and sharpens the knives and they cut like

SEWING-ROOM WISDOM

LITTLE THINGS THAT WILL ELIMINATE TROUBLE.

All Preparations Should Be Made Before Actual Work on the Garments Is Commenced—Have Machine in Perfect Order.

Do you begin feeling that you will go mad before the garment is completed? Do you carry your sewing from room to room, losing this, that and the other thing, and never knowing where needles and thread are? Do you wait till the sewing day before cleaning the sewing machine? If you do any one or all of these things you are wrong. The fates of the thread and needle must be coddled—and all the job begins with a hopeful frame of mind. You have sewed successfully before this; why should you fail now?

So first buckle on your armor of faith in yourself. Then, if you haven't done so already, the week before the important business begins try to turn a good part of a light, airy room into the sewing establishment. If a whole room can be given up to it, and kept for the purpose, all the better. Have the room cleaned before you begin any part of the important feat, for cleanliness is a great rest to the spirit. Have a little crockery bowl or pretty pitcher somewhere with a bright flower that you can look at when your heart gets tired. Put the sewing machine near a window and arrange it and the chair so that the light will fall over your left shoulder. Clean it the day before the work is to begin, and if it seems very dusty oil it thoroughly with kerosene oil, and after cleaning it well with this put on a fresh but light supply of machine oil. On the sewing day see to it that no particle of grease is left about the needle or foot to soil the dainty material that is to be made up by sewing a scrap over and over until the thread shows no oil.

For all the big cutting out try to have a large table, for this is more convenient than the lap board, which is never long enough for some things. Put this table conveniently near the sewing machine, and have a smaller and lower one beside it, with all the sewing traps—shears, smaller scissors, a paper of needles, one of pins, hooks, eyes, buttons, tapes and whatever linings or facings are to be used. But put the dress material on the big table on which it is to be cut out, and have somewhere in the room a bit of muslin or dress lining which may be cut up to try effects with collars, cuffs, trimmings, etc. Then fasten the shears with a long braid to your belt, put the tape measure in the pocket of your sewing apron and pin a small pincushion to the left side of your dress waist, stabbing it first with several needles and pins.

With this get-up, which is, of course, for the actual sewing day, little more than ordinary good sense is essential.

In using all flat paper models it is necessary to read the directions on them and not go contrary to their rules. They should also be bought by exact bust or waist measurements, and with any change—increasing or decreasing the size—the alterations must not be made at the edges of the model, but midway in its length or breadth.

For the rest be kind to yourself—and to the next day. Eat a good luncheon and never put up work for the night without laying each band, gusset and seam where it surely can be found the next morning. Through all the sowing—taboo the visitor and sit straight in your chair, never bending the chest or stomach.

Use basting thread; it saves making mistakes that take a long time to alter.

SHOES CALL FOR ATTENTION

In This Day of the Short Skirt Particular Care Must Be Given to Foot Coverings.

In this day of the short skirt the woman who would be considered well dressed must pay particular attention to her feet. In other seasons long skirts hid shoes that were not neat or that were ill fitting, and drew a veil of charity over ankles and feet that were not graceful and shapely. That season is passed, and in this of bold exposure of feet and ankles it behooves the well-dressed woman to consider making her feet and ankles shapely, if they are not so already, and to fit them with shoes that are in style, in good taste and set the foot off to advantage.

There are styles in shoes just as in other accessories of fashion. A woman should not purchase a pair of shoes just because they happen to be the style, if they are not becoming to her, any more than she should buy a gown that did not become her. In buying shoes remember that the best—not the cheapest—makes for economy in the end. A good pair of shoes will outlast two cheap pairs, and will keep their shape and be more comfortable on the feet.

Jabot From a Collar.

Another use for the flat Dutch collar of value is to make it into a jabot. This will require no cutting at all. The collar should be gathered or plaited at the center of the back and the two pointed ends turned directly underneath. It is then hung from the front of a stock collar. Of course, a soft collar of lace or lace-trimmed batiste will fill in this purpose best.

AN AUTO BLOWS UP.

Mr. C. L. Mains, of Minerva, the popular auto bus driver of that thriving little county town, had a narrow escape Friday morning while coming to Maysville.

Just as he was nearing Moransburg his machine stopped suddenly, and before he could ascertain the cause of the trouble an explosion took place in the engine that could be heard several hundred yards away. In an instant he was covered with steam and by rare presence of mind he got away from the explosion with only a few slight burns on the face and hands.

Upon investigation it was found that the radiator had bursted and the hood blown fifty or more feet away from the machine.

Just what caused the accident is not known, but it is thought that the overflow pipe became stopped up on account of freezing and this produced the explosion.

Mr. Mains had a narrow escape and was still nervous when interviewed by The Ledger man.

The damaged auto was towed to Maysville where it will be repaired. The engine was almost completely demolished.—Maysville Ledger.

The indications now are that the proposed Warren county fair is going to materialize and that it will be ready for the first exhibition next September. At one time for many years we had the best fair in the State and there is no reason why we should not have another one equally as good. —Park City News.

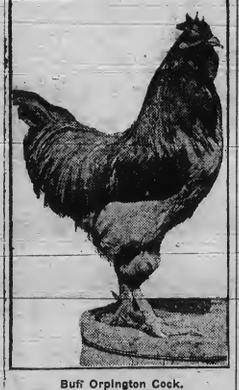
Take your County Paper,

THREE LEADING BREEDS OF CHICKENS



Splendid Chicken Trio.

How many eggs does the ordinary hen lay in a year? What is the highest yield that it is possible to obtain by choosing only the best birds and feeding them with the greatest care?

To these questions no very definite answer can be given, though much light has been thrown on the subject in the past few years. Individual records have been made under the supervision of the agricultural colleges and laying competitions have been instituted in several of the states, in which pens of five or ten birds have been pitted against one another. From the results it is possible to draw a few conclusions.

With poultry, as with other live stock, the amateur is always asking which is the best breed. It was a dispute between the admirers of two breeds that started the first laying contest in Australia 15 years ago. An Australian poultryman who kept Buff Orpingtons was positive that his hens were better egg producers than the Silver Wyandottes of his neighbor. A wager was made and the first trial of six months' performance was begun. Since then the contests have widened out to include all the leading breeds, yet the question of leadership has not been solved. The original claimants for the honor—the Silver Wyandottes and Buff Orpingtons—have, however, long since been outdistanced, leaving the Leghorns, the Wyandottes and the Plymouth Rocks straining for the lead. The anxiety of the amateur to know "which is the best breed" is still unsatisfied.

Buff Orpington Cock.

Leghorns and Wyandottes.

Reviewing the results of the past two years, it is seen that there is something in the strain; that is a breeder with a flock of good layers can raise from them birds that will distinguish themselves in egg production. In the Storr's Connecticut contest, which closed a year ago, the first place was taken by a pen of White Leghorns, the property of F. P. Lincoln of that state. This year the same poultryman is well up on the list with a pen of Plymouth Rocks. In 1914, Tom Barron of Catforth, England, was in second place with White Wyandottes, and this year captured first and third prizes with Wyandottes and Leghorns, respectively. Apparently the skillful breeder can handle any one of several breeds and get results.

In the Philadelphia contest Mr. Barron has also been a consistent winner having taken first and second place in the test a year ago, and coming third in the competition just closed. Another English breeder, Ed. Corn, was in third place last year and up among the leaders this year.

For the past four years an elaborate test has been carried out in Missouri, which included several of the lesser known breeds such as Anconas and Hamburgs. Comparisons were made by months. The laying season has a very direct bearing on profits seeing that winter eggs command the higher prices. Leghorns and Plymouth Rocks proved the best workers in December and January, while Orpingtons led in February. Through the summer there was little advantage, though it was noticeable that Rhode Island Reds began to show up in July and August.

Over the 200 Mark.

In the individual records for Missouri pens, extending over four years, there were 249 hens or 10 per cent of the whole number of entries that laid 200 eggs or more in one year. Fourteen per cent of the hens laid less than 90 eggs in one year. The average of all the hens during the four years was 152 eggs each.

Commenting on the profit to be obtained from the good layers and the shirkers, the manager of the contest says, that at 20 cents per dozen and at an estimated cost of $1 to feed each hen a year, the hen which lays 60 eggs in a year, just pays for her feed, and estimating that it costs one-half as much for housing and labor, the hen which lays 90 eggs per year just pays her keeping. The hen which lays 100 eggs in one year makes a profit of ten eggs, while the hen which lays the sum of 120 eggs in one year makes a profit of 30 cents, and is therefore three times as profitable as the hen which lays 100 eggs. The hens which lay 200 eggs are 110 eggs profit, which would be 1.83 1-3 profit. Considering this as interest at per cent on an investment, the hen would be worth $22.91.

One of the conclusions reached by Miller Purvis, the noted poultry authority, is that the competitions have brought the egg laying hen into her proper place beside the fancy bird that wins in the show. For every dollar spent for poultry for food, at least $2 are spent for eggs. Hence, the poultryman who is looking for breeding stock will demand to be shown something in the way of accomplishment in the flock he is choosing from. Before the time of laying competitions breeders made claims concerning the prizes they had won at poultry shows; now they add to these claims the egg records of their hens, if they have had the courage to put them to the test. The Oregon crossbred hen that laid 303 eggs in a year and 505 in two consecutive years has had more newspaper space used in telling about her than any other hen. Fifteen years ago a hen with the same blood mixture would have been called a mongrel and no attention would have been paid to her. Today her daughters or near female relatives have taken third place in the contest at San Francisco exposition. Further, a pen of barnyard mongrels tested in one of the competitions laid almost exactly the number of eggs that made the average of the 495 purebred hens constituting the remainder of the entries.

GREEN FEED VERY ESSENTIAL

Hens Relish Turnips, Beets, Mangels, Etc.—Sprouted Oats Probably Best for Winter.

Are you giving the layers as much grain feed as they want? If not, better see to it. Hens consume large quantities of grain and when shut up they miss this food.

Turnips, beets, mangels, rutabagas, carrots and the like are relished by the fowls. Cabbage is too. Sprouted oats is, perhaps, the best green feed, as in it the hens get both the green sprouts and the grain.

Some kind of green ration is necessary, however, if the hens are expected to lay properly during the winter months.

Green Food is Necessary.

Until grass comes, the laying hen must be fed with its equivalent in the shape of cabbage, beets, sprouted oats or soaked alfalfa leaves. Without green food to supplement the grain ration, the hen will not prove profitable.

THAT MAN CHARLIE

By ROBERTA CARSON.

Paula, windblown and rainsoaked, burst into the living room where her mother was reading. "No luck, mother! There isn't a maid, black, white or indifferent, who will budge a foot in our direction just because we're a couple of yards out of town. McManus at the employment office says they're all that way and he can't do anything about it. I told him to send out anyone who came along. A man would do if he could get one. Oh, why did dear old faithful Lizzie have to get married? And just now of all times!" She dropped dismally into a chair. "What can we do?"

Mrs. Courtland tapped her book thoughtfully. "If it were anybody in the world but the Remingtons who were coming it really wouldn't make so much difference. But they live so well and are so precise about everything."

"And there's a son coming, too!" groaned Paula. "Oh, we just can't have them. Father might telegraph to Remington pater that somebody has died, or that we've had a fire, or smallpox, or something."

"They are motoring here from Boston, Paula, and left the middle of the week. We would not know where to reach them by wire."

"Well, then we still have two days!" Paula got up and took off her hat. "For forty-eight hours I'm going to clean the house till it shines. Whatever the Remingtons find, it won't be dirt."

Bang! Bang! Bang! went the carpet beater wielded by a round, white arm, strengthened and seasoned by many rounds of golf and tennis.

Paula was talking to a man. She had seen him pass slowly along the side street as if searching for a house. "McManus has sent us a man I do believe.—Stop! Wait a minute! Are you looking for Courtland's?"

"Yes."

"Did Mr. McManus, the employment man, send you?"

"Yes—but how—"

"Never mind! There's no time to talk. No matter what you can or can't do now—you are better than nobody and we need you. I'll give you an old coat of father's till your things come. Then beat these rugs and sweep them off. Get the hose in the laundry and scrub the porches and walks. Shine the brasses around the front door and then come up stairs. I've forty windows for you to clean. Sounds like a lot, but it's got to be done!"

So Charlie banged rugs, scrubbed stairs, oiled floors, cleaned windows, beat eggs, stripped the fat off the ham, ground coffee, ran errands, changed furniture and cut glass. At the last minute on Friday he helped iron the curtains after Paula had shown him how, and then after dinner he washed the dishes carefully, put them away and cleaned up the kitchen.

Then he presented himself to Paula in the library. "Miss, I'm sorry, but I've got to leave."

"What? You can't go now, Charlie." She sat down with shaking knees.

"Sorry, but I gotta."

"But—why?"

"My family needs me. I gotta go. I tried to help all I could."

"Oh, you did, Charlie. You're a jewel. But what will we do when the company comes in the morning? No one to do dishes or anything!"

"Mebbe the company can help."

Paula laughed weakly. "Yes, maybe they can, but then again maybe they won't. But of course you don't understand, Charlie. All right, if you've got to go, we've got to let you. I'll get your money from father. Four dollars—is that right?"

The next morning the Courtlands watched the clock anxiously, fearful lest their guests should arrive before the work was done. But things were in order and mother and daughter in faultless toilets when an automobile containing three people drew up to the curb.

Mr. and Mrs. Remington were greeted cordially and the Courtlands waited expectantly for the begoggled son, who was busy with the car outside. Then he came, and something in the travel-worn suit and shapeless cap seemed familiar to Paula. Off came the goggles, and behold—Charlie!

The Remingtons enjoyed the situation so hugely that the astonished Courtlands joined in the laugh. "We have heard from our son how the land lies!" laughed Mrs. Remington, "so we are all prepared to roll up our sleeves and pitch in and help."

Later, Charlie Remington had a few words alone with Paula in the library where he had handed in his resignation the night before.

Philosophic King.

Though King Peter has refused to leave his Serbian soldiers, he is not a military man at heart. Rather is he a scholar and philosopher, as is shown by his admiration of John Stuart Mill, whose works he has anonymously translated into Serbian. When in exile in Paris and Geneva, King Peter lived very modestly, renting upper flats at £30 a year in each place. In the agreement with his Geneva landlord was a stipulation that if he should be summoned to the Serbian throne his lease should terminate.—London Evening Standard.

Wants State Aid.

The Larue County Fiscal Court has made application to the State Road Department for $12,000 state aid money in 1916 to be used on the county's inter county seat roads. However, it is regarded as unlikely that the full amount will be obtained, the amount the coundetermined by the amount it determine d by the amount it pays into the State road fund, which would prevent getting the full $12,000. But with application made for the largest amount possible for any county to get, Larue is sure to receive the largest amount it would be possible for it to get.

The 1916 county road fund will be between $9,000 and $10,000, this including money from the franchise taxes. The present percentago of taxes collected which goes to the road fund is 20 per cent. but it has been rumored that the Fiscal Court may make a change and instead of giving 20 per cent. to the road fund and 20 per cent. to the general fund may give 25 per cent. to the roads and appropriate only 15 per cent. to the general fund. Should this be done the total county road fund, exclusive of State aid, would be about $12,000, and with the amount of State aid possible to secure make the total amount of road money in excess of $16,000.

The road fund of Larue county during the next five years, if judiciously handled, should build many miles of solid road.—Larue County Herald.

Example of Labor Efficiency.

Efficiency of farm labor is often as important as its distribution. Two young men were plowing clover sod. Each had two horses hitched to a 14-inch walking plow. It was heavy plowing, and each team was barely able to plow 1½ acres a day. One morning the men decided to try three horses to one plow. They did so, and to their great surprise one man and three horses easily plowed three acres per day. They plowed as much as two men and four horses had previously done and did it much more easily. It was even easier for the driver, because it is always easier to drive a team that is not overloaded. The new arrangement released one man and one horse for other work.

About 500 acres of Clark county hemp, amounting in the aggregate to nearly 450,000 pounds, has been purchased by the firm of E. F. Spear & Son, of Paris, at the reported price of $14.50 a hundred. This is the highest price paid for hemp in many years, and will doubtless stimulate many farmers thruout the hemp belt to increase their crops of hemp this year. Many express the opinion that the price will go even higher.—Bluegrass Clipper.

A GROWING MENACE

Eight thousand persons living in the United States, January 1, 1916, will be murdered before January 1, 1917. This is one conclusion to be drawn from statistics for 1915 collected by F. L. Hoffman, of New York, showing an average of eight murders to each 100,000 of population, the figures being based on a ten-year tabulation of homicides in 30 leading cities of the United States.

The statistics show a rising rate of murders in most cities. It is in cities where the largest number of murders occur.

It is impossible to escape the conclusion that for some reason life is being more cheaply held. Perhaps this is due to lax enforcement of laws against murder, or to the number of homicides who yearly elude capture. In 1915 eight atrocious murders were discovered in New York with out the capture of a single one of the criminals by the police. Or the blame may lie with legal punitive methods lacking severity and with ineffective work for the capture of slayers.

Perhaps the root of the trouble lies deeper than any of these items indicate. It may be that there is too much of a tendency popularly to excuse the taking of life, not enough emphasis on the sacredness of life, too much of a drift in the direction of experimenting with life.

It is a subject of profound importance. It goes down to the foundations of society.—Detroit Free Press.

United States rice exportation quadrupled in a year.

The State Department of Agriculture has appointed Charles L. Griffith a delegate to the State Industrial Institute that meets at Frankfort, Feb. 15th, 16th and 17th. Mr. Griffith not only takes a great interest in such matters, but is awake to every matter of public interest and improvement and particularly along the farming line, and his selection as a delegate is wise and judicious.

Extensive arrangements are being made for the ordination services of Rev. Rivolette F. DeMoisey who is to be ordained a minister of the Baptist church Tuesday, Feb. 22d; at the Walton Baptist church, when an all day service will be held, and a good dinner served at the noon hour. From [illegible] of different parts [illegible] will be present and [illegible] exercises.

J. W. Herndon of Berea, Madison county, spent Monday here looking at several farms with a view to purchasing and H. M. Herndon making his residence on the property. Real Estate Agent Geo. B. Powers has the matter in hand and expects to close the trade.

Inquiry was made here last week about the strange man that was noticed roaming about the country near Piner, Kenton-co., the notice of which in the paper causing Mrs. Wm. B. Kircher, of Sand Lordtown, Kenton county, to call up on the telephone, stating that a relative named Jacob Barz had wandered away from his home last week and thought he was the man noticed about Piner, and she would be glad to have any information that would lead to securing his return home.

Married—Andrew Hopperton and Miss Goldis Muddman were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at the residence of the officiating minister Rev. A. Kirtley Johnson of the Baptist church, a few intimate friends being in attendance. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Hopperton of Walton, and the pretty bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. M. Muddman of Grant county. The happy young couple will make their home on the farm near Walton, recently purchased from Mrs. Julia F. West.

J. M. Herndon, one of the up-to-date farmers and live stock traders of near Folsom, Grant county, spent Friday and Saturday here and bought a span of good mules from Geo. L. Miller of Big Bone Springs. Mr. Herndon also looked at several farms with a view to purchasing and making his home in this quarter, instead of taking up his abode in Mississippi where he owns a large body of land. He is a first class citizen and No. 1 farmer and it would be very good for our community if he would make this locality his home.

Sidney S. Hance, an old and esteemed citizen of South Fork, died at his home there last Saturday night after a short illness from ailments peculiar to old age, he being 79 years old last December. He was the son of Wm. Hance and was born and reared in Gallatin county. His brother J. William Hance died a couple of months ago at Sherman, Grant-co., and two brothers survive, M. E. and A. R. Hance of Walton. The funeral took place at the South Fork Christian church, Monday, Rev. J. B. Yager conducting the services.

Thursday evening, John Miller, the young son of Wood R. Miller of Big Bone Springs, had a peculiar accident happen. During the day he had purchased some torpedoes and placed a couple of them in a pocket book in which he had some silver money, and in undressing to retire for the night the pocketbook dropped from his pocket to the floor causing the torpedoes to explode, tearing the pocketbook to pieces and scattering the money about the room. It shows the danger of carrying such explosives about the person, as the case with which the torpedoes were exploded indicate they might have been discharged in the pocket, producing a wound from which lock jaw is liable to occur.

Married—E. Ellis McElroy and Miss Hazel Vallandingham were united in the bonds of holy wedlock last Tuesday evening, Jan 25th, at the home of the officiating minister Rev. J. T. Crume in Latonia. The young couple were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Vallandingham, brother of the bride. After several days of the honeymoon spent in Cincinnati the young couple returned to Walton where they will make their home. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McElroy who moved here from New Liberty, Owen-co. He is very popular with a large circle for his many good qualities and his genial nature. The bride is one of our finest young ladies, pretty and accomplished, and is beloved by all for her charming personality. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Vallandingham. The host of friends extend the young couple best wishes for a long, happy and prosperous future.

Married—Jesse R. Crowe and Miss Edna Watson were joined together in the holy rites of matrimony last Saturday at the residence of Rev. Joseph B. Harris of the Methodist church, Covington, Rev. Harris performing the ceremony. The groom was employed by the telephone company at Williamstown and while there last summer he met Miss Watson and it was a case of love at first sight with him and his affection being reciprocated their friendship culminated in the binding of their young lives together at Hymen's altar last Saturday. They left at once for the groom's home at Greensburg, Ind., to spend their honeymoon, and in all probability will make their residence at Walton. The bride is a daughter of Mrs. Anna Watson-Stamler of Walton, and is a young lady of many attractive qualities, sunny disposition, and will make a splendid helpmete to the man she has chosen as her life's companion. The groom has the reputation of being a very worthy young man of industrial and moral habits, and will no doubt make a good husband.

Ten Reasons Why I Want a Farm Agent.

1 Because I am not so conceited as to think I cannot be told something new.

2 A Farm Agent is a card index to which I can refer all of my farming problems and receive the answer from the highest authorities.

3 My land and that in this vicinity is in dire need of scientific upbuilding.

4 My land needs legumes and I want to know where and how to grow them in order to save my self from having to buy expensive nitrogen.

5 I want to know more about drainage in order to make my waste land productive and profitable.

6 I want to grow fruit trees and ornamental trees, berry bushes and vines and I want to know how to properly plant, prune, spray, thin, pick and market my fruit.

7 I want to know how best to run my farm in order to make it so attractive to my children that they will have no desire to leave it for the city.

8 I want to know how best to lighten the burden of house work for my wife in order that she may have more time for her social duties and to spend in healthful outdoor recreation.

9 I want a Farm Agent for I know he will encourage co-operation and we will thereby save money on our purchases and make more when selling.

10 Farm Agent is a good business proposition in any county, and Boone would be no exception.

Prince Albert fits your taste!

Meets the fondest wishes of any man who likes to smoke because it has the right flavor and aroma and coolness. It's the most cheerful tobacco you ever did pack in a jimmy pipe or roll into a cigarette. And it's so good you just feel you never can get enough. The patented process fixes that—and cuts out bite and parch!

Copyright 1916 by R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

Listen: It's easy to change the shape and color of unsalable brands to imitate the Prince Albert tidy red tin, but it is impossible to imitate the flavor of Prince Albert tobacco! The patented process protects that!

When you fire up your first smoke you'll decide that you never did taste tobacco that hits your fancy like

PRINCE ALBERT

the national joy smoke

For it exceeds in goodness and satisfaction the kindest word we ever printed about it!

Men, we tell you this tobacco will be a revelation to you. So, take this information at 100%, get out the old jimmy pipe from its hiding place or locate the makin's papers —and fall-to!

Your wishes will be gratified at the nearest store that sells tobacco, for Prince Albert is in universal demand. It can be bought all over the states and all over the world! Toppy red bags, 5c; tidy red tins, 10c; handsome pound and half-pound tin humidors—and—that fine pound crystal-glass humidor with sponge-moistener top that keeps the tobacco in such excellent trim.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOL. XXXXI. Established 1875. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10. 1916. $1.50 Per Year. NO. 20

School Entertainment at Hebron

Hebron school will give an entertainment in Hebron town hall, Saturday evening, Feb. 12th, 1916. For benefit of the school. Admission 10 cents.

Took Another Tumble

The fall in the temperature last week put to sleep the busy little bees that were buzzing so merrily among the boughs of the maple trees about town.

Received the Directory

The Recorder has received from Congressman A. B. Rouse a copy of the Congressional Directory, 64th Congress, for which it extends to him its thanks.

The First Mover of the Season

The first mover of the new year passed thru Burlington last Saturday morning with a load of goods and chattles. The mover is a never failing sign that spring is near at hand.

Fraternity Supper at Union Feb'y. 22

The Masons and Odd-Fellows, of Union, will give a supper on the night of the 22nd inst., in their new hall which is said to be the nicest country lodge room in this part of the State. Everybody is invited.

Scraps for What He Thinks is Right

There are two classes of fighters—one with and the other is educated for it. That Representative Frank C. Greene, of the Carrollton-Gallatin district, belongs to the first named class there is no doubt.

Sold His Farm

County Clerk Rogers was at Walton a day or two last week closing up the sale of his 43 acres of land in that vicinity for which he received $3,200. It is not necessary to mention what he put over on the Recorder in regard to the deal.

Reward for Good Work

It puts a man in an excellent humor, when he has just completed dragging a long stretch of road, leaving it in splendid condition, and along comes a couple of teams each drawing about three thousand pounds of tobacco on a wagon with narrow tread wheels.

Farmers Institute at Hebron

A Farmers Institute will be held at Hebron, this county, some time the latter part of this month at which Profs. Roberts and Nichols of the Experiment Station, Lexington, one or both will be present to talk to the farmers. Prof. Nichols will talk on the Dairy and Prof. Roberts, on Fertilizers.

Don't Work in Harmony

Many of the members of the General Assembly are at loggerheads, a pretty sure indication that no legislation of real worth will be put through. The scraps over the prohibition question and the division of Pike county has played havoc with the unity of purpose necessary to good results.

Covington's New Paper

The Recorder is in receipt of a copy of the second issue of The Kentuckian, a seven column 8-page paper published in Covington by J. D. Wyatt, formerly of Falmouth, Pendleton Co., where he published the Pendletonian several years. If No. 2 is a sample of what the Kentuckian is to be week following week Covington will have a good paper.

A Big Company Organized

The Big Bone Springs Water Company was organized to market and sell Big Bone Springs mineral water at a meeting yesterday afternoon in the Covington Savings Bank and Trust Co., Covington, Ky. Dr. C. C. Bonifield was chosen President; Jos. Sagmeister, Vice President; E. H. Thompson, Secretary and Treasurer, and W. B. O'Neal, general manager.—Sunday's Enquirer.

Will Soon be Ready for Travel

The Yellowstone trail will be ready for automobilists to make the trip from coast to coast before the end of this year, according to members of the Yellowstone Trail Association. The selection of a route from Chicago to the Atlantic coast to join with the trail from Chicago to Seattle is to be taken up the convention. That will be some auto ride.

Pushing the Work on the Garage

B. B. Hume is looking forward to the time when he will be installed in his commodious new garage on 5th street between Madison Avenue and Scott street, Covington. He will be prepared to take care of his patrons in a way that will be highly satisfactory to them, and his success is already assured in so far as Boone county auto owners are concerned.

Most Water at Rising Sun. Sure

The several rises in the Ohio river this winter has again indicated that we have a larger river here than at Cincinnati, owing to the fact that the Cincinnati guage is located above the Licking river and the big Miami is far below that point. This place should have a guage and a proper effort made by the Business Men's Club would accomplish it.—Rising Sun Recorder.

GOVERNOR STANLEY

Will Make It Hard for Those Who Violate The County Unit Law.

In refusing yesterday to grant a petition signed by a large number of Morganfield, Ky., citizens, asking that he remit the jail sentence of George A. Riddle, of Union county, convicted of selling liquor in local option territory, Gov. A. O. Stanley issued a statement in which he stands firmly upon his original attitude in regard to local option.

Mr. Riddle, against whom six indictments were returned, three being compromised, and two dismissed, was fined $75 and sentenced to ten days in jail. The fine was replevined and he was given twenty days in which to have the jail sentence set aside. Failure to have the sentence set aside resulted in the petition, which Gov. Stanley denied, although Mr. Riddle is a friend.

"The action of recent political conventions and the result of recent primaries," said Gov. Stanley, "clearly demonstrate the fact that the people of Ky. have adopted with remarkable unanimity the present county unit law as the most feasible and efficient method of regulating the sale of alcoholic liquors in this State, and as the satisfactory adjustment of this question.

"As a candidate I repeatedly asserted my hearty concurrence in this settlement of a vexed problem which has so long disturbed the councils of deliberative bodies and delayed the enactment of much-needed, progressive legislation. I was nominated upon a platform which indorsed this law and set the seal of its approval upon it as a deliberate and final determination of the whole matter.

"I shall, as Governor of Kentucky, demonstrate my sincere and fixed purpose to maintain this law in its integrity, and to aid in every way, in its rigorous execution. It is manifest from the record that the petitioner has been guilty of repeated violations of this act. There is no evidence that he was persecuted since the Commonwealth's Attorney and County Attorney have dismissed two-thirds of the indictments against him. The sentences are not unusual or especially severe. In my opinion, those who illicitly retail intoxicating liquors in 'dry' territory will be deterred more by jail sentences than by fines.

"The bootlegger may reimburse his losses in the form of fines by the successful operation of his illegal business after they are imposed. Incarcerated in the county jail he will have abundant time and opportunity to consider the nature and character of his offense and those who are more fortunate, but equally guilty will find in him an example of what they too, may expect after detection and conviction.

"The request for the remission of the jail sentence in this case, is, therefore refused."

Using a New Brand in Bracken

The following is from Bracken county:

"Shortly after dark Monday night, several residents of Augusta claim to have seen an aeroplane. The air ship came down the Ohio river, on the Kentucky side, and when between here and South Higginsport turned to the left going in the direction of Brooksville. Roy Edington, of the Steamer Whisper, took a good look at the aeroplane with a glass and thought he could see the propeller working. Charley Smith, on the same boat, says that he distinctly saw two lights on the machine, a white light at the front and a green one in the rear."

The Recorder's weather chart for February shows varying weather conditions with bad weather predominating slightly.

He is Some Sprinter

Herbert Kirkpatrick, the local fur man, walked about forty miles in a day and a half last week, collecting pelts which he carried from point to point on his jaunt. His line of travel was not confined to the public roads, but was across fields, hills and valleys, occasionally having to make a considerable detour to avoid numerous barbed wire fences he knew to be in the neighborhood. As long as his pack weighs under 500 pounds he considers he is traveling light.

Attending to Business Closely

The Ground Hog began verifying his efficiency as a weather prognosticator last Friday night when the temperature fell and converted the rain into a sleet that loaded trees and shrubbery Saturday, Saturday night and Sunday and Sunday night, and Monday, when Old Sol looked out upon mother earth he created a scene that was beautiful beyond description, millions of drops of frozen rain bedecking all nature in the purest of crystals.

Getting Ready to Break Land

The hustling farmer is looking over his farm implements to see that they will be ready for use as soon as the weather invites him to go afield to prepare for his this year's crop. It is claimed that a good crop year follows a winter of numerous deep snows, but so far there have been very few snows this winter and a large crop prediction cannot be based on the deep snow omen.

On With It.

The Kentucky Legislature as a body may be short upon some things, but its members have realized the necessity of compulsory education and will pass a law making it a fine upon trustees and teachers who do not report and have prosecuted those parents and guardians who fail to send their children and wards to school. In Owen county the County Superintendent reports many schools with but two to ten children in attendance. No wonder so many children grow up in ignorance when they are allowed to go to school or not as they desire. The new compulsory law will be a thorn in the side of the indolent teacher who pays but little attention to who sends to school and who does not and the trustees will be compelled to give his district school his careful supervision.—Owen County Democrat.

War, Pauperism and Crime.

One of the principal results of a social nature worked by the present war in the British Isles is a great reduction in the amount of pauperism. War means employment, whole-time work, an inoculation of the whole industrial system with beneficious toxin of military efficiency and energy. Thus, in London, the average number of casual paupers each Friday night, when they are counted, has fallen from 1,439 in 1910 to 925 in 1915. For the whole of England and Wales the drop during the same period was from 19,000 to 6,600, practically 50 per cent. Social reforms are in part responsible for the decrease, as after 1910 the Liberal Government put into effect far-reaching improvements in care of the helpless. But the official accounts state plainly that the war is responsible for the major part of it. In the midst of the greatest war in history there are fewer people suffering in the British Isles than in the prosperous times of peace. We had a similar experience in this country during our Civil War. Crime as well as pauperism decreases in war, and it is reported that the famed Apache has disappeared from the streets of Paris.—Army and Navy Journal.

A Dry Barnyard.

Both convenience and economy demand a dry barnyard. The flooded, muddy barnyard drives the choice boy off the farm, carries the manure pile down the creek and makes the old cow wallow in the mire to reach the water tank or the barn door. A dry barnyard is within the reach of all. Assume that fate has been most unkind to you—that you have inherited a barnyard that is flooded by the higher land, that it is so flat that even its own rainwater cannot escape, and that it has no convenient outlet for a line of tile to carry the water piped from the eavestroughs.

With a road scraper or grader you can throw up a dike around all but the lower side of the yard. Seed grass in the dike and in the shallow ditch on the outside of it. The dike and dich will carry the flood water around the yard.

Next, make a slope in the yard. Raise the floor of the barn until it is two feet higher than the surface of the ground 100 feet away. You may have to raise the entire barn, but do it. Haul earth from the nearest sandy knoll to fill outside of the barn to within half a foot of the new level of the floor. Haul enough to slope the surface gradually for fifty feet or more away from the barn. They pipe the eve water to the ditch outside of the dyke.

In short, keep out all the water you can and provide a means for removing what waters in spite of you enter the barnyard. Unlike cultivated fields, barnyards are trampped so hard that drain tile for underdrainage are too slow. Surface drains act more quickly.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

The Kentucky Senate at the suggestion of the Lieutenant Governor that some attention should be paid to Attorney General Logan's charges of extravagant and illegal expenditures of the public funds has decided to make an investigation of those charges, and a committee for that purpose has been authorized and appointed.

This seems a proper step. The Attorney General has been very positive and specific in his allegations and promises that he has but begun in uncovering the lead which he has struck. This is no time for ignoring such conditions if they exist. And that they do exist, or have existed, is pretty generally believed outside of the disclosures which the Atty. General is making. Kentucky is in debt. Its finances have been badly managed. Its business has been inefficiently transacted. Everybody knows that. The administration of which the Attorney General is a part came into power on a pledge to correct this. The Attorney General is certainly doing his part to redeem that pledge the Governor is anxious to do his part; the Senate, by the institution of this investigation, seems willing to join in the good work.

On with it. And may a practical reform of efficiency and economy be the result.—C.-J.

STANLEY COUNTY

Wiped Off The Map by The Legislature at Frankfort.

Thomas B. Cromwell writes thusly for last Sunday Enquirer in regard to the legislature's attempt to divide Pike county:

With the Pike county partition bill defeated and occupying a slab in the Senate morgue alongside that upon which reposes the dead state-wide prohibition bill, the lawmakers at Frankfort are proceeding with the enactment of that remedial and constructive legislation promised in the Democratic platform and programed by Governor A. O. Stanley, and the people are hoping there will be no further time wasting divergence, though it is well recognized that certain persons and interests are apt to seize the slightest opportunity to muddy the water in their desire to discredit the administration.

The fight over the bill designed to divide Pike county and to name the Tug River section Stanley county was attended by much ugly talk, out of which issued the appointment of a committee composed of Senators Hite Huffaker, J. B. Hiles and Bishop S. Huntsman, to investigate statements that money had been offered or used for the purpose of influencing votes. Supporters of the measure declare their skirts are clear, and say if anything discreditable is produced by the investigation the three H's will make it will not be traceable to persons identified with the administration.

The bill was not an administration measure, but it became mighty close kin to one after Edwin P. Morrow appeared in Frankfort. The defeated candidate for Governor declared the rich Williamson family (Republicans) of Mingo county, West Virginia and Boyd county, Kentucky, made a deal with Tom Hatcher, the new member of the State Board of Prison Commissioners, whereby 1,500 Republicans voted the Democratic ticket at the November election, and the Republican Senators and Representatives lined up solidly against the bill. Then it was that Governor Stanley let it be known he was in favor of the passage of the measure upon a representation to him that a majority of the people of Pike county were not opposed to it, and that development of mineral and timber resources would ensue to make the new county one of the richest in the state.

The bill's managers appear to have been overconfident and somewhat digatory. It probably could have been put thru both Houses before the opposition strength could have been mustered had the promoters been on their toes from the beginning of the session. The fight finally got so hot that when the morning of the vote arrived both sides were claiming victory.

Four of the 37 Senators were paired and each side claimed 17 of the remaining 33 when Lieutenant Governor James D. Black called the Senate to order. The Senators voted as they had been tabbed by both sides until the name of Senator Tom Moore was called. He voted to table the bill, and it proved to be the break in the levee that washed Stanley county off the Williamson family's map of Kentucky. It seems he experienced a change of mind over night and, it is said, the shock of his negative vote came near prostrating Tom Hatcher.

The county splitters sheathed their axes, shook hands with the victors and went back to the Big Sandy county cussin' their luck over the failure of their second attempt for the division. During the administration of former Governor James B. McCreary it was proposed to create a new county out of the same territory and call it Mayo county, and former State Chairman R. H. Vansant was committed to it, but when it came to a count of noses it was found the votes necessary were not there and the matter was quietly shelved, with the statement that a resurvey to remove doubt about the constitutional requirement of 400 square miles in each county would be made.

Public Land Sales.

The following public sales of real estate were made at the court house last Monday:

In the case of Willis vs. Willis, 143¾ acres near Idlewild, belonging to the late T. G. Willis, was sold to Geo. Pfalzgraf for $3,625.

In the case of Russell vs. Russell 44 acres near the Point Pleasant church, the F. H. Russell homestead, was sold to Keene Souther for $2,995.

In the case of Teed vs. Scott, 24 acres in Pt. Pleasant neighborhood, was sold to Amos Teed for $850.

In the case of Jarrell against Jarrell, a house and lot in Petersburg was sold to Walter Lonaker for $425.

S. D. Rice, Trustee of the will of D. G. Rice sold the farm of 108¾ acres at the mouth of Gunpowder creek to R. J. Corlina, of Cincinnati, for $6,600.

O. M. Rogers, assignee of Edmund Stephens, sold 71 acres to Bernard Rogers for $3,725 and 22 acres to Mrs. Stephens for $1,425. This land is in Richwood neighborhood.

Another Good Citizen Gone.

Japheth P. Tanner, whose illness was mentioned in these columns last week, died last Sunday night, his condition never having improved. He would have been 73 years old on the 21st of this month. His wife was Missouri Crisler, and to them were born two children, Kirb Tanner, of Burlington and Mrs. Estelle Underhill of Covington, who, with their mother, survive. Japheth Tanner, was a son of Llewellyn Tanner, and was one of the substantial citizens of this part of the county. He was quiet, unassuming and upright in all his dealings with his fellow man. He loved his home and seldom left it except on business or a mission of mercy. He lived a life that was a credit to him and an honor to his family. He will be sorely missed and his memory will be revered by all who knew him. It was well that he lived and his many good deeds will remain as a monument to this good man, splendid neighbor and spotless citizen.

After a short service at the grave by Rev. R. H. Carter, Tuesday at 11 a. m., the remains were consigned to their last earthly resting place in the family lot in the Odd-Fellows' cemetery at Burlington, where a large number of friends and relatives assembled to pay the last sad tribute of respect to the beloved departed.

Card of Thanks—We desire to thank our friends and neighbors for their many kind deeds shown to us during the illness and death of our dear husband and father also Rev. Carter for his consoling words and the ladies for the beautiful songs, undertaker Allison for his capable and kindly way toward us in our great sorrow.

Mrs. J. P. Tanner and Family.

Article No. 1.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

I would like to talk through the columns of the Recorder to the children of the schools of this day about the school I attended in the year 1856, just 60 years ago.

In some respects times were like they are at this period—Sunshine and Shadow, seed time and harvest. Our school house, was a frame room about 16 feet square with one door and two small windows. It was situated on the north side of the Burlington and Florence road at a point about 200 feet east of the home of Benj. Snyder.

Etiquette of this day demands first mention of the teacher, who was a girl less than 20 years old. With a well developed case of tuberculosis of the lungs as her doctor said, a daughter of Aaron and Elmediah Yager, (nee Conner) and later wife of J. R. Cluterbuck, born May 27, 1837, and died June 9th, 1860. The above is the biography of our teacher and helps prove the date of our school.

There were twenty pupils who would gather around the stove that stood in the center of the room, and the rows of little red top boots worn by the girls with few exceptions, as well as the boys, made a memorable picture. Once seen will never be forgotten. Twice a day a fresh bucket of water was brought in the room. Etiquette gave the teacher the first drink out of the gourd, which was used several years. I almost forgot to say the water was drawn from a well near a stable, and received a large amount of surface drainage.

Spending day after day in that small room, drinking several times a day after the little cross corrupsive teacher, we certainly were immune, as there are 14 of our school living today, and none of the six who died had tuberculosis.

I don't know what the Board of Health will think of this. I could tell you many incidents connected with our school of 1856, when all the boys hallooed for James Buchanan for President.

I could tell you why we did not have a Bible in the school, and many incidents in the then days of slavery, but will say no more unless a hint from the Editor to come again.

A. C. Souther.

Didn't See All of Them.

The writer of "Believes in Preparedness" in last week's issue seems to have noticed only one embankment and ditch on the east side of Burlington. If he had taken his eagle eyes farther east, when investigating the preparedness mentioned by him he would have discovered other earth works of recent construction and some higher, within rifle shot of those he mentioned, and still a little farther east a natural elevation and redoubt occupied by one of the chiefs of the H. W. D. S. It looks as though there is trouble brewing in that locality, the origin of which this writer does not know. It appears these preparations were not mentioned in last week's article, and in view of all the facts it is here suggested that Mr. Bryan, Mr. Ford and others of like spirit be called on to quiet the brewing storm before it bursts on an unsuspecting public.

The Florence Improvement Club will give two plays, "The Deacon Strick Skule" of fifty years ago, and one act play, entitled "Surprise" at the old Catholic church in Florence, Ky., Saturday evening, February 19th, at 8 o'clock

ERLANGER CITIZENS

Going After the Interurban Street Car Extension In Earnest.

After trying for several years to have the Ft. Mitchell street car line extended to Erlanger members of the Erlanger Improvement Association have caused a bill to be drafted amending an act regulating interurban electric railways which became a law on March 11, 1902. The act, if the proposed amendment is approved by the present Legislature would compel railroads which has exercised their right under the act to condemn property for the purpose of building a railroad ten miles or more in length, to complete the entire 10 miles of the line within one year after it has condemned the property for that purpose and a company or corporation failing to do so shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of not less than $500 or more than $1,000 for each offense and each day's failure to so operate shall constitute a separate offense. The bill if passed will make it necessary for the South Covington and Cincinnati Street Railway to extend its line into Erlanger, as those behind the measure say that property thruto a point two miles north of Erlanger has been condemned for the purpose of building a road. The bill was drawn up by Attorney Samuel Adams and a committee consisting of Dr. J. P. Riffe, E. T. Gale, A. A. Shearer, H. F. Childress and S. W. Adams has been appointed to confer with the local Senator and Representatives.

Literary Society's Program.

The Boone Literary and Improvement Club will hold its next regular meeting February 16, 1916 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Riley.

Roll call to be answered by quotations from Kipling. A musical program will be rendered. The following list of questions are submitted to members, and answer will be called for at meeting:

1 Where is Callopoli? What is it?
2 What countries bound Servia?
3 In what country is Salonica?
4 On what sea is Montenegro?
5 Who is Commander-in-Chief of French Army?
6 Who is Prime Minister of England?
7 Who is Prime Minister of Canada?
8 Who is Bethmann-Hollweg?
9 Who is Poncaire?
10 Who is First Chief of Mexico?
11 Name with proper title, the ruler of Germany.
12 Who is Briand?
13 Who is Von Hindenburg?
14 Who is General French?
15 Name the ruler of Greece.
16 Name the ruler of Turkey.
17 Who is Sir Edward Grey?
18 Who is Viviani?
19 Name the ruler of Italy.

Let Us Do It.

What has become of the Walton Rural Community Betterment Club?

Getting together for community betterment is outlined in Circular No. 19 of our Kentucky College of Agriculture, and in leaflets of other States and of our U. S. Department of Agriculture has so much promise for opportunity of doing good in it, and so much has been done in so many places that every intelligent American citizen now will be expected to take notice and "go to it" with the expectancy that runs.

Something has been said about the "slowness, dullness, timidity, the inirtia" of our rural peoples—it is not so and particularly true of the people of Walton—of those who have admitted the need of and have already undertaken to start the matter? The thing to do now is to complete the organization of the club by adopting a constitution and by-laws, appoint a committee to investigate, etc., and fix a time for meetings. Where are the schools, churches, benevolent fraternities of Walton, Boone county, Ky? The call is to get together and investigate and act for the betterment of the community. Let us do it.

Vice-President.

County Court News.

The following business was transacted by the county court last Monday:

Last will and testament of Thomas Rice was filed for probate. The witnesses are W. A. Price and C. L. Gaines. The instrument is dated September 10, 1910.

Hubert Conner, of Hebron, and R. T. Stephens, of Rabbit Hash, qualified as notary public.

The necessary petitions were filed and an election for May 8th, 1916, was called to take a vote on the proposition to issue road bonds to the amount of $200,000.

Bernard Rogers qualified as treasurer for Belleview Graded School.

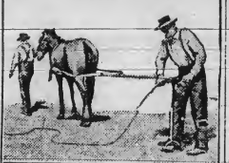
GIVE HARNESS BEST OF CARE

When Placed Just Behind Work Team Leather Becomes Brittle and Sometimes Breaks Very Easily.

Many farmers hang their harness in the barn just behind the work team so that it will be handy when wanted. Of course it is convenient and can be thrown onto the backs of the horses in a few minutes, but there is a considerable loss in hanging the harness at the back end of the stall.

There is a constant passing off of ammonia from the manure behind the harness and this has a bad effect on the leather of the harness. This is the reason why a harness that is allowed to hang in stalls cracks and dries out, becomes brittle and sometimes breaks very easily. One would have to keep the leather thoroughly soaked with oil to prevent injury from the action of the ammonia.



Then there is danger of harness being thrown down into the manure of the stable by the constant passing of the horses from the lot into the stalls. When it is thrown down and tramped into the manure it is filthy to handle and is injured by the action of the damp manure.

The best plan is to have a room in the barn in which to hang the harness. It is even better to hang it in the hallway than over the manure. The room need not be large. Everything in it may easily be kept in proper order, and all repair material should also be located here. This room should be free from mice and rats, for these rodents are destructive to leather.

DIG HOLES BY HORSE POWER

By Use of Soil Auger Farmer Is Enabled to Avoid Much Manual Labor and Twisting of Back.

A soil auger by means of which the farmer may make his horse do the heavy work of post-hole digging, instead of twisting his own arm and back muscles, is here shown. The outfit is simple to operate. The horse pulls a rope through a grooved pulley, this action revolving the auger. All the auger operator has to do is to press downward on the handles. When the auger is full the horse is stopped and the earth shaken out. This is repeated until the hole is of the desired depth. From 35 to 45 feet of rope is pulled out to complete a three-foot hole, nine inches in diameter. In making the first hole, a stake is driven into the ground to fasten the anchor cable to. After the first hole is bored, an anchor post is used, the anchor cable serving to measure the distance from hole to hole, as well as to keep the auger upright during the boring.

Pulling of Rope Revolves Auger.

At one end of the anchor cable is a short piece of chain, the purpose of which is to allow the cable to be quickly shortened should the auger begin to lean.—Popular Mechanics.

SWEETEN SOIL FOR ALFALFA

Sourness Can Be Corrected by Application of Air-Slaked Lime—Test With Litmus Paper.

Alfalfa will not do well on sour or acid soil. Before growing alfalfa, the soil should be tested with blue litmus paper, which can be secured from a druggist. Take a handful of moistened earth from a few inches beneath the surface of the ground and press into a ball. Break this mud ball into halves and place a strip of blue litmus on one of the halves and cover with the other. After five minutes examine the litmus paper, and if it has changed color from blue to a distinct pink or becomes spotted with pink spots, the soil is acid and needs lime for successful alfalfa growing.

On sour soils from two to four tons of air-slaked lime or ground limestone rock or marl or lime refuse should be applied. Whatever form is used it should always be applied to the surface of plowed land and harrowed or disked in. It may be put on in the fall or early spring—prior to seeding the alfalfa. Lime distributors are desirable when large areas are limed, but with small acreage it can be conveniently spread with a shovel.

The table scraps should be saved and fed to the hens. Table scraps make rather a rich feed, and therefore should not be thrown indiscriminately before the fowls, but should be prepared and cooked and fed to them regularly once a day.

Senator Frost's comment on the defeat of the State-wide Prohibition Amendment known as the Frost-Hamilton bill is reported in the Cincinnati Enquirer, as follows:

"The result is not disappointing, save the fact that some men elected from dry districts failed to support the measure.

"This is the beginning of the fight in Kentucky that will end within a few years, when the people will be permitted to exercise that God-given right to determine for themselves how they shall be governed.

"The agitation that started at the 1914 session of the Legislature resulted in some 70,000 Democrats in Kentucky demanding thru the expression of the ballot, that this present Legislature submit this constitutional amendment.

"If the county unit is right in principle, as Gov. Stanley said it was in his opening address at Glasgow, state-wide prohibition would only be an extension of the principle to make the state a unit. If 25 per cent of the voters of any county under the present county unit law can call an election to submit this question to the voters there is no doubt in my mind that 70,000 Democrats, who by their ballots expressed a desire to have this question submitted, is a much greater per cent than is required under the county unit law.

"The day is not far distant in Kentucky when liquor will not only be removed from the Governor's mansion, but from all homes, and by a pledge taken by a Governor of the Commonwealth, but by a law enacted at the demand of the people."

Kentucky a Whisky State?

Representative A. W. Barkley of Kentucky introduced the District of Columbia prohibition bill in the House on Thursday of this week. The bill is the same as that introduced in the Senate by Senator Sheppard, which would close the saloons of the District after November 1, 1916. Representative Barkley says it is his intention to push the bill to turn the national capital dry. He says it is a mistake to accuse Kentucky of being a "whisky state," for 114 out of 120 counties are dry.

No Encouragment for Saloons.

With the ending of the year 1915 3,000 saloons and a number of breweries and distilleries in the country closed their doors for good. The whole year saw the dry forces pushing on to victory in every section, while not a state in the Union showed a gain for the wets. The new year begins with the wets on the defensive everywhere and the drys well organized and determined to push their advantage. "Only a man blind to all facts can see any encouragement for the liquor traffic" says the Youngstown Telegram in reviewing the struggle now going on between humanity and the saloon.

Now Counting the Cost.

One of the prominent citizens of Youngstown, in an interview in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, has this to say and it seems to cover the ground:

"All that can be said about the whole question is that East Youngstown is a liquor-controlled town and the authorities did not close the saloons when they should have done so to prevent thousands of idle aliens from drinking themselves into a condition of utter irresponsibility. There is really no other explanation that can be offered for the whole unfortunate affair."

Ohio and East Youngstown are now figuring the cost of this latest outbreak of the liquor traffic in the State.

It is estimated the property destroyed will aggregate a million and a half dollars. The insurance on this property will not be paid by the insurance companies by reason of the manner in which the property was destroyed.

In the end the state will be appealed to and will make good the loss. Why not? Is not the State in partnership with the saloon?

Mahoning county is responsible in a money way for the dead and wounded. It will cost that county all told, many times what it receives in license fees from the saloons.

The jail and police stations are filled with rioters. There will be expensive trials as was the case following the Newark lynching.

And Uncle Sam, Too.

Uncle Sam is drawn into it, and already the wheels of national government are in motion, working to deport the unnaturalized foreigners who were mixed up in the mob.

Ohio will have another big bill to pay for transportation, maintenance, and wages of several thousand guardsmen. It is estimated that it cost the state $8,000 a day to keep its troops at the scene of trouble.

When liquor controls several thousand foreigners with an alleged grievance, and when these foreigners are armed with guns, knives and dynamite and when liquor bids them exercise their personal liberty, the people have to dig deep into their pockets for money to pay the bills.

In the fall of 1915, Mahoning co., gave a majority for state-wide Prohibition, but the vote of Cleveland and Cincinnati kept her poison shops open. Last fall the vote of Cincinnati alone gave these saloons another lease of life. John Barleycorn was merely celebrating the defeat of Prohibition while the people foot the bills.

Prohibition is making itself felt in the decreased output of beer and lessened receipts from beer sales. This is true of the United States as a whole, according to the figures of Commissioner Osborn of the Internal Revenue Department, and also of many of the large beer-manufacturing communities. A table prepared for The Western Brewer, from Internal Revenue report figures, shows a decrease in the consumption of beer, as indicated by the receipts from the barrel tax, for each month from November 1, 1914, to October 30, 1915, over the same month for the previous year, and a total decrease for the twelve months as compared with the previous year of 7,985,375 gallons. Missouri seems to be feeling this slump more severely than some other parts of the country. Reports show that the people of Missouri consumed 396,493 barrels less beer in 1915 than in 1914. This means that the beer inspection department receipts amounted to only $410,468.88, the smallest amount collected in any one year since 1906, and $77,355.30 less than the receipts for 1914.

Chicago brewing companies are also showing a decrease. The Chicago Breweries Ltd., the English holding company for the McAvoy Brewing Co., and the Wacker and Birk Brewing and Malting Co., reports a decrease of 60,019 barrels in beer sales for the year ending November 30, 1915, as compared with the previous year.

Beer production in Omaha showed a $700,000 decrease for the past year, and a $375,000 increase in the manufacture of macaroni. A leading brewer is interested in the macaroni factory, and he may figure that with the prohibition agitation which is stirring Nebraska, macaroni is a much safer article for manufacture than beer.

THE STATE PRESS.

Fred Trosts predicts that the sweet clover bloom will be short this year on account of there not being many old plants. If this prediction is correct this will cut the honey crop short and also the sweet clover seed crop.—Falmouth Outlook.

The farmers of Bath county are in a more prosperous condition than they have been for many years. Their crop of tobacco was larger in yield than for a long time. It is reported that wheat was considerably damaged by the late hard freezes and sudden thaws. It is feared that the late unusually warm weather has endangered some kinds of fruit.

Almost every tract of Garrard county wheat is reported as looking fine though the recent severe freezes wrought some damage. The barley is also reported as showing rapid development for the mid-winter season and there is every prospect for a fine yield of this product for the year of 1916. Young lambs are now making their arrival rapidly and are growing nicely.

Eugene Holmes has sued the city of Crofton and Marshal Meyers of that place, for $1,000 damages. Holmes claims that he was arrested and placed in the Crofton jail, which was a filthy place and infested with all kinds of vermin, to-wit, body lice, etc., and that he was put to great inconvenience by getting these on him. He also says that the charge upon which he was arrested was dismissed.—Pembroke Journal.

A few days ago we saw in the papers that some man in Eastern Kentucky had killed and caught about eighty 'possums since last fall, but we have a man in Trigg county who has this mountaineer "beat to a frazzel." Jim Bryant, who lives near Canton, since last fall has caught 138 'possums, five coons and four skunks. His brother has also caught a lot, but Jim himself caught all of these. He found ready sale for the hides, and as a result he has taken in quite a little sum during the past four months.—Cadiz Herald.

Will Sprowls, of near Buffalo, who took a carload of mules to Atlanta, Ga., a few days ago, says that mule buyers down there are losing heavily on account of so many of the animals dying from a disease supposed to be glanders. Mr. Sprowls sold a few over twenty head at an average of $130, and says he just about broke even on them. He figured that it was better to sell without profit than to risk losing half his bunch. He is responsible for the statement that other mule buyers from Kentucky are loving heavily.—Larue County Herald.

J. Rich Young, who lives on J. T. Hammond's farm on the Danville pike, made a record at skunk killing the other night when he brought back home six of the bad-smelling varmints. He "treed" one in a hole in the ground, which by a sleight-of-hand performance he induced to leave his hiding place and he shot it with a 22 caliber rifle. He played the same game five more times and each time brought down a polecat. There were four black and two white ones. He skinned them and sold the hides to W. B. Buchanan for $10. Pretty good evening's work.—Stanford Journal.

We are informed that Representative Nicholas Longworth of the Cincinnati district, and son-in-law to Mr. Roosevelt, is "vigorously rapped the foreign policy of the Wilson administration" in a speech delivered at the annual McKinley birthday dinner at Canton. The speech, as published in the Cincinnati Enquirer, is at hand and all the rapping was in regard to Mexico. Mr. Longworth raps himself red in the face about Mexico, but he says not one word about the European war and Mr. Wilson's foreign policy in that direction. Mr. Longworth has a large German vote in his district.—Louisville Evening Post.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction, V. O. Gilbert, announces his appointment of State Examiners. Miss Nannie Catlett, formerly County Superintendent of Caldwell county and now a teacher in the high school at Princeton, is, to the best of our recollection, the only woman ever appointed to this position. The other appointment was in favor of A. J. Jolly, Superintendent of the Augusta Graded and High Schools. Both are well known in the State, and their appointment will meet the approval of their wide circle of friends. Prof. Jolly formerly taught in Bedford and all here are glad to learn of his appointment to this important position. —Trimble Democrat.

FOR KERCHIEFS AND GLOVES

Dainty Sachets That Cost Little and Are Easily Made of Japanese Paper Serviettes.

Handkerchief and glove sachets make most delightful presents, and are a necessity if gloves, etc., are to look their best; if they are left knocking about the drawers, they quickly look soiled and creased. The sachets here described cost very little, for they are made from Japanese paper serviettes.

For the handkerchief case two serviettes are needed; choose those with a straight border and pretty patterns round.

Cut some cotton wool the same size as the serviettes, sprinkle it with violet or rose sachet powder, according to the floral decoration on the serviettes, and lay between the serviettes; the right side of them must, of course, be faced up. Tack all together, then take ribbon the color of the flowers on the serviettes and bind the edges all round; an inch-wide ribbon would do nicely. Now turn the corners in just like an envelope; on each corner sew a strip of ribbon so that the sachet is closed by simply tying the top and bottom points together, making pretty bows.

The glove sachet is made up in the same manner, save for the folding. For this sachet, fold the serviettes, after they have been padded and bound into two lengthwise; turn down the right-hand corner of the top cover and secure with a stitch.

Sew a strip of ribbon to each side in the center, so that the sachet is closed by tying the ribbons in a pretty bow. When these are made in sets, the same kind of serviettes should be used, and the same kind of scent sachet powder placed on the wadding. They wear beautifully, the paper is very strong, and if they get soiled in time they are easily cleaned by rubbing them over with a piece of stale bread; but they are so inexpensive one would not hesitate to renew them.

MADE OF OSTRICH FEATHERS

Remarkably Pretty Roses and Pansies Are In Favor With the Best-Dressed Parisiennes.

Some rarely lovely roses and pansies, made entirely of soft ostrich feathers, were seen a few days ago, writes a Paris correspondent. The roses were in subtle shades of pink and wine-red, and the way in which the petals were imitated, in feather, was wonderful. The soft ostrich trimming was cleverly curved back to give the natural shape of the rose, and even the leaves were made of feathers in shade of green and brown. Flowers of this kind will be used to trim the new picture hats.

Another floral novelty took the guise of water lilies made of white suede, framed in large leaves made of dark green taffetas. These flowers were exceedingly expensive, which is not surprising since they were made by a well-known artist in the rue de la Paix. The white suede was so soft that it looked ex[illegible]

[illegible] like real water-lily petals, and the golden centers were made of chiffon velvet and suede cleverly combined.

PRETTY SANDALS IN CROCHET

Only One Among [illegible] the Numerous Allurring Things That May Be Worked With the Needles.

Every day reveals some new article which can be crocheted. In fact, this is a crocheting and knitting season. One of the newest articles is a pair of sandals. These are provided with straps which cross the instep and with longer crocheted straps which are to be wrapped around the ankle, thus holding the sandals securely on the foot. Crocheted rosebuds added to the sandals will enhance their beauty.

When crocheting caps, bootees, gloves, etc., for the baby, you may as well make one of the new crocheted covers for the little coat hanger. Of course, the cover will fit only the arms of the hanger. The hook should be wound with ribbon. Ribbon rosettes attached to the ends of the hanger will soften its otherwise severe lines.

In the black-and-white room nothing could be more appropriate than a round cushion crocheted in black and ornamented with white crocheted rosebuds.

New Effects In Black.

The black petticoat of mallines, Chantilly lace, satin and crepe Georgette is new. Frequently it accompanies the combination of black materials, the black corset and the black nightgown. It is said that this recent fad is due to the adoption of a well-known society woman whose husband was lost when the Lusitania went down.

POULTRY

PRODUCING EGGS IN WINTER

Keep Before Hens Constant Supply of High Protein Meat Scrap, Grit and Fresh Water.

Keep before the hens that you are using for winter egg production, a constant supply of high protein meat scrap, complete grit, crushed oyster shell, and supply fresh, clean water abundantly and regularly, and see to it that the water does not become frozen in cold weather, as there has been no invention forthcoming from our geniuses in this line of industry which will provide the chicken with an icepick.

Animal food is extremely essential in securing heavy winter egg yield, and as a rule, this can best be supplied in the form of meat scrap, as it it the most economical and convenient form obtainable.

Fowls greatly prefer green-cut bone, and if it is practical, we should respect our feathered friends' tastes as near as possible.

BREED FROM VIGOROUS HENS

Ideal Mating for Breeding Purposes Is Yearling Cocks With Well-Developed Yearling Females.

(By J. E. DOUGHERTY, University of California, College of Agriculture.)

The production of a large egg containing a strong embryo and plenty of nourishment requires that a hen possess well-matured productive organs. It is necessary that the embryo not only have plenty of space within the shell in which to grow but also be supplied with an abundance of food materials with which to make that growth. A pullet does not ordinarily possess reproductive organs sufficiently well developed to produce such an egg. Therefore a pullet does not produce as good hatching eggs and is not as desirable for breeding purposes as is the yearling hen. The pullet must necessarily utilize some of her energies in further growth and development. After attaining her full size, she still has to fill out and mature, as well as strengthen her laying organs through use.

Among the Mediterranean class of fowls, such as the Leghorn and Minorca, the males seem to develop sexually more rapidly than the females. Well-developed Mediterranean cockerels are therefore very often used as breeders when mated with yearling hens. The ideal mating, however, for breeding purposes, is that of vigorous yearling cocks with well-developed yearling hens.

DAMAGED WHEAT FOR FOWLS

Large Part of Crop Unfit for Milling Can Be Fed to Poultry—Hold on to Late Pullets.

The frequent statement that a large part of the winter wheat crop will prove unfit for milling should be encouraging to poultry-keepers as indicating cheaper feed this winter. The proportion is put at 60,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushels out of 600,000,000 bushels. It is said that it can be fed to hogs. It can also be fed to chickens, if not too musty. Caution should be used on that point. "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," and poultry-keepers should not be in haste to market late-hatched pullets on the ground that it will cost too much to feed them until spring.

High Egg Production.

Some of the characteristics in fowls of high egg production are: Late molt and rough appearance, pale shanks, black ear lobes, and wide-spread pelvic bones. The activity of the fowl is a very good indication of high egg production.

Cull the Flock Early.

Begin to cull early, selecting the more promising ones and see that they have an abundance of room, not only in yards, but in roosting quarters as well.

UNCLE BILL HAD TO WALK THE PLANK

Frankfort, Feb. 2.—The sensational statement was made tonight by Senator Robert Antle, of Russell county, Republican, that a proposition was made to him that if he would vote for the Stanley County bill enough Democratic members would vote for Representative William C. Allen, Republican, to seat him. Allen was unpus apuy ioiuoq Aepoi pe[illegible] that it was proposed to post a forfeit of $1,500 to make good this bargain.

His statement follows:

"I am mighty sorry that Uncle Bill has been turned out. He has always been my friend, and was one of my strongest and best supporters when making the race for State Senator.

"Without his support the chances are I could not have won. However, if he were not my friend, as stated above, I should, indeed, be sorry to see the will of so many good people set aside. Again, I am sorry, because he and his closest advisers think that I could have saved him by voting to cut Pike and create Stanley county.

"Indeed, action on the contest seems to have been held up for at least two weeks, waiting for my decision on the question of supporting the bill to divide Pike co., for I had never, as yet announced my determination to vote against the bill when it was first taken from the order of the day and placed upon its final passage.

"But in the preliminary motions relative to the passage of the measure I had to show my hand, and the friends of the measure, who had been conferring with me, seemed to be very sore in regard to my conduct on the floor of the Senate. Before it was finally disposed of they offered a guarantee of $1,500, to be forfeited if Uncle Bill was not seated, provided I would cast the deciding vote to cut Pike and create Stanley county.

"The division of Pike county always has appeared to me at a travesty upon justice; but the question of giving up to the Legislature my good friend grieved me beyond measure. I could not, in justice to my sense of right and honor, vote to cut Pike and create Stanley county. I could not, without making a strong effort to secure Uncle Bill's seat for him, vote for the creation of Stanley county.

"So I went to some good friends in the Senate and House of Representatives, who are Democrats, and begged them to come to my relief, telling them the predicament into which I had been thrown, as related above. A number of them rallied to my relief in the interest of Uncle Bill, but we failed to secure the necessary strength to give him his seat, which we could have retained had I consented to betray my conscience by voting to cut Pike county and create Stanley."

TOO SMALL TO FIGHT.

The regular army of the United States of America, although containing as fine a personnel of officers and enlisted men as can be found in any army in the world, is literally too small to fight, if by fighting we mean a conflict with the military forces of any first-class nation. Our army is not too small, however, to sacrifice itself valiantly and vainly in the event of an invasion. We have today an aggregate of about 30,000 officers and men in our mobile regular army, excluding troops in our insular possessions and those manning various coast defenses or detached on non-combatant duties. To re-enforce this we have an army reserve of 16 men. We also have a force of citizen soldiers organized as the National Guards of the various states, which on paper consists of approximately 127,000 men, but certainly not more than half that number is even moderately well trained. It is estimated that in case of war, the various National Guards could mobilize for active service about 80,000 partially drilled and partially equipped men. This gives a total mobile force of 90,000 officers and men. It is inconceivable that any foreign foe would undertake to invade the United States with a small army. The number of troops to be employed would be limited only by the transport facilities, and there are several nations which could move more than 100,000 troops across the ocean.

The small size, however, of our defensive army is not its only weakness. It is notoriously deficiant in field artillery, aeroplanes transport equipment and ammunition. In the winter of 1912-13, when Secretary of War, I laid before the Military Committee of the House of Representatives facts showing that at that time the total number of field guns in our possession, in the hands of the regulars, in the hands of the militia, in our storehouses, was but 700, about one-half the number necessary to equip an army of 500,000, and that the total amount of field artillery ammunition which we possessed would serve those men, at the rate with which field guns used up ammunition in the battle of Mukden, just one-half a day.

Winchester, Feb. 2.—A representative of the Italian Government was here today to close a deal for several old, discarded automobiles for the metal. He stated that copper, brass and aluminum were greatly in demand and that agents for his Government, as well as the other allies, were now scouring the country purchasing old automobiles and all other discarded machinery for the metals they need in the manufacture of war munitions.

Since the State has taken a hand in rural road building it would be well for it to see that laws are enacted to provide roads against damage by heavy hauling at unreasonable times. Other states have such laws and by enforcing them they have very little trouble with those who desire to haul loads beyond the limit. But there is no use to enact such laws if they are not enforced.

That the coming wheat crop of Kentucky has been saved from the Hessian fly by the warm weather followed by freezes in November and December, is the opinion expressed at the conference of county farm agents held last week at Lexington. Several of the agents reported that all traces of the destructive insect had disappeared in sections of the State where the wheat fields had been badly infested early in the fall.

A definite policy contemplating Philippine independence within four years was approved by the Senate last week when Vice President Marshall cast the deciding vote in favor of the Clarke amendment to the Philippine bill, directing the President to withdraw American sovereignty within a four-year period. The vote, which followed weeks of debate, was 41 to 41. An effort to recommit the bill was defeated.

About Presidents.

The Presidents of the United States, except one, were religious to a degree consistent with their political life. Of the denominations represented, the Episcopal church has the lead, eight being of that belief. The Presbyterians come next seven being of that denomination. The others were divided among four creeds as follows: Four Methodist, four Unitarian, two Reformed Dutch, one Disciple, besides one who was a liberal.

In politics thirteen were Republicans, nine Democrats, three Whigs and two Federlists.

The cause of their death was, five of debility, two of pneumonia, two of chronic diarrhoea, two of paralysis, one of consumption, one of asthmathetic catarrh, one of bilious pleurisy, one of bilious fever, one of inflammation of the stomach, one of rheumatic gout, one of cancer, one of paralysis of the heart, one of Bright's disease, and three were assassinated.

Three Presidents are still able to consume their daily allowance and fuss with their neighbors.

TAX REVISION PUSHED ASIDE

Believed That It Will Be Handled At a Special Session

WM. C. ALLEN IS OUSTED

Morrow Raises a Rumpus Over Alleged Deal For "Stanley" County Which Is Being Investigated.

Frankfort, Ky.—Special—Revision of Revenue and Taxation laws, considered to be the most needed legislation in Kentucky, will in all probability be handled at a special session of the General Assembly to be called by Governor Stanley, after the adjournment of the regular session about the middle of March.

This continues to be the general impression among the solons who realize the great importance and the many problems in this connection which will have to be worked out.

Remedial and constructive legislation is promised by the Democrats now that the Pike County partition bill is defeated and it is claimed that there will be no further time-wasting divergence.

The early days of February brought trouble to the Democratic ranks when Representative Frank C. Greene, Carrollton, and W. B. Harvey, of Dixon, assumed the role of insurgents and said a lot of things about Governor Stanley, winding up by putting themselves off the administration reservation when they voted with the Republicans against unseating Wm. C. Allen, Republican, to the favor of S. C. Dobbs, Democrat, whom a majority of the House Committee determined to have won in the Wayne-Clinton district. Rep. L. B. Hamilton, of Frankfort, also voted with the Republicans in this instance.

Another matter which made trouble was the charge of Edwin P. Morrow, defeated candidate for Governor on the Republican ticket, who declared that the rich Williamson family (Republicans), of Mingo County, West Virginia, and Boyd County, Kentucky, made a deal with Tom Hatcher, the new member of the State Board of Prison Commissioners, whereby 1,500 Republicans voted the Democratic ticket at the November election, in exchange for a division of Pike county to be known as Stanley County.

A committee was appointed composed of Senators Hite Huffaker, J. B. Hiles and Bishop S. Huntsman to make an investigation of these charges and also the charges of a newspaper in which it was claimed that money had been offered or used for the purpose of influencing votes.

The anti-trust bill and the anti-pass bill are the first of the administration measures to be passed by both houses and reach Governor Stanley for his signature.

Important legislation expected to be taken up next will be the anti-lobby; corrupt practices, text books and the measure to put into effect the constitutional amendment providing for the working of convicts on the public highways.

The Woman Suffrage supporters were greatly shocked when the House Committee decided to report their bill unfavorable. Their opportunity to have the constitutional amendment passed at this session seems to have been crushed.

With an unfavorable report on the state-wide prohibition amendment by the House Committee, several efforts have been made to bring the bill out by Representative Frank Greene. Dry leaders in the House declare that they will endeavor to obtain a vote on it even though the Senate has already defeated a similar measure.

• • •

Dr. H. P. Sights has made it known that he will not be an applicant for reappointment as Superintendent of the Western Kentucky Hospital for the Insane, at Hopkinsville. There are many candidates after the juicy plum which will be given out sometime before the expiration of Dr. Sights' term on July 1st.

In their efforts to prevent the confirmation of the appointments of Jack Nelson, Paducah, and Omer Stubbs, Newport, who were appointed to be Factory and Assistant Factory Inspectors, the Kentucky Federation of Labor, lost in their protest of Cohen's choice, after Governor Stanley had ascertained that they were both members of the union and in good standing.

Resolutions have been adopted by the State Board of Agriculture, protesting against the transfer of $30,000 from its fund to the State University, to be used in Government co-operative demonstration work.

It is claimed that the action would practically abolish the board, destroy the State Fair, abolish the position of State Veterinarian and cripple the entire Department of Agriculture and take away all of the appropriation which has been used to the benefit of the entire state.

Governor Stanley has accepted an invitation to attend the banquet of the Mose Green Club in Louisville on the evening of February 28th.

Lieut. Governor Black, President of the State Senate, is very proud of his new gavel. It is of solid ivory with an ebony handle and a band of sterling silver with the inscription "Presented to Lieut. Gov. James D. Black by the Sunday schools of Barbourville, Ky. December 25, 1915." It was intended for a Christmas gift but some delay occurred by the manufacturers and he received it the first week in February.

It has been decided by the Democratic leaders to put through measures re-apportioning the State into senatorial and legislative districts strongly urged by the Republicans.

The redistricting bills that will have the backing of the Democrats will carry out the constitutional provision that not more than two counties shall be joined together in one legislative district. At the present time several of them are made up in three counties and one has four, Bell, Harlan, Leslie and Perry counties.

It is a most difficult task, due to many conflicting interests, but the Democratic leaders believe that they can get together on a satisfactory measure.

W. C. Allen, Republican, representative from Clinton and Wayne counties, was unseated by a vote of 57 to 39, in favor of S. C. Dobbs, Democrat, who contested the election. Party lines were drawn with the exception of four Democratic members who voted against unseating Allen.

The contest means that the State will pay over $600 more to have a Representative from the Clinton-Wayne district than any of the other ninety-one districts.

Allen will receive $250 awarded him for contest expenses in addition having drawn $300 in per diem besides his mileage and stationary allowance.

Dobbs will receive per diem from the first day or $710 for the whole session and is entitled to his other expenses the same as if he had started upon his duties the opening day.

The general impression seems to be that "Uncle Bill" Allen, has made his calling and election certain two years hence as the district is overwhelming Republican. The unique mountain solon could not conceal his emotions when he was ousted from the House membership.

The fight to create the new county of Stanley by a partition of Pike county, has been dropped, according to the chief supporters. The bill was laid on the table in the Senate, but still is in shape to be considered if a majority is mustered in its support.

State Superintendent Gilbert and school officials over the state will fight the bill introduced in the senate to pay the appropriations for the State University and normal schools, amounting to $237,000, out of the state school fund instead of the general fund.

It is claimed that this would cripple the work of the State Department of Education.

With the consent of the authors, three health measures have been voluntarily withdrawn or killed in the General Assembly. The most important was the "all time health officer" bill, backed by the State Board of Health. This bill provided for the abolishment of the health boards in all cities except Louisville, Covington, Newport, Lexington and Paducah and making the county the unit for public health service. A county health officer devoting all of his time at a salary of ten cents per annum for each person in the county was provided.

Pierce Holton, of Frankfort, has been given a place in the Rating Board office by Auditor Greene.

Governor Stanley has appointed the following Colonels on his staff: Ike Hart, Hopkinsville; W. Vernon Richardson, Danville, and Wallace Stovall, Tampa, Fla.

Sam C. Elliott, of Louisville, has been appointed Deputy Fire Marshall to succeed Edward Bright of Glasgow. The appointment was made by Auditor Greene.

Attorney-General Logan has made an attack upon the expenses of the State Department of Education, pointing out enormous expenditures and claiming that seven stenographers are not needed in that department.

Public Instruction Superintendent Gilbert answered his criticism saying that the insinuation as to the employment of relatives and further statement of extravagance of his predecessor and other matters have no bearing on the present administration. Gilbert says that he has neither wife, brother, sister nor any other kinsman employed in his department and that the insinuation of Logan missed the mark. The employment of seven stenographers is necessary, says Prof. Gilbert.

FALLING SIXTEEN STORIES.

Girl Who Survives the Experience Tells How It Feels.

To fall 16 stories is to realize the closeness of death; to feel the sickening sensation of a calamity that cannot be prevented.

Today, for the first time since she plunged from a window near the roof of the Transportation Building Jan. 24, Minnie Werner was able to tell of her experience.

Miss Werner's story was narrated to her sister Edith, who has been a constant attendant at her bedside in St. Luke's Hospital.

"I was conscious," she said. "I remember distinctly how I felt from the moment I lost my balance until I struck.

"I did not intend to jump. I felt dizzy and went upstairs to the restroom. When I reached there I could not make out the details of my surroundings. I rushed to the window for air. The next thing I knew was when I felt myself falling."

The girl shot down into the chasm of Federal street poised like a diver. Her body described an arc outward from the window sill, carrying her toward the center of the street.

Her sensation was not that of falling during the first instant of her plunge. It seemed that the street was rocketing upward, that the buildings, upside down and wavering, were tumbling in upon her.

That thought flashed across her brain in an instant, then came the terrible realization so common in nightmares. She was hurling thru a void, perfectly conscious, able to scream, able to see her circumstances, able even to move her hands—and she did move them—but unable to stop the calamity that loomed below.

She felt the sickening faintness characteristic of drops in elevators. There was a vacuum in her lungs as though a great pressure had been suddenly applied to her chest.

The rush of the air drew out her eyelids and half blinded her. There was a ringing in her ears and a smarting tingle all over her body.

In the second stage of her fall—as the acceleration became greater—only generalities of her surroundings came to her, the streaky whiteness of the building past which she was falling, the muddy blackness of the street, a scream buried in a great roaring.

She did not see the auto truck which saved her life. She did not know it was there until she was extricated by the police from the wreckage of its load of paper boxes as a cushion and saved her life.

The streaky white blended almost instantly with the black, and her sight failed her altogether.

The thoughts that crossed her mind as she dropped were jumbled like those of a terrible dream, but those that she recalls upset the commonly accepted theories regarding the ideas of a person facing death.

"Did you jump?" a policeman asked her. Her lips moved and the policeman thought he heard her answer, "I fell." Police took her to St. Luke's Hospital, expecting that she would die on the way.

Miss Werner will return to the home of her mother and sisters, 2417 North Washtenaw avenue in a few days. Her most serious injury was a broken shoulder, that will not cause her serious inconvenience.

AGRICULTURE

Course to Be Taught in The Common Schools—Legislature to Enact Laws.

From all indications the present Legislature will enact a law requiring elementary agriculture to be taught in the public schools and, to the agricultural interest of the state, this law will be hailed with delight. In recent years the importance of this subject has been discussed at educational gatherings, and at last the legislators have realized that the proper way to give agriculture the emphasis that it deserves is to place it in the common school curriculum.

The interest that the national government has displayed in this great industry has helped wonderfully in molding public opinion in behalf of better farming, better marketing and greater development of the farm activities, and the state government, thru the department of agriculture, has been actively engaged in developing the agricultural resources and promoting movements and efforts to better the conditions of farm life. The farmers' institutes, chautauquas and farm demonstrators have been advocating the necessity of teaching agriculture.

So it is evident that the legislature will enact this law which will not only meet a long felt need, but will stand as an evidence of the wisdom and good judgment of the 1916 Legislature.

Protect the Honor and Rights of the United States.

Some of those newspapers which were so quick and ready to assail our American citizens of German birth or ancestry and to impugn their loyalty to the U. S. because they refused approval to the cause of the allies and the methods of the allies in forcing the conflict upon the Kaiser, are now profuse in expressions of surprise and gratification at the earnestness with which these German-Americans in Wisconsin and other states have indorsed the policy of preparedness and their cordial welcome of the President at last advocating that policy.

There never was any more doubt of the loyalty of German-Americans to this country and its institutions than there was of the loyalty of our citizens of English, Irish, Scotch, French or Italian birth or ancestry, and the entire chorus of the pack, Blanche, Tray and Sweetheart, which bark ed so loudly against them but a few months ago was but a response to the call of the allies' huntsmen, who were urging them on, desirous to aid the allies' cause.

There never was the slightest reason to doubt the loyalty of our citizens of any birth or ancestry; one and all they love their country, its flag and its honor, and, while comparisons are always odious, there is none among them that will not go as far to defend that country that flag and that honor as any living President or ex-President.

It is not given to many of our citizens to have the opportunity of telling to the public what great deeds they are ready to perform to advance the interest of the people of the United States, and many of them are too modest, too retiring, to speak of their earnest desire to serve their country, even if given the opportunity to proclaim it, but in the present and in the future, as in the past, it will be the quiet citizens of the Union who will perform the deeds that will preserve and maintain it.

The Enquirer has absolute confidence in the people of the United States, in their loyalty, their wisdom and their judgment.

The President has done well to counsel with them at this time. He has done well to meet face to face the masses of the people, the men loving their country for its own sake and for what it stands for in all that is noble in government of men. He will return to Washington with a keener realization of the people's regard for the honor of this country, and cannot blind himself longer to the fact that the great majority of the people are determined that the rights of this country shall be protected upon every sea and in every land. It must be America first against all and every violator of this country's rights.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

TOBACCO TRADE FELL OFF

Trading in the Cincinnati burley tobacco market during the month of January, according to the report just issued by Inspector Thomas Jennings, was not as extensive as the corresponding month last year. Offerings for the month totaled 4,174 hogsheads, a decrease of 1,433 hogsheads, or 25 per cent. Rejections aggregated 982 hogsheads, or 23 per cent of the offerings, as against a rejection of 1,498 hogsheads in January, 1915, which was 26 per cent of the offerings for that month. This would seem to indicate a slightly more favorable scale of prices for January, 1916, although it is likely that but for the abolishment of the old throw-back rule, rejections would have been much heavier than they were. The most disappointing feature of the January report is the small quantity tobacco received at local warehouses since the first of the year, there being but 1,735 hogsheads as against 3,269 hogsheads during the corresponding month last year. This is a decrease of 1,534 hogsheads, or almost 50 per cent. Stock on hand at all warehouses February 1st amounted to 8,932 hogsheads, or just 892 hogsheads more than on the same date last year.

Chester Tanner, of Limaburg neighborhood, called on the Recorder Tuesday.

Announces Policy As to Proceeds of a $200,000 Bond Issue.

Allows J. W. Conner Claim for Sheep Killed by Dogs.

Whereas the members of this court have been asked the question: "If the $200,000 bond issue carries at the election for that purpose, then how would the court use or distribute the fund in the building of the roads?" and the court, after consideration of the matter decided that the said fund would be distributed among the different precincts of the county according to the assessed values in said precincts so far as practicable.

The settlement with the Sheriff shows that he had on hands funds to the amount of $36,142.19 belonging to the county.

J. W. Conner was allowed $45 for four sheep that were killed and three that were crippled.

Cecil L. Gaines was allowed $75 for making settlements with the Sheriff.

J. C. Bedinger and R. H. Tanner were appointed to ascertain the probable cost and expense of having the financial statement of the county published in pamphlet form for distribution in the county.

County levy for general expenses was fixed at 10 cents, and $1.50 poll tax; 40 cents for buying and building and maintaining roads, 20 cents for school fund and $1.00 poll tax.

Old road up Gunpowder creek from Geo. E. Rouse's gate ordered closed as soon as the new road is completed.

The Fiscal Court was in session Tuesday with County Judge Cason presiding, all the Justices of the Peace present and Miss Lizzie Rogers keeping the record.

Dr. M. A. Yelton was employed to do the 1916 pauper practice in the Burlington precinct, including the infirmary, for $175.

Why Not Have a Farm Agent?

To the Recorder:

Like a great many others I feel that I do not know so much about farming, but I can learn more. I think the people of Boone county need a man with a special course of instruction along this line to help solve some of the difficult problems, for the time has come when we cannot farm altogether as our fathers and grandfather's did. Soil conditions have changed and the different soil requirements have to be met. A great many, if not all of the counties in the Western States, have County Agents. Why not Boone county? It seems to me the county's money could not be spent to better advantage.

Insure Your Livestock

The Breeders' Mutual Fire and Lightning Insurance Co. has now almost one quarter million dollars worth of livestock insured, Now is the time when the stock growers' risks are the greatest—when they have all their stock fastened up in barns and other buildings which might catch fire. It will pay you, Mr. Farmer, to think this over and investigate the merits of this company, then see the agent and insure your stock.

Buckner vs. Buckner Reversed.

The case of Buckner's trustee against Buckner, an appeal from a judgment of the Boone Circuit Court, was reversed last week by the Court of Appeals and a resale of the property involved, ordered. The property is known as the Buckner house and lot in the town of Florence. The case has been in the Court of Appeals three times, a reversal resulting each time.

Tobacco Selling Well

According to the published reports tobacco sold on the several loose leaf markets last week brought very satisfactory prices.

Renewed His Bonds

Sheriff Cropper renewed his several bonds again yesterday, Wednesday.

Al Lyons and son Carl and a young Mr. Kenney had the misfortune to lose a fine coon dog one night this week. The dog found a coon up a large tree, which was cut down at the expense of much labor. The coon ran out with the dog after it, and into the creek they went. The dog attacked the coon in the water but lost the fight and was drowned. The coon was captured, however, by the bold hunters.—Lewisburg Leader.

Experience vs. Reading.

The doctor reads his medical journal and learns from it. He boasts of the fact that he keeps up in his reading, and if he is not acquainted with some subject recently written up he apologizes for the fact that he has been too busy to read lately.

Farming is quite as complex a business as practicing medicine.

The lawyer is ashamed to confess that he fails to read the latest decisions. The best compliment that can be paid to a lawyer is that he is well read. So with the teacher, the preacher, the engineer. All of whom confess their dependence upon the literature of their professions to supplement the things they learn from experience.

It is only among farmers that we find any large number of successful men who declare that they learn altogether by experience. Among farmers there are still to be found numerous individuals who seem ashamed to confess their indebtedness to the farm press for helpful articles. Yet these men are engaged in a business that has a literature as extensive and important as the literature of the lawyer, the engineer the minister or the teacher.

This aloof attitude of the farmers is a confession of weakness. One of the best cattle feeders in the country stated after he had won prizes in the International, that he had never been in another man's feed yard, but had learned all he knew about feeding from papers and books and through experience. This is the real expert's spirit. Most farmers who deny that they get benefit from reading are not quite telling the truth. They talk about legumes, nitrogen, humus and balanced rations—things of which they would not have been able to speak twenty years ago, and of which they could not have learned, except thru books and papers.

The farmer who is not a book farmer is only half as good a farmer as he might be. The business is too complex to be learned wholly from experience in a single lifetime. Why not be both mentally alert and intellectually honest?—Country Gentleman.

What Is a Judicial Drunk.

The question of what determines a judicial drunk in Kentucky may soon be decided at Frankfort. In the impeachment proceedings pending before the joint committee of the House and Senate against Judge Williams, of McCreary county, many witnesses have testified, attempting to show that the Judge was drunk or that the Judge was sober. One witness asserted that the Judge talked "thick-lipped" and that his face was all "flared up," and another testified that he had never seen the Judge "plumb drunk," although he had seen him when he thought he was "fairly" under the influence of liquor. Another testified that he had seen the Judge escorted home and that if he was ever "real" drunk he could not tell it. Another testified that he had never seen the Judge when he seemed to be under the influence of liquor. No witness has ever testified that he had seen the Judge take a drink and there is no testimony that any man ever smelt intoxicants on the Judge's breath, which proves conclusively that the Judge never drank apple brandy. Out of the maze of conflicting proof it will take the verdict of the Impeachment Committee to decide what constitutes a judicial drunk in Kentucky.—C.-J.

Eugene Terhune, of Harrodsburg who several years ago sold and put out hundreds of rods of hedge fence in Boyle county, is in Cincinnati under treatment in the Sat ler Hospital. While he was planting hedge in Boyle county probably fifteen years ago, Mr. Terhune suffered the loss of his right eye when a twig struck that member. Some weeks ago while repairing a pair of clippers a spring came out and struck his left eye and practically destroyed the sight. He has undergone an operation and it is thought that the sight will be partially restored.—Danville Advocate.

PARKER HOUSE ROLLS AND MUFFINS THAT ARE DELICIOUS.

Try These When the Family Seems to Be Getting Tired of the Ordinary Griddle Cakes or Plain Hot Bread.

Parker House Rolls.—One cake yeast, one pint milk, scalded and cooled, two tablespoonfuls sugar, four tablespoonfuls lard or butter, melted, three pints sifted flour, one teaspoonful salt.

Dissolve yeast and sugar in lukewarm milk, add lard or butter and one and one-half pints of flour. Beat until perfectly smooth. Cover and let rise in a warm place one hour, or until light. Then add remainder of flour, or enough to make a dough, and the salt. Knead well. Place in greased bowl. Cover and let rise in a warm place for about one and one-half hours, or until double in bulk. Roll out one-fourth inch thick. Brush over lightly with melted butter, cut with two-inch biscuit cutter, crease through center heavily with dull edge of knife, and fold over in pocket-book shape. Place in well-greased, shallow pans one inch apart. Cover and let rise until light—about three-quarters of an hour. Bake ten minutes in hot oven.

Wheat Muffins.—One cake yeast, one cupful milk, scalded and cooled, one-fourth cupful lukewarm water, two tablespoonfuls sugar, two tablespoonfuls lard or butter, melted, two eggs, two cupfuls sifted flour, one-half teaspoonful salt.

Dissolve yeast and sugar in lukewarm milk. Add the lard or butter, eggs beaten until light, and flour to make a moderately stiff batter, then add the salt, and beat until smooth. Cover and set aside in warm place for about one hour. When risen, fill well-greased muffin tins half full. Cover and let rise again for about half an hour. Bake 20 minutes in a hot oven. They should be eaten immediately.

Graham Muffins.—One cake yeast, two cupfuls milk, scalded and cooled, four tablespoonfuls molasses or brown sugar, three-fourths cupful chopped nuts, four tablespoonfuls lard or butter, melted, one egg, one and one-half cupfuls graham flour, one cupful sifted white flour, one teaspoonful salt.

Dissolve yeast and sugar, or molasses, in lukewarm milk, add lard or butter and egg well-beaten, then the graham and white flour, gradually, enough to make a batter that drops heavily from the spoon. If necessary add a little more of each, then the salt and nuts, beating all the while. Beat until perfectly smooth, cover and set to rise in warm place, free from draft, until light—about one and one-half hours. Have muffin pans well-greased and fill about two-thirds full. Cover and let rise to top of pans—about half an hour, and bake 20 minutes in hot oven.

Simple Dessert.

Make a sponge cake and soft custard; when ready to serve place a slice of cake on the plate and pour the custard over it. You see, it isn't very elaborate, but it tastes very nice and is something different from puddings made of cake and custard. For Sunday night why not have a salad? Potato salad which can be made Saturday. Then if you have any cold veal or lamb you can mix it with a salad dressing and it makes a very tasty sandwich filling. These sandwiches, with sponge drops and fruit custard and chocolate or tea, would make a very dainty supper.

Puff Muffins.

Puff muffins are as nice as anyone could wish, and contain no egg and but a tablespoonful of butter. Sift together two cupfuls of flour, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a teaspoonful of salt. Beat into the dry mixture a cupful of milk and a tablespoonful of melted butter. Beat hard for ten minutes, using a large egg beater. Then pour into hot greased muffin pans (iron pans are best) and bake for 10 or 15 minutes. When finished the muffins will be white and puffy.

Orange Omelet.

Three eggs, two oranges, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, dash of salt.

To the beaten egg yolk one-half cupful of orange juice is added, grated orange rind, sugar and salt. The stiffly-beaten whites are folded in, and the omelet put in a hot buttered pan. When ready to serve it is placed on a hot platter, topped by sliced oranges.

Inexpensive Punch.

Through the winter, as you open jars of strawberry, raspberry, pineapple and cherries, save the extra juice until you have enough to fill pint jars. Heat and seal; then when you make punch, simply make lemonade, of orange and lemon juice mixed, and add a pint of this juice and a few bananas sliced. Serve ice cold.

Baked Beans.

Wash one quart of pea beans and pick over. Strain and wash again, put into bean pot with one-quarter cupful molasses, two teaspoonfuls of mustard, teaspoonful of salt and one-half pound of pork. Put in oven and cover with water. Cook eight hours. Put water on [illegible] last hour.

TO SERVE WITH THE TEA

Innumerable Goodies, the Ingredients of Which Should Be Kept Constantly at Hand.

There are many tempting ways of serving dates besides plain and as a sweet. Use them as a filling for sandwiches. Take two cupfuls of dates, put them through a meat chopper, then add a cupful of peanut butter and blend them together. Then the paste between slices of white bread.

Another woman also uses dates in baked custard, in tapioca and as filling for cookies, pies and cakes. Mixed with apples, celery and nuts, they make a delicious salad. To use dates as a pudding cooked with rice, add to a quart of milk a cupful of stoned dates and a quarter of a cupful of rice. Sweeten and bake in a slow oven.

Cook keeps in her cold closet an assortment of pastes and butters that are used so much in preparing relishes for the tea, after-dinner suppers and bridge parties. She has them ready in small, labeled glass jars, and titbits and sauces can be made at a moment's notice. Here are a few of her best recipes:

Rub skinned and boned sardines to a paste and then gradually blend with a little lemon juice; may be added to butter to give it very desirable sandwich flavors. Orange butter for afternoon tea sandwiches can be mixed with chopped nuts and figs or any other sweet filling. Grated orange rind, too, is good to add to the butter.

Olives may be ground in a vegetable chopper, mashed to a paste and creamed into butter. Capers are chopped and creamed with butter, and either of these can be used on broiled chops or beefsteaks, as sandwich butters, or on green peas or string beans to improve the flavor.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

If a brick is used for an iron stand the iron will hold its heat much louger than when an ordinary stand is used.

Before baking apples make a small slit all the way round each with a knife. This will prevent their splitting when cooking.

When shoes become squeaky, try dipping the soles in kerosene.

Never use a liniment near an open flame, for a liniment usually contains some substauce of an inflammable nature.

An apple or two baked in the inside of a goose will absorb any rankness or oily flavor.

To make a satisfactory cream sauce, first put the milk on, and while this is getting warm rub the butter and flour together until smooth; as soon as the milk comes to the boil, gradually add the creamy mixture while the milk continues to boil, and the finished sauce will be quite smooth.

Honey Used as Sweetening.

Few housewives realize the value of honey, yet in sweetening qualities it surpasses sugar. Grapefruit, for instance, is much enhanced by a treatment with honey. Prepare as you would for breakfast when sugar is used, only prepare it the night before. It will then be found that the fruit has absorbed the honey.

Apples baked with honey are another delicacy not too well known. In this also the apples are prepared just the same as though for sugar. For six or eight apples take four tablespoonfuls of honey. Mix with one cup of fine bread crumbs and a half tablespoonful each of cinnamon and lemon extract. Fill the apples, which have been peeled and cored, with the mixture and bake in a porcelain lined baking dish that has been well greased.

Original Meat Recipe.

Cut beef, either cooked or uncooked, into inch cubes. Put in porcelain cover saucepan. Dredge thick with flour. To two and one-half cupfuls beef add six cloves and one-half can of tomatoes. If not enough liquid to more than cover add water. Set on back of stove, cover and let simmer three or four hours. Sometimes I add sliced potatoes one-half hour before serving. Should be very tender, dark red, with no trace of tomato, and very rich.

Breast of Lamb.

About two and one-half pounds of breast of lamb, boiled tender in salted water; takes about two hours or a little longer to cook. Have what vegetables you like and thicken the broth for gravy. If there should be enough meat left chop and season and mold in a small, deep dish and put a weight on it. It will cut in nice thin slices for tea.

Tomato Bisque Soup.

One can of tomatoes, one onion cut fine. Bring onions and tomatoes to a boil slowly, then strain and add one-half teaspoonful of soda and one pint of milk. Be sure you add soda to the tomatoes before you put in the milk. Thicken with one tablespoonful of flour. Stir until boiling; season to taste. It is delicious.

Leftover Cold Mutton.

One cupful or less mutton that has been boiled down into small pieces. Take a quart of gelatin and pour over the meat, stirring it well. If liked, put in tablespoonful poultry seasoning. Let stand until set, in a cold place.

Apple Pancakes.

One cupful flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, two eggs, one and one-half cupfuls milk, [illegible]

REGAL DINNER GOWNS

WORTH IS SHOWING SOME MAGNIFICENT COMBINATIONS.

Gorgeous Wraps Trimmed With Musquash Meet Special Approbation of Paris Correspondent—Headdress for Small Woman.

Worth is making some regal dinner gowns in tete-de-negre velvet combined with bands of musquash. This is a highly successful combination and one which is not necessarily extravagant. I have recently seen many lovely evening gowns and wraps trimmed with musquash and I like them immensely, writes a Paris correspondent.

This fur looks lovely when juxtaposed with rose Dubarry panne or with Belgian-blue brocaded velvet. Chez Worth I also saw sable skins being freely used on dinner dresses and I was told that mink is one of the most popular furs of the winter season. Printed gauze looks very beautiful when bordered with black fox and trimmed, so far as the corsage is concerned, with glittering embroideries.

Some of the new printed gauze materials show highly artistic designs and white on a brilliant blue ground, for example, or conventional flowers in dull red on a background covered with dark green leaves.

I have seen these printed gauze materials used for long evening cloaks, with a deep hem of fur and a gigantic collar of the same framing the face. When deep hems of fur are introduced on evening coats and wraps the fronts are, as a rule, left plain and there is a very elaborate ceinture to confine the garment at the waist.

For inexpensive evening wraps white or natural brown marabout is introduced instead of fur, and with excellent effect. Pure white marabout makes an ideal shawl collar for a girl's evening coat and the latter should be made of bright rose or sapphire blue velvet if a really good result is desired.

Crushed strawberry panne is an ideal material for evening coats, and this material looks very attractive and original when trimmed with undyed fitch and when the wrap is lined with pale lemon-yellow silk. This sounds a curious combination of color, but I have seen it exploited with great success.

The head I have sketched this week shows a new and artistic coiffure. The back view figure gives one of the latest evening headdresses. Here the hair is softly drawn away from the face and arranged at the back of the head in clusters of curls. For small women this is an excellent headdress; it adds height to the figure, and at the same time dignity.

HATS ARE TO BE OF SATIN

Fashion Has Decreed That That Material Is to Take the Place of the Popular Velvet.

Once more comes a change in hat fashions. Indeed, the change is less concerned with the shapes than with the fabrics. The high authorities who control the destinies of fashion have decreed that satin shall take the place of velvet in the intermediate weeks that separate the winter season from that of the approaching spring.

Of course, the reason for the discarding of the velvet chapeau is found in the need of new things for women of fashion, who will soon leave winter's temperatures behind them and depart for summer climes. The satin hat is offered as an accompaniment for the tailor-made and the afternoon frock of silk or satin. Presently we shall find its successor in the straw model, intended to accompany lingerie gowns.

A noticeable number of the new hats are large. This means they are intended to add a picturesque note to the costume. Some of them are banded with jet or other pailletted garniture, while there are models trimmed with goura feathers, paradise and burnt ostrich.

An effort is being made to depart from the conventional sailor shape in which the majority of the large hats have been shown for the last three seasons. The crowns are perhaps a bit higher than their predecessors and the brim at one side is extended to form a contrast with that of the other side. Sometimes the wider brim is curled upward and [illegible]

CARLOAD OF HAY FOR 50 CTS.

Mistake In Telegraphic Message Costs German Farmer Large Sum of Money.

Hamburg.—Through a most unusual legal ruling, which, in many quarters, is attacked as incorrect, a farmer has been obliged to sell a carload of hay for two marks (50 cents). He had telegraphed to his would-be customer that the price would be 200 marks, and some employee of the telegraph office lost the two ciphers in handling the message. The astonished customer lost no time in accepting the "2" mark offer. When the customer declined to pay 200, the case went into court. The supreme court decided that the imperial telegraph office cannot be held responsible for the mistake and that the sale must stand.

THIS NEGRO HAS MANY WIVES

Large Delegation of Them Visits Malachi Jenkins in Prison at Thomasville, Ga.

Thomasville, Ga.—Malachi Jenkins is a Thomas county negro who confesses to having entered the matrimonial state just 22 times. Malachi's latest mate lives in Lowndes county and, being anxious to see her again and weary of the separation, he broke jail here and made his way to her home.

Suspecting him of having returned to his family, the police went on a still hunt for Jenkins. He is now in his old cell, where he probably will have to remain for some time longer.

Ten of Jenkins' wives attempted to visit him at the county jail in one day.

FIND GRAVE OF '76 SOLDIER

Man Who Served Five Years in Revolution Buried in Cemetery In Indiana.

Frankfort, Ind.—In a secluded spot in the Glen Park cemetery, four miles east of Greenwood, lies the body of John Parr, who, as far as known, is the only revolutionary soldier buried in Johnson county. A white stone slab, almost covered with weeds and underbrush, was photographed by visitors at the cemetery, and the headstone revealed the following inscription:

JOHN PARR,
Aged 92 years 3 months and 23 days.
He served five years in the Army of the Revolution and was in the battles of Monmouth, Brandywine, etc.

Mr. Parr was a relative of the Parrs of Johnson county and Newcastle, Ind.

AUNT ADDIE'S CONSENT

By ERNE STURGIS.

Gwen saw him as the car rolled up to the station platform. He was standing over near the express office talking to Batty Madison and he raised his cap to her with the cheerful, ingenious smile of one who has overlooked the past.

Very, very slightly she had bowed her head, so slightly that the curling pheasant-tail feather hardly wavered in the air. Her mother was busy giving last injunctions to the chauffeur.

Clifford glanced at her several times before it really dawned on him that she was still provoked at him. Then he tried to remember what had caused it.

They had decided, first of all, not to fall in love. That had been in the summer when she had gone to the shore. If he could just promise to be a good pal and steer away from the sentimental she'd love to be not exactly a sister to him, but a sort of second cousin.

And then right out of the blue sky there had dropped—Dick. It had almost seemed part of the summer routine that Dick should appear sooner or later. But there had been trouble between them, and the day she had been swept out to sea past the lifelines it had been Dick who had swam to the rescue and brought her back.

"But you needn't have treated him the way you did just for that," Clifford had said, most disagreeably. "I've saved lots of girls' lives, but they didn't act as if I was a hero."

"I didn't," Gwen had answered pleasantly. "I just treated him like a dear old friend. I've known Dick for years."

"And you've known me just six weeks. Which do you like the best so far?" It was impossible to stay angry very long with Cliff's good-natured face smiling at one. They had really been wonderfully good friends until he had stepped over the border land of good faith and proposed to her.

"I don't suppose you can help it, but I'm so sick and tired of playing heart balm for every boy I know. They all propose sooner or later just from habit, I do believe, or because they know I won't accept—"

"Why won't you"

"Don't you really know? Uncle Stanhope left all his money to his favorite sister, Aunt Adelaide, and she's an unbeliever in men"—Gwen's brown eyes were sparkling with fun. "So she put half in trust for me until I was twenty-one on condition that I didn't marry by then and the other half when I am thirty on condition that I am not married then."

"What if you do?"

"It all goes to some charity. She's very peculiar."

"If you really loved the right man, you'd throw the whole thing up in the air," Cliff had returned. "I never would have thought you were mercenary."

That had been in late August. Now it was December and he was visiting Batty Madison. She had seen him several times, but that one word would come between them. He had suggested that she was mercenary. Today she waited until her mother and Aunt Adelaide were comfortably settled in the chair car before she even permitted herself to remember that the only man she had ever really missed was in the next car.

It did seem as if Aunt Addie was unusually trying. She wanted to recline, then she wanted to go out on the observation and get a breath of fresh air, then she wanted some cracked ice, and finally she wanted to play bridge. It was five hours to Boston and she simply couldn't stand it without some diversion, and she wished she hadn't come anyway. Just then she beamed radiantly on somebody coming along the aisle, and lo! it was Cliff.

"Well, if it isn't Cliffie Bigelow," she exclaimed. "Come here, child. I've known him, Gwen, since he was knee high to a toadstool; lived next us at Weston for years when your uncle was alive. How's your mother, Cliffie? Doing pretty well for her age, isn't she? Sit down and take a hand, for pity's sake."

Gwen never forgot those five hours. It seemed as if Aunt Adelaide was possessed to make her unhappy. She told stories of Cliff [illegible] when he was a little [illegible] and a big boy, and how he had saved her life once when old Gray Eagle took fright at the morning express and ran away with her and Cliff had stopped him.

"You know, as long as we're going out home for a few weeks, I kind of think I'll have you stay with us, Cliff. The folks will be up in Boston, and the house is all closed up. You're going to Weston, ain't you?"

"Why, no, ma'am. I was on my way to Boston—"

"Nonsense. Come along with us. Maybe you and Gwen can comfort each other, for I declare she's the mopiest girl I ever saw since last summer. Go out on the platform, you two, and see if we're near Providence yet. I want to get a look at Providence."

SUCCESSFUL MANAGEMENT OF TURKEYS

Splendid Flock of Turkeys.

The care which turkeys receive during the winter is a determining factor in the successful management of a flock. They cannot stand filth and if forced to live in it will soon sicken and die.

In an address some time ago on turkey raising Mr. W. J. Bell, who has had about thirty years' experience in the business, said:

"A great many people do not give their turkeys any attention in the winter months, and that is not right. I feed my turkeys oats in the morning and a full feed of good sound fall wheat at night, and I give them small, unsalable apples for green feed.

"Another way in which turkeys are neglected in winter time is when there is snow on the ground and they cannot get any grit or gravel. It is necessary to have a bank of gravel that they can go to, and in the absence of that they should be supplied with commercial grit.

"Turkeys should have access to pure water at all times. If they do not get pure water they will drink out of the pools in the yard at this time of the year. A great many people tell me their turkeys are sick, and I attribute the cause chiefly to their drinking the water from pools in the yard. When the snow leaves the ground in the spring I take away the wheat and give them only a light feed of oats once a day, because they roam the fields and get a large amount of nutriment that is left over from the previous year. If you feed them oats and wheat right along the females will be too fat. The male does not look for feed. He is showing his beauty off all through the spring, and I feed the males oats in the morning and wheat at night in order to keep them in good condition.

"The birds should have a range every day out around the yard, and they should never be confined to the buildings. As to night treatment, the last two or three years I have left my turkeys to roost on the fences on the southeast side of the barn, where they are protected from the northwest winds. I would not say that they are not better there than in an open shed. In no case should they be compelled to roost in a henhouse."

MATING TIME FOR TURKEYS

Strong, Healthy Birds Begin to Lay at Very Opening of Breeding Season —Give Good Care.

Strong, healthy, vigorous turkeys will mate and begin to lay at the very opening of the breeding season, while weaker stock will merely consume feed until the warmer weather makes itself felt in the spring. It is true that the feed and care that the birds receive, the proportion of males to females, and many other things enter into the matter of egg-fertility and strength of the germs, but besides all these the strength of the ancestral stock plays no little part. Without good care strong birds may not beget strong poults, but no amount of care will enable weak birds to produce strong ones.

It is after the spring hatches that the difference between good stock and weak stock makes itself most keenly felt in turkeydom, for that is the time when the poult mortality runs highest. Where coveys from undersized or otherwise deficient ancestry will dwindle steadily from week to week, until possibly only fifteen or twenty per cent of the original hatch remain, the coveys hatched from vigorous breeding stock will be far better, perhaps sixty to ninety per cent of the young birds surviving the danger period under identical conditions. If the poults are ranging with the turkey hen the difference shows most markedly, for the greater intelligence, alertness, strength and solicitude of the better turkey mother also play their part.

CARING FOR WINTER LAYERS.

Disease and Empty Egg Basket Result From Overcrowding—Hen Demands Good Ventilation.

Small flocks often lay better than large ones in the winter time. The reason is because they have better attention. Often the large flock is put into crowded quarters and fed poorly. Of course, this means disease and an empty egg basket.

Better to cull the flock very closely and keep only the hens that can be comfortable in the building. They must have room to exercise and they must have plenty of fresh air.

The laying hen demands lots of ventilation, but must be shielded from any draft of air.

The Successful Man.

The successful poultryman possesses ability, determination, never loses courage and has perseverance.

Use Some Grain.

A roughage ration of any kind is not sufficient during the winter. A little grain helps out wonderfully.

POINTS ON FEEDING LAYERS

Ration Should Be Economical, Appetizing and Nutritious and Contain Variety of Feeds.

In choosing a ration for the laying hen the poultryman has several points to consider. Such a ration should be economical, appetizing and nutritious and it should contain a variety of feeds.

The ration used in feeding laying hens at the Pennsylvania State College School of Agriculture and Experiment station is as follows:

GRAIN FEED.	Lb.
Cracked corn	50
Wheat	50
Oats	30
DRY MASH.
Corn meal	200
Bran	100
Wheat middlings	100
Meat scrap	100

The grain feed is fed night and morning, a lighter allowance being fed in the morning than in the evening. The plan followed at the Pennsylvania station is to feed approximately twice as much whole grain as mash grain. The mash is fed in hoppers, which for light breeds may be left open all day but for heavier breeds should be accessible only part of the day. Some grit in the form of oyster shell or ground limestone and some green feed such as cabbage, mangel-wurzels, sprouted oats, potato parings or ground green bone should be provided, in addition to the ration given above.

GUARD FOWLS AGAINST ROUP

Birds Suffering From Colds and Exposure Are Quite Susceptible—Make Use of Preventives.

Roup is a germ disease thought by some to be caused by the Bacillus Avisepticus; very infectious and usually transmitted by exposure to infected birds or to coops, roosts and yards where roupy birds have been.

Birds suffering from colds and exposure are more susceptible and to guard against roup, you should use tonics and preventives, which not only tend to prevent this dread disease but help to keep the birds in the pink of condition and working overtime on the egg basket.

Vermin Keep Poultrymen Busy.

In six weeks a single pair of lice, under favorable conditions, can give rise to 125,000. When they multiply that fast it certainly takes an active poultryman to keep ahead of them.

Road of Uncertainty.

The poultryman who fails to keep an accurate account of his transactions is traveling over the road of uncertainty that leads to failure.

Stranger, if thou hast learned a truth which needs
No school of long experience that the world
Is full of guilt and misery, and hast seen
Enough of all its sorrows, crimes and cares
To tire thee of it, enter this wild wood
And view the haunts of nature.

SOME JULY DESSERTS.

During the hot weather when work seems harder and play so inviting, is the time to serve simple desserts or fresh fruit and use the extra time in enjoying an hour's rest under the trees or on a shady vine-covered porch. Much of the work of the housewife may be prepared here, vegetables and fruits picked over, mending done and various other things which each will discover is so much pleasanter done in the open air.

Desserts which may be prepared when the evening meal is preparing or early in the day before breakfast which will be cold and attractive and save time during the heat of the day.

Custards of various kinds and flavors are most wholesome desserts, they may be combined with any number of different foods. When one lives on a farm where milk, cream, eggs and butter is in abundance the dessert problem will solve itself. It is the city dweller who needs to economize on those foods which are so lavishly abundant in the country, which makes her long for a larger income to buy plenty of cream, eggs and butter.

The various jellies and gelatins are delicious combined with fruit and served with whipped cream, but the average farmer working in the open, enjoys a hearty dessert especially if the dinner is not abundantly substantial. With a hearty dinner even a hard working man in the open is better to have a light dessert to finish a heavy meal in hot weather.

Ice cream is nourishing, wholesome and always liked, so when in doubt make ice cream.

Sponge Pudding With Roxbury Sauce.—An ordinary sponge cake served with this pudding is very good or the sauce may be served with a sponge pudding. Beat the white of an egg until stiff, and gradually three-fourths of a cupful of powdered sugar; then add the yolk of an egg, beaten thick, three-fourths of a cupful of cream, beaten stiff, a few grains of salt and flavoring to taste.

SUMMER FRUITS.

There is no more attractive way of serving fruits than fresh and garnished with their own foliage. A basket of strawberries, raspberries, currants or blackberries with the green leaves, make a most attractive fruit dish.

Fruit Salad.—Slice together two bananas, two oranges, and pour over the juice of half a lemon. Heap on lettuce leaves and serve with French dressing. To make the dressing use one tablespoonful of mild vinegar and three of olive oil. Beat well; add a half teaspoonful of powdered sugar, cayenne and salt to taste. A drop of tabasco may be used instead of the cayenne if one has it.

Orange Sherbet.—Take one egg, one quart of milk, one pint of cream, the juice and grated rind of three oranges, the juice and grated rind of one lemon, and two and a half cupfuls of sugar. Beat the egg and add to the milk; cook until the egg is cooked, cool, add to the cream. Dissolve the sugar in the fruit juice and add to the other mixture. Freeze as usual.

Banana Trifle.—A dainty dessert which is easy to prepare is made of half a cupful of peanuts, one cupful of mashed banana, and a half cupful of grated cocoanut. Arrange on a small plate and pour over orange juice.

Cherry Ambrosia.—Soak four tablespoonfuls of pearl tapioca in a pint of water overnight. The next morning, stone enough cherries to make a pint of fruit; add to the tapioca the juice of the cherries mixed with a pint of water; let simmer 20 minutes; add sugar to sweeten, then the cherries and cook four minutes longer. Set on ice and serve with whipped cream.

Raspberry Whip.—Crush a cupful of cherries, add a cupful of sugar and beat into the whites of two eggs until stiff. Serve in sherbet glasses with a few whole berries on top.

HINTS ON CARE OF CHILD.

Children, like plants, need light, air, water and food for growth. The body needs besides these sleep and exercise to use well the food that is eaten.

Little children need food in small quantities and often, as they grow older the quantity, variety and time for feeding lengthens.

It is important that the hands and faces of little people be kept clean, so that they do not take into their bodies with food any disease germs.

What children eat builds them physically. Nothing should hinder the period of growth, for it can never be made up to them in later life.

Children should be taught to thoroughly chew their food, they should not be hurried in their eating, or fussed with and corrected during the meal. Foods that are not to be given children should not be temptingly displayed before them. For this reason their own mealtime and table is desirable.

The helpless child is dependent upon older people to provide for him; we should know and study his needs.

Sleep is an absolute necessity to any life; for children under three, there should be twelve hours sleep at night and a nap morning and afternoon. Children who are not given sleep enough at this time will reap the harvest of nerves and weakness all through life. The eyes rest during sleep, the heart does not need to work so hard and the nervous system is refreshed by sleep. Not only the health, but the child's intelligence depend upon good habits in early life. Plenty of fresh air in the sleeping room is as necessary as good food at the table. The child who gets up with a headache and a bad taste in the mouth has often slept in a poorly ventilated room. Cold air is not pure air. The normal child gets its exercise in play. Too violent play is a strain upon the nervous system.

Bathing the skin is as necessary as flushing the digestive tract with water. Waste products, either outside or in, clog the system and cause disease.

COOKING MUSHROOMS.

This delicious vegetable which may be had in many localities just for the seeking, is so inviting and wholesome when well prepared that it should be studied so that the common varieties may be gathered without danger of getting the poisonous varieties. The caps of the mushrooms should be peeled and then throw them into salted water, so that if there are any insects the water will draw them out. Then drain and wipe dry; put into saucepan with butter and stew them well covered so that the flavor will not be lost.

Broiled Mushrooms.—Select large even-sized mushrooms, peel the caps, remove the stems and place them gill side up on a broiler, put a bit of butter in each cap and place over the heat. Cook until thoroughly done, season with salt and pepper; serve hot.

Mushroom and Veal Ragout.—Take equal quantities of cold cooked veal and puff balls, mince all together; other kinds of mushrooms may be used as well. Mince fine a small onion and add to the mushrooms and meat into a pan with some cold meat gravy, and water enough for moisture. Add pepper, salt and butter to season, and cook until tender.

Beefsteak Smothered in Mushrooms.—Have ready a sufficient quantity of full-grown mushrooms, carefully cleaned, cut them in pieces and put into a baking pan with a tablespoonful of butter to each cupful of mushrooms; sprinkle with salt and pepper, and bake 10 minutes. Broil the steak until almost tender, then put it in the pan on some of the mushrooms; cover with the rest, and cook a few minutes longer. Turn out and serve at once.

Breakfast Bacon With Mushrooms.—Take a dozen good-sized mushrooms, clean and lay aside; cook breakfast bacon until crisp; remove the bacon to a hot platter and add the mushrooms; cook in the bacon fat until tender, season with salt and pepper and serve with bacon and buttered toast at breakfast.

A NEW POOL ORGANIZED

Owensboro, Feb. 2.—The Farmers Co-operative Tobacco Association is the name of a new tobacco growers' association that was formed at the court house today. There were 400 farmers in attendance from Daviess, McLean, Ohio and Hancock counties, despite the wretched weather conditions. R. H. Ford, of Daviess county, was elected president.

The committee named at a meeting two weeks ago offered a constitution and by-laws, which were adopted. The association is formed for the purpose of uniting all three tobacco organizations in this district into one. The constitution provides that none of the tobacco that is to be pooled will be sold without a vote of the poolers. Delivery points will be established in every county in the district. The backers of the new organization are dissatisfied with the loose leaf method of selling tobacco and will make an effort to pool the greater part of the Green River crop next year.

The board of control will consist of one member from each magisterial district in the four counties. Dr. Fred Mutchler, of Lexington, was in attendance at the meeting and delivered an address urging the farmers to organize. He declared that all other business in the United States is organized except that of the farmers, and as a result every other business is prospering and everyone has plenty of money except the farmer. A resolution was adopted memorializing the Legislature not to pass the "drastic Anti-trust Bill that has been introduced."

The Fayette county Fiscal Court says farm laborers are in need worse in that county than a Farm Agent. It siggests that the farmers in Fayette county call on the experiment station for such information as they desire.

NOTICE.

We, the undersigned, owners and tenants in charge of land bordering on the Ohio river at Rabbit Hash, Boone county, Kentucky, hereby give notice that all persons are forbidden to land or tie up any wreckage of any kind on or in front of our land without our consent.

We further give notice that all persons are forbidden to take anything out of any drift pile that may lodge on or in front of our land without our consent.

The courts have decided that the laws of Kentucky give us ownership to such drift piles, and as we have to clean them off of our land year after year, we desire the benefit of anything of value they may contain, and any person distnribing them will be prosecuted:

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ½ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make the hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off. 1m

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOL. XXXXI. Established 1875. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17. 1916. $1.50 Per Year. NO. 21

A Condition, Not a Theory

The citizens of Burlington are confronted with a condition, which, to improve, will necessitate going down into their jeans and bringing forth a considerable amount of dough. Reference is had to the condition of the Burlington and Florence pike, Burlington and Petersburg pike, Burlington and Belleview pike, the Burlington and East Bend road, and the Burlington and Union road from the corporation line of the town to the center of the town. The parts of the above mentioned thoroughfares which Burlington has to maintain constitute about a mile and to put in the proper condition will require a considerable amount of money, which should be ready for use as soon as the work can be done, and in order to get the matter before the people of the town the RECORDER suggests that County Judge Cason fix a date and call a meeting to be held by the citizens of Burlington to devise ways and means for repairing the streets or parts of roads above mentioned.

Wastebasket Advertising

Wastebasket! The merchant who wishes to reach 10,000 wastebaskets into which his advertising circulars fall must pay some one for their writing, printing and posting, and as the New York Herald, one of the ablest exponents of business principles in the country says, "The wastebasket cannot read circulars and is unable to buy any of the things that they seem to exploit." Our esteemed contemporary is surprised to know that men of supposed commercial acumen spend large sums each year in the futile effort to convert the wastebaskets of the country into customers, while neglecting the advertising columns of publications that are not thrown into wastebaskets.

Fancy Automobile Driving

Some fancy automobile driving was done in Burlington some time during last Friday night. The machine struck the lamp post at M. L. Riddell's corner, the impact demolishing the large lamp on the top of the post. The machine was then driven between the post and the corner of the store building and turned sharply to the right and passed over to Kelly's corner from where it traveled on the sidewalk to the corner of the Peoples Bank, when it made another sharp turn to the center of the street, where the track of the machine was lost, and it is supposed it went up in the air, where it appears the driver was all the time.

Has Disabled Hand---Can not Write

R. B. Huey, Secretary of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Co., has a badly disabled right hand and cannot fill up the policies granted on applications which were accepted by the directors at their last meeting. However, this in no way interferes with the insurance, and the policies will be made out and forwarded as soon as the secretary is able to use a pen.

Covington a Supply Station

Congressman Rouse has had the Covington postoffice designated as a supply station and all the small offices in Kenton, Boone, Grant, Carroll, Trimble, Gallatin, Henry and Owen counties will receive hereafter all their supplies, except stamps and money order blanks, from the Covington postoffice.

Everybody Under Obligations to Jack

Jack Eddins, his mule and his snow plow gladdened the hearts of nearly all the citizens of the town last Sunday morning by opening paths thru the snow on the sidewalks and the street crossings. Jack was on the job early, even before many had left their couches.

Executor Qualified

W. H. Rice, of Florence, and his nephews, Eli, W. A., Edward E. and George, were in Burlington, Monday, when Eli Rice qualified as executor of the will of his father, Thos. Rice. G. R. Kennedy, J. R. Dixon and John Ransler were appointed to appraise the personal estate of the decedent.

Getting Better

The many friends of ex-County Judge Benj. Stephens will be glad to hear that his health is improving, and he hopes to be out again soon.

John Hogan, of the Mt. Zion neighborhood, called the Recorder early Monday morning and reported ice and snow six inches deep and the thermometer two above zero.

Quite a bevy of young people were skating on W. A. Gaines' pond near town, Monday night. The snow had been removed from the ice for the occasion.

An admission of 15 cents will be charged by the Florence Improvement Club at its entertainment to be given on the 19th inst.

TWO MORE MEMBERS

Of President Wilson's Cabinet Tender Their Resignations and Were Accepted.

Washington, Feb. 10.—Because of differences of opinion about the proposed continental army, compulsory military training and the Clarke amendment to the Philippines independence bill, Secretary of War Garrison and Assistant Secretary of War Breckinridge today tendered their resignation to President Wilson, and they were accepted.

Correspondence exhibiting the differences of opinion, together with the letters of resignation and acceptance were made public at the White House today.

The President and Secretary Garrison held exactly opposite views on compulsory military training, the Secretary favoring it and the President opposing it.

On the other issues it is made plain by the correspondence that Mr. Garrison felt that the President was temporizing in a situation so fraught with critical importance that decisive action alone was called for.

Secretary Garrison regarded Philippine independence, as promised in the Clarke amendment, as "an abandonment of the duty of the nation and a breach of trust toward the Filipinos."

The President admitted that he was privately opposed to the Clarke amendment, but did not wish to interfere until the House, as well as the Senate, had acted.

Secretary Garrison stood pat for a plan of centralized Federal control of military forces; President Wilson had faltered in his support of this principle and had indicated his willingness to listen to proposals for strengthening the National Guard as a substitute for the continental army.

The formal correspondence out of which this rupture in the Cabinet springs began with a letter dated January 12.

Mr. Garrison is the third member of the original Wilson Cabinet to resign.

Mr. Bryan resigned because of differences with the President over the foreign policy of the Government. Mr. McReynolds resigned to become a Justice of the Supreme Court. Mr. Garrison has resigned because of differences with the President over the proposed preparedness policy.

Aside from what may be read between the lines, including Secretary Garrison's manifest irritation at the temporizing policy of the President, the correspondence fully portrays the causes of this unexpected break in the Cabinet.

Mr. Garrison has been reported as about to resign on a number of occasions, but recently there has been no suggestion of such action on his part.

The President himself probably will take personal charge of the Administration's national defense plans in Congress.

Assistant Secretary Breckinridge resigned as a mark of loyalty to his chief, whose views he shared. Major General Scott, Chief of Staff of the army, automatically becomes Secretary of War ad interim.

Mr. Garrison's resignation was a complete surprise to official Washington generally. He made no personal explanation. Several hours before the official announcement he had boarded a train with his wife for New York and word had been passed at the department that he had gone for an indefinite stay.

The acute differences of opinion which led to the break began early in the year, when opposition to the continental army plan began developing in Congress. There had been indefinite rumors of the possibility of the Secretary of War leaving the Cabinet, but they never were countenanced in official quarters.

SLAPPED RIGHT IN THE FACE.

Judge Goes After Gamblers In Social Circles.

Society was "slapped right in the face" this week. Hopkins Circuit Court convened in Madisonville and Judge Carl Henderson, of Marion, in giving his instruction to the grand jury, urged that body to investigate society gambling. He said much gambling was carried on in the homes and members of bridge clubs take home prizes won in the game. Judge Henderson said this was gambling and told the grand jury to investigate every case and to "indict every woman found guilty of the act."

The Judge told the grand jury too much was wasted on petty cases of the poor negro crap shooter while society gambling was passed over. It was the society woman who could have more influence over the citizenship than the other class and it was the card table in the home that should be tabooed.

"Investigate this, indict them, and then go after the poor negro, and this lawlessness will be stopped," he said.

Mr. and Mrs. Add Robbins, who live down on Gunpowder creek, were guests of their daughters, Mrs. J. M. Eddins, of Burlington, and Mrs. John Bachelor, out on the Florence pike, last week. MAKE BETTER BUTTER

No Reason Why Product Should Not Be Improved in Quality.

By More Careful Handling and Following Simple Directions Given, Better Grade Can Be Made—Hand Separator Favored.

(By H. M. BAINES.)

Nearly all butter sold by the farmer is poorer quality than it should be. By more careful handling and better methods there is no reason why this product should not only be improved in quality, but a better price should be received for it. By carrying out the following conditions and methods a very much better grade of butter should be produced:

Hand separator cream produces better butter than that separated by any other method. The deep can surrounded by cold water is second best; pans and crocks are third best, and the water-dilution method comes last.

Clean, Airy Churning Room.

The cream should be kept in as nearly a sweet condition as possible until enough has been gathered for a churning. This should then be soured or ripened. To ripen the cream warm it to a temperature of 75 to 80 degrees, until it is sour enough; then cool down to a temperature of from 55 to 60 degrees, which is right for churning. Let it stand at this temperature for an hour or so before churning, if possible. This will cause the butter to come in better condition. Cream that is being ripened should be thoroughly stirred several times before it is ready for churning.

It is often advisable to save some of the buttermilk of one churning to be used as a starter (the same as yeast in breadmaking) for the next batch of cream. Add a small amount of this buttermilk to the sweet cream when enough has been gathered for a churning; thoroughly stir it, and it will ripen very much more rapidly. Care should be exercised to keep this old buttermilk in as good condition as possible.

Strain all cream into the churn. This will remove all clots and particles of curd, and there will be no danger of white specks in the butter. Do not fill the churn over one-third to one-half full. Give the cream room for agitation, which insures quick churning. Turn the churn just fast enough to give the cream the greatest amount of agitation.

The butter should be gathered until the grains become about one-half the size of wheat. Then draw off the buttermilk through a strainer and wash the butter in cold water two or three times, or until the wash water is removed practically clear. In washing, care should be exercised not to bring the grains together in one mass, but rather keep it in the granular condition. The washing of the butter removes the buttermilk and makes the butter keep for a longer time. It also puts it in better condition for salting.

The butter should be taken from the churn in the granular condition and the salt sprinkled over it before it has been worked together. Usually a scant ounce of salt is added for each pound of butter.

One working, at the time of salting, is usually sufficient, providing the butter is hard enough when removed from the churn. If the butter is somewhat soft when taken out, it can be salted and set away a few hours until it gets hard enough to finish. Butter is usually worked enough when the water has been removed so that it will bend without breaking. Too much working will spoil its grain and make it salvy, while leaving too much water in it will spoil its keeping qualities.

Pack or print the butter as soon as it has been worked sufficiently and put it in a cool place until it is taken to the market. Remember that the appearance of the package, as well as the way the butter is packed, has a great deal to do with the selling price.

Great Undertaking.

Apple orchards ought to be sprayed three times a year, and when it comes to taking care of 500 or 1,000 trees, it will be readily seen that this is no small undertaking.

Neglect Is Expensive.

Good orchardists say that an orchard neglected for one year, that is, without spraying or pruning and cultivation, puts it back fully three years.

Make Money With Fruit.

In these days of specialties it takes learning, nerve and some capital to make money growing fruit.

W. C. T. U. NEWS.

(Furnished by Mrs. Belle Dickey.)

One afternoon there was some confusion a little way from the pulpit. Mr. Moody stopped instantly. A man under the influence of liquor had become restless and was talking to those around him. The disturbance went on for some minutes, and Mr. Moody stood quiet, without a word or gesture. Presently the man rose and climbed awkardly over the feet and knees of his neighbors in the pew out into the aisle. For the moment the audience lost sight of Mr. Moody, and watched the man as with uncertain step he shuffled down the aisle. Just as the door was shut behind the man Mr. Moody said with the most inexpressible sadness, "There goes our brother, our imperiled brother, and who can tell where he will go and what his end will be? Must he go alone? Does no one care for his soul?" The words were gentle and moving. Instantly several men rose down the aisles and out through the door in loving pursuit of the wanderer. Mr. Moody went on with his sermon and made no further reference to the episode. So great was his mastery of the service that I forgot all about the poor drunken fellow. I lingered in conversation with friends until the house was almost empty, and then walked down the aisle. Between two rows of the pews I saw two men on their knees. One had his arm around the other, who was sobbing brokenly. It was Mr. Moody and the poor drunkard who had been brought back, and Mr. Moody was praying earnestly. I do not know what became of that man, but it is something to know that he felt the embrace of Mr. Moody's strong arm, and that heaven heard Mr. Moody's plea that there might be mercy for him. From that afternoon I have had a hopefulness about the salvation of drunkards that I never had before.—Selected.

The entire South east of the Mississippi, with the exception of portions of Louisiana and Florida is now dry. Florida has only a few wet spots, these being cities and towns. There are no saloons in rural districts. In Louisiana 30 of the 59 parishes, counties, are dry and 51 per cent of the population is under no-license.

Moderate Drinking.

A remarkable investigation made to ascertain the attitude of the great iron and steel producing concerns in Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Illinois, toward alcoholic drink and drinkers has recently been completed. The facts obtained constitute a most informing temperance document, and, coming from a strictly business source, record the reality of "the industrial prohibition movement." In the name of "Safety First" big businesses are protecting both workmen and profits by actively opposing the drink habit and the open saloon.

One hundred and forty large iron and steel corporations located in these four steel-producing states, some of which operate more than one plant, were included in the investigation. The capital invested aggregates considerably more than a billion dollars, and, with affiliated concerns, employs hundreds of thousands of men. It is safe to assume that the attitude of such an immense affiliated business expresses the temperance sentiment of the large American business man and employer.

Perhaps the most significant fact developed was the universal recognition that even the moderate use of alcohol has a distinctly bad effect upon a workman's efficiency, and reliability; there seems to be no "two opinions" on this particular point. The moderate drinker is, without exception, rated as an "undesirable employee," even though he may never have been known to get drunk. Drinking, no matter how moderate, slams the door of promotion to responsible positions and better pay into a workman's own face.

Speaking of this movement, a liquor trade magazine said:

One of the most pregnant signs of the times is the steady and increasing tendency of big corporations to encroach upon the personal liberties of workers.—

The Brewers' Journal remarks: There are even companies and individual employers who threaten to discharge employees for drinking alcohol at any time. They do not care if that is social and economic slavery. Their main object is to protect their pocketbooks.

And well might these interests be alarmed, for what will become of the open saloon when the employees in our large manufacturing plants quit them? This may explain the $23,390,000 decrease in revenue on booze reported the last fiscal year.

And here is the way it works: Recently a workman at the Illinois Steel Company secured a better position in Pittsburg, and before his departure his fellow-workmen gave a banquet in his honor at one of the hotels with twenty-five foremen and men holding clerical positions as the guests. When these men went to the table there was a glass of cocktail at each plate. When they left the table there was still a glass of cocktail at each plate. Not one had been touched.

A Saloonkeeper's Plea.

A saloon-keeper once came out into the street and, accosting me, said with very evident wrath: "They say you women are going to put all of the saloons out of Montana." I answered, "Yes, that is our intention." "Do you think you can do it?" he asked. "Oh, yes, we are sure of it," I answered. "And you will ruin my business?" Yes, sir." Pointing to his saloon near by, he voiced the great question that agitates these men not only in Montana but all over the nation.

"You see that building," he said. "That is all I have in the world. I worked hard to build and equip it. There I earn the food and clothing for my wife and babies. You women say you are going to put me out of business. That will ruin my property. How am I to support my family?" I thought of the many families that his business was making hungry and unhappy, but I said nothing of this, for there was to me a pathos in his plea and to him it was a very real problem. In the seven states that recently went dry there are thousands that meet the same conditions. They are cast adrift upon a wholly uncharted sea and they see nothing beyond.

I answered: "My friend, when Montana goes dry, and as sure as you and I live Montana is going dry, that lot will remain just where it is. Unless there is a fire, and against that you can continue to protect your property by insurance as you are doing now, your building will remain where it is. Just lower your bar and make a counter of it. Put in some more windows, at a slight expense, and sell tea, coffee, sugar, flour, shoes—any commodity—to the very same people who patronize you now and receive in exchange the same kind of dollars. Perhaps, my friend, you have not thought that Mr. Brown over there who now comes to your place nightly and spends his money, may come in and buy a pair of shoes for his little Mary, who sadly needs them. The purchase on his part will not unfit him to earn another's day's wage tomorrow to buy something needful for his small son, Jimmie. And then perhaps he will come in the next night and buy a sack of flour, taking it home to his wife to use in making bread. As for Mr. Brown himself, he will go to bed and get a good night's sleep and the next day he will be able to earn enough more funds to buy a sack of potatoes. Do you not see that you may sell from the same building to the same people who now patronize you and get even more money? I am sure, too, that your wife will be happier and your children will no longer be shunned. We are not fighting you, my friend, but we are fighting your kind of business. Why not try to get into something honorable before the storm comes and be ready for the new trade?"

He answered: "Perhaps I'd better. Anyhow, I'll consider it. I see you women are not just abusing us. You are not the kind I thought you were."—Union Signal.

What Kansas Does Not Have.

"Yes, Kansas is a prosperous state, but there are some things which we do not have. More than half a million of our boys and girls never saw an open bar-room; we have only twenty-four women in Kansas prisons; we send only about two-fifths as many men per thousand of population to jail as does the nation as a whole; we have a great scarcity of poor-farms and paupers; we don't have nearly so many funerals as do other states, our death rate being extremely low; we have fewer tenants and more home owners in proportion to population; and we drink very little booze. I think you will agree with me that Kansas is all right, and that this celebration today is timely, appropriate and well merited.

"I do not think we can find anywhere else on the face of the earth a million and three-quarters of people who will grade up as well; who have a greater respect for law; who are as responsive to the demands of decency and fairness and the higher standards of citizenship.

"Never in the history of the state has Kansas been in better condition physically and financially and never have our people been more keenly alive to our opportunities of true greatness. We are entering the year 1916 with most brilliant prospects. From the bottom of my heart I congratulate the people of Kansas upon what we have already attained and upon our opportunities for the future."—Governor Capper.

Fulton—A very peculiar accident happened Tuesday afternoon at the home of J. M. Atherton near Crutchfield. Mrs. Bettie Atherton, his wife, in drawing a bucket of water, was thrown into the cistern by the caving in of the earth around the cistern. Mr. Atherton rushed to her aid but could not pull her out alone, and called in some neighbors. In trying to get Mrs. Acherton out, the earth crumbled again and the whole party fell in. Luckily the water was not deep enough to drown them, or else they had presence of mind to cling to the bucket and hold up each other, and all were finally gotten out. Mrs. Atherton, who stayed in the water longer than the others, was unconscious when taken up, but it was thought she was not seriously injured. She is about seventy-five years old.

INJURY BY FIELD MICE

Ravages of Little Rodents Result in Serious Losses.

Problem of Controlling Animals Is One of Considerable Importance to Farmers and Orchardists—Plea for Eradication.

(By D. E. LANTZ.)

Short-tailed field mice are commonly known as meadow mice, pine mice and moles; locally as bear mice, bucktailed mice or black mice. The term includes a large number of closely related species widely distributed over the northern hemisphere.

The runs of meadow mice are mainly on the surface of the ground under grass, leaves, weeds, brush, boards, snow or other sheltering litter. They are hollowed out by the animals' claws and worn hard and smooth by being frequently traversed.

Meadow mice are injurious to most crops. They destroy grass in meadows and pastures; cut down grain, clover and alfalfa; eat grain left standing in shocks; injure seeds, bulbs, flowers and garden vegetables, and are especially harmful to trees and shrubbery. The extent of their depredations is usually in proportion to their numbers.

When present even in ordinary numbers meadow mice cause serious injury to orchards and nurseries. Their attacks on trees are often made in winter under cover of snow, but they may occur at any season under shelter of growing vegetation or dry litter. The animals have been known almost totally to destroy large nurseries of young apple trees.

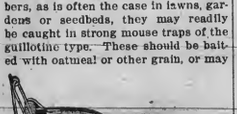
Older orchard trees are sometimes killed by mice. In Kansas the writer saw hundreds of apple trees, eight to ten years planted and four to six inches in diameter, completely girdled by these pests. The list of cultivated trees and shrubs injured by these animals includes nearly all those grown by the horticulturist.



Pine mice inhabit chiefly forested regions and are unknown on the open plains. Ordinarily they live in the woods, but are fond of old pastures or lands not frequently cultivated.

Their harmful activities include the destruction of potatoes, sweet potatoes, bulbs, shrubbery and trees.

In the eastern part of the United States pine mice do more damage to orchards than do meadow mice, partly because their work is undiscovered until trees begin to die.

Methods of destroying field mice or holding them in check by trapping and poisoning are equally applicable to meadow mice and pine mice.

If mice are present in small numbers, as is often the case in lawns, gardens or seedbeds, they may readily be caught in strong mouse traps of the guillotine type. These should be baited with oatmeal or other grain, or may be set in the mouse runs without bait.

On larger areas where mice are abundant, poisoning is the quickest means of destroying them, and even on small areas it has advantages over trapping.

RAKE FOR STIRRING ALFALFA

Side Delivery Tool Rolls Hay Up Loosely So Air Can Get Through It Without Sunburning.

The side delivery rake is about the best tool to use in stirring alfalfa. It rolls the hay up loosely so that the air can get through it without having it burned by the hot sun. Great care should be exercised in handling alfalfa so as not to lose the leaves, the most important part of the plant. They are worth as much, pound for pound, as wheat middlings, so it pays to try to save them.

Alfalfa hay can be handled in much the same way as clover, except that a little more care must be observed to prevent it from getting too dry. In handling alfalfa cut it down in the afternoon after the dew is off, let it lie until afternoon then rake into windrows with the side delivery, and either put into cocks that evening, or the next morning after the dew is off. It is preferable to let the hay do most of the curing in the cock as a little better feed can be produced in this way. It can be put into the cocks when quite green and if the weather is at all favorable it will cure in a day or so and make fine hay.

Anyone using a muslin-front henhouse, who desires to have the windows above, and yet dislikes to have the light shut off when the curtains are raised can avoid this by fastening straight strips of wood securely to the frames, letting them extend to the top of the windows, where they are hinged, writes T. L. Bailey of Greens Fork, Ind., in Missouri Valley Farmer. Then the curtains may be raised clear of the windows.

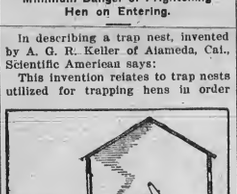
SYTEM FOR FEEDING FOWLS

Grain, Green Food, Grubs, Grit and Shell Are Necessary in Chicken Diet—Dry Mash Best.

For the hen that is manufacturing an egg every day, or one in two days, it is impossible to get the required nourishment fast enough unless it is taken into the body already ground. The best system of feeding, then, as recognized the country over, is to give one or more of the varieties of whole grain as a means of exercise; that is, fed in a deep litter so the fowls will have to work for it. Then use a variety of ground foods to supply the nourishment, heat and energy of the bird.

The four "g's" give us a cue as to what is necessary in the chicken diet —grain, green food, grubs, grit and shell. Whole grain gives the best results when two or more forms are mixed and fed twice daily in a deep litter. Three parts wheat, three parts cracked corn and one part oats, or equal parts wheat and cracked corn or kafir, makes a good combination. One pint to ten fowls is about the right amount, with the heaviest feed at night.

Ground food may be fed in either a dry or wet form, but for breeders and layers, dry mash is best, while for fattening poultry it is better to use wet mash. The dry form may be supplied in self-feeding hoppers. A good mixture would be:



Seven pounds mill run, seven pounds cornmeal, three pounds beef scrap, two pounds alfalfa leaves, one-half pound charcoal.

KEEP RECORD OF EGGS LAID

Californian Invents Device Possessing Minimum Danger of Frightening Hen on Entering.

In describing a trap nest, invented by A. G. R. Keller of Alameda, Cal., Scientific American says:

This invention relates to trap nests utilized for trapping hens in order that accounts may be kept of the numbers of eggs laid by each hen, and the object of the invention is to provide a construction for accomplishing this purpose, of such a nature that there will be minimum danger of frightening the birds either as they enter the nest or are trapped therein.

FEED CHARCOAL EVERY WEEK

Always Advisable to Feed as Early in Morning as Convenient—Shake Up the Litter.

Once a week, or oftener, it may be well to add to the hen's ration a supply of granulated charcoal. In the winter it is always advisable to feed as early in the morning as convenient, and give the evening meal about an hour before dark.

Shake up the litter with a fork, so that the grain will work down into it, which will compel the fowls to hunt for their rations.

Breed for Winter Eggs.

The choice of a breed for the production of winter eggs is governed largely by the peculiar requirements of the market in which the eggs are to be sold, and also by the demand for table poultry, which is in many cases an important side line.

Developing Dairy Heifers.

Too little attention is given to this industry in our State. Kentucky is not known as a dairy section at all, yet we have greater possibilities than most other of the States in our good grasses and and water and the best of climate Just because we have these prime requisites we become careless and let our young stock rough it. They have pastures during the open season, but when hard winter comes—and cold weather is needed in the proper developing process—then our young heifers suffer, not so much from hunger, although too many of them do, but because of improper feeding. (A ration of corn fodder can not nourish the bone and milk-producing qualities in a heifer. They need as carfully balanced rations almost as a dairy cow, especial thought being given to the growth of the bone and muscle, and not fat, and the young things taught to eat large quantities of roughness carrying protine.

Kentucky is becoming a dairy State more every year. We have within our bounds now many of the greatest strains of dairy cattle, some of the most up-to-date herds and well fitted barns, supplied with modern conveniencies We are making rapid progress as a State in certain sections, but we lack the spirit of good breeders on our farms generally, breeders who carefully feed our young stock for proper development.—Kentucky Farmer.

C. C. Buckner, of near town, brought to our office a sample of Spanish or Havana, tobacco grown on the farm of Charles P. Reeves last year. It is fully matured and the kind of tobacco of which a superior quality of cigars are manufactured. It is of fine flavor.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

How the Government Is Meeting Malaria Problem.

Four per cent of the inhabitants of certain sections of the South have malaria. The estimate, based on the reporting of 20,881 cases during 1914, has led the United States Public Health Service to give increased attention to the malaria problem, according to the annual report of the Surgeon General. Of 13,526 blood specimens examined by Government officers during the year, 1,797 showed malarial infection. The infection rate among white persons was above eight per cent and among colored persons twenty per cent. In two counties in the Yazoo Valley 40 out of every 100 inhabitants presented evidence of the disease.

Striking as the above figures are they are no more remarkable than those relating to the reduction in the incidence of the disease following surveys of the Public Health Service at 34 places in nearly every state of the South. In some instances from an incidence of fifteen per cent, in 1914, a reduction has been accomplished to less the four or five per cent in 1915.

One of the important scientific discoveries made during the year was in regard to the continuance of the diserase from season to season. Over 2,000 Anopheline mosquitoes in malarious districts were dissected, during the early spring months, without finding a single infected insect, and not until May 15, 1915, was the first parasite in the body of a mosquito discovered. The Public Health Service, therefore, concludes that mosquitoes in the latitude of the Southern States ordinarily do not carry the infection thru the winter. The discovery indicates that protection from malaria may be secured by treating human carriers with quinine to the middle of May, thus preventing any infection from chronic sufferers reaching mosquitoes and being transmitted by them to other persons.

Although quinine remains the best means of treating malaria and is also of marked benefit in preventing infection, the eradication of the disease as a whole rests upon the destruction of the breeding places of Anopheline mosquitoes. The Public Health Service therefore, is urging a definite campaign of draining standing water, the filling of low places, and the regarding and training of streams where malarial mosquitoes breed. The oiling of breeding places, and the stocking of streams with topfeeding minnows, are further recommended. The Service also gives advice regarding screening, and other preventive measures as a part of the educational campaigns conducted in sections of infected territory.

This study is typical of the scientific investigations which are being carried out by the Public Health Service, all of which have a direct bearing on eradicating the disease. The malaria now includes the collection morbidity data, malaria surveys, dem laboratory studies, educational camonstration work, scientific field and paigns, and special studies of impounded water and drainage projects.

Died Suddenly.

Mrs. James Brown, of Idlewild, died suddenly about six o'clock, Sunday morning. She prepared breakfast, washed the dishes and had gone out to sweep snow out of a path, when she was stricken. Mr. Brown heard her struggling, and went to her, but by the time he carried her in the house she was dead. She recovered from a a spell of sickness only a few weeks ago. She was about 55 and is survived by her husband and two sons, Lawson and Ernest. Funeral Tuesday at 11 o'clock, after which the remains were placed in the vault at Bullittsville.

CLOSING DAYS PROMISE RUSH

General Assembly Passed Few Bills—Session To Close in Three Weeks

STATE-WIDE DEFEATED

Woman Suffrage is Placed on Calendar in House—Republicans Make Plans for State Convention March 1.

Frankfort, Ky. (Special)—With the closing of the 1916 session of the Kentucky Legislature near at hand, there is much speculation as to what bills will be passed to remedy business conditions. It was expected that more would be accomplished in the early days of the present session, but a great deal of time was taken up over the Pike County division, prohibition and woman suffrage, neither of which have made any headway towards being enacted.

It appears that State-wide prohibition has been put to sleep for all this session, being defeated in both the House and the Senate.

The bill for the proposed Stanley county laid on the table in the Senate, is not expected to be brought up again.

Woman suffrage unfavorably reported in both the House and the Senate, but brought out in the lower body over the committee by a majority vote and placed on the calendar, appears to be certain of defeat.

The usual scramble at the eleventh hour is expected by those who have carefully watched the proceedings of this and many previous sessions of the Kentucky lawmakers.

Out of respect to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, both branches adjourned over Saturday, February 12th, his birthday.

The first thing Governor Stanley did after the State-wide prohibition amendment was defeated, was to call Attorney-General M. M. Logan, Auditor Robert L. Greene and Treasurer Sherman Goodpastor into conference, with a view to legislation which it is intended to liquidate the State debt of three million dollars.

The first thing to be done is to secure the passage of a bill under which provision may be made for decreasing the amount of interest now being paid by the State on its outstanding warrant.

A committee of the Kentucky Bankers' Association will assist in the preparation of this bill. Several of the leading bankers of the State have already consulted with Governor Stanley regarding the matter, and administration officials are optimistic concerning the likelihood of eliminating the debt. Leaders declare that the future of the Democratic party in Kentucky depends in a great measure upon it.

The Duncan administration bill to amend the text book adoption law to provide that not more than three subjects of study shall be changed at any one year was recommitted with leave to bring it forth at any time. This bill has passed the Senate and will be substituted for the House Bill.

The solons are beginning to take stock now that the session of the General Assembly is more than half over. Every man who has a bill that he relies on to pass in order to square himself with his constituents is beginning to figure on how he can get it through the legislative maze that now confronts him.

There will likely be some fancy "Jockeying" from now on, and all sorts of arguments will be brought to bear by the anxious solons to get their measures advanced before the time when they must trust to the tender mercies of the Rules Committee.

State-wide prohibition was defeated in the House of Representatives falling to receive the necessary three-fifths by six votes.

The vote stood 54 for submission and 40 against.

During the debate on this measure in the House trouble arose between Representative W. B. Harvey, of Dixon, Webster county, and Representative J. D. Pumphrey, of Flemingsburg.

Speaking in support of the measure, Representative Harvey resented a statement that a Democratic member who voted for the bill was a bolter. He referred to the Democratic convention at Louisville last year as not representing the real sentiment of the party. He criticied Governor Stanley harshly and accused him of deceiving the drys in certain localities as to his attitude on the state-wide question.

When Representative Pumphrey gained the floor his speech precipitated trouble. He declared that he intended to vote for state-wide even though he knew it to be contrary to the platform, because he had promised his constituents to support it, but, he declared he could not remain silent when the Governor was being attacked.

He made charges that a chambermaid at a hotel in Frankfort has accused Representative Harvey of approaching her in his room with outstretched hands several weeks ago.

The accusation was investigated thoroughly by Police Judge W. C. Henrdon and Policeman R. L. Quire at the time said that the statements made by the woman were not sufficent to issue a warrant.

Harvey branded the statements of Pumphrey as a black falsehood deliberately and maliciously planned by a man against his enemy. He told that it was a frameup by those opposed to state-wide prohibition.

The state-wide prohibition amendment is dead for the present session of the legislature, having been defeated by the Senate.

The Woman Suffrage constitutional amendment providing for the people to vote on the question of whether women shall vote or not was brought out of the hands of the Committee in th House of Representatives despite their unfavorable report, by a vote of 51 to 40.

The vote of the Committee stood 5 to 4 in favor of killing the bill, but Representative Hobbs, of Lexington, author of the bill, moved that notwithstanding the unfavorable report, the bill be given its first reading and placed in the calendar. He made a brief speech in favor of the bill and Representative Odie Duncan, of Henderson, spoke against it.

The galleries of the House were filled with women long before the time to vote on the motion and were jubilant at their success in having it placed in the calender.

Without debate or roll call, the Preparedness program by President Wilson was endorsed by the Senate. The joint resolution was introduced by Senator Booles, of Spencer County.

The Impeachment Committee decided to make two reports to the House on the petition for the impeachment of J. E. Williams, Judge of McCreary County. The majority report, signed by the Democratic members will recommend the impeachment. The minority report, submitted by Representative White, of Marion County, the sole Republican member on the committee, will recommend the petition be dismissed.

Secretary of State Lewis has reappointed Charles J. Howes, who has been acting as Assistant Secretary of State, to hold until March 15th, or until his successor is appointed and approved by the Governor.

The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Judge Turner, upheld the position of State Auditor Greene and Attorney General Logan, refusing to allow the salaries of the porter and seven stenographers for the month of January in the office of V. O. Gilbert, State Superintendent of Public Schools.

The Court suggested that the General Assembly alone has power to appropriate public money to that purpose.

Gilbert says that he will appeal to the legislature for help and a bill to that effect will be thrashed out.

Two bills designed to enforce the Sunday closing law in Kenton and Campbell Counties passed the House without serious opposition after much trouble was experienced in getting them placed on the calender and through the necessary readings before a vote was taken.

The bills were introduced by Representative Greene, of Carrollton. The representatives from Kenton and Campbell Counties fought valiantly to defeat the measures.

The first measure is known as the "common nuisance injunction act." It provides any place where liquor is sold in violation of law shall be considered a common nuisance and provides for the abatement of such nuicances by injunction.

Upon the affidavits of three creditable citizens of any community that such a nuisance exists, the Attorney General of Kentucky is required to institute an action to enjoin the nuisance perpetually.

The second bill passed is a "forfeiture act." This measure provides any saloon keeper who violates the law shall forfeit his license, and that no such saloon keeper shall ever be granted another license.

The most drastic feature of the bill is the section which gives jurisdiction in all cases under the act to the Franklin Circuit Court upon the affidavit of two creditable witnesses that there has been a violation of the law. Either side may appeal to the Appellate Court.

The State Excise Commission bill, which has been proposed by the Governor as a substitute for the measures was not introduced.

The "forfeiture act" has been reported unfavorable in the Senate.

NOTICE.

Hereafter a charge of $1.00 will be made by the RECORDER for publishing Resolutions or Tributes of Respect adopted by a lodge or Society. The money must accompany the copy or it will receive no attention.

THE PUBLISHER.

How it will be Distributed

Under the policy promulgated by the Fiscal Court in regard to the $200,000 bond issue, should it carry, the voting precincts would be entitled to the following proportion of the $200,000; the rate being based on the 1914 assessment of the county:

Verona, 05.7 per cent.
Hamilton, 05.5 per cent.
Constance, 06.7 per cent.
Beaver, 01.7 per cent.
Union, 09 per cent.
Carlton, 05.9 per cent.
Walton, 14.4 per cent.
Petersburg, 07.6 per cent.
Bullittsville, 09.8 per cent.
Florence, 12.4 per cent.
Burlington, 13.7 per cent.
Belleview, 04.1 per cent.

The above per cent is not figured down to a gnat's heel but it is sufficiently near a nicety for all practical purposes, showing within a very few dollars of what amount each precinct will receive to dispose of as it deems best and will not be burdened with the necessity of scrapping over the entire amount of the bond issue.

On the above basis of distribution the precincts would receive a little more than the following amounts:

Verona—$11,400.
Hamilton—$11,000.
Constance—$13,400.
Beaver—$3,400.
Union—$18,000.
Carlton—$11,800.
Walton—$28,800.
Petersburg—$15,200.
Bullittsville—$19,600.
Florence—$24,800.
Burlington—$27,400.
Belleview—$8,800.

Who Are the Thieves?

There appears to be a considerable number of people in this county who do not hesitate to openly charge that the county officials are grafting—stealing the public funds which are produced by taxation. That is a very serious charge and if true the guilty official or officials should be punished.

The grand jury has jurisdiction of the offense charged and it is in session three time a year for the investigation of offenses of which its members have information or that may be reported to that body. The records showing the disposition of the county funds are kept in a room immediately across the hall from the room in which the grand jury transacts its business, consequently it would be an easy matter to put on foot an investigation.

In a short time the settlement of the Sheriff will be printed in pamphlet form and circulated among the taxpayers in the county for their inspection, and in the event an item of graft on the part of any county official is discovered in that report, the Recorder requests the party locating it to make known his discovery thru its columns.

It is an easy matter to defame a neighbor but when it comes to sustaining the charge a rough, weary and expensive road is some times encountered.

Don't accuse a man of being a thief unless you can prove the charge.

Don't Cet Out of Humor

Having carried quite a number of readers the time limit, the Recorder has begun sending out bills for the time for which they owe, hoping to be able to keep them on its list. Some to whom a bill is sent treat it with silent contempt; some get mad and send back a scorching letter—without a check for the amount; some send a check without any remarks, and others send a check accompanied by a letter expressive of their gratitude for the indulgence extended them. This is an illustration of how differently the same, identical proposition strikes different people. It is not the desire of the Recorder to offend any person by asking them for that to which it is entitled, and should it take offense at receiving such information it would get very much out of humor at the first of every month as those from whom it buys its supplies are sure to furnish it a statement of its indebtedness at the close of each month, and they expect the amount remitted in a few days thereafter, and the Recorder desires its ability to come across shall continue.

A Prospective Athletic Event

An event that will create much interest in athletic circles early this spring will be a wrestling bout between two noted athletes, one a citizen of Burlington and the other a resident of a rural section not many miles from town. Newton Sullivan holds the articles they have signed, and several towns in the county want to stage the contest. One of the principals is handicapped by a bum finger, which resulted from being caught in a piece of laundry machinery he was operating, and this may delay the meet several weeks.

Nothing Doing Now

Nothing sensational has been developed by the H. W. D. S. the past week. It expects to strike pay dirt at any of its daily sessions.

BONDS AND PIKES.

I received a very good letter from a lady in the north end of the county on the bond and pike question to which I wish to make the following public answer.

While I was glad to have an expression from a woman's standpoint and from the standpoint of one who is more inconvenienced by bad roads than I am, and while I can truly pay you the compliment of asking entirely practical questions, I must yet in the most kindly way, lay upon you the same criticism which in a greater degree I have made against the people of Boone county generally and that is, you lay entirely too much stress upon the details, expect too much for too little money, and that roads to a certain extent can be maintained without attention. In other words the greatest need in Boone county upon this great question is the awakening of the people, "the will" that brings about effort and co-operation.

Now I believe that the campaign for the bond issue, even if the result should be unfavorable, would do a great deal of good in Boone county on that line. Our people have not read enough on the question and they do not know enough about it, but the great obstacle in the way as I see it is the position being taken by each neighborhood and each individual, to try to get some little advantage with more or less fear that some other neighborhood or persons will get the advantage. There ought to be nothing like this in the county and as far as I know there is no occasion whatever for it and where ever such a disposition is manifested, either in an individual or in a portion of the county, I think we can rely upon the good sense and fairness of our Fiscal Court to act with discretion in the matter.

Suppose for instance that when the bonds are issued the court would expend the money in each district in proportion to the tax paid, that would not be very unfair; but suppose the court would expend the money in proportion to the mileage, or in proportion to the population, or in proportion to the importance of the roads. None of these would do any harm to the people of Boone county. However, I think you will plainly see that this is a mere detail and that what we want first is a proper road system in building and maintaining roads which Boone county has never had and never can have until they issue bonds, which means that within a short period of time we can please and improve each section of the county.

It might be wise to strike some sort of an average upon these four points to-wit; the amount of taxes paid; the road mileage; the population of the various districts, and having regard at the same time for the importance of the roads in each district. Yet even that average would leave out some points worthy of consideration, such as bridges, grade and cost of material. So that substantial justice is what we must look for instead of nicety. As for toll gates, which you seem to favor, it is easily demonstrable that they are the most unjust and unequal tax, as well as the most expensive tax to collect. It costs from twenty-five to one hundred percent to collect tax by tolls. I know one pike that took in just enough toll to pay the gate keeper. So the company opened the gates and voluntarily donated enough to keep the pike in repair.

While any particular method of distributing the funds is a matter of opinion and a matter of detail and therefore not now germane to the question, which is one of principle, my personal opinion is that a good road ought to be built wherever needed, let it cost what it may and let the tax come from where it may. From the standpoint of economy and from the standpoint of making the proceeds of the bonds do as much good as possible, the principle of voluntary subscription ought to be maintained, though not to the extent of one-half except in extreme cases approaching a private road. If I mistake not upon any plan named or under any combination thereof, the bad roads parts of the county will profit more than those parts which now have fairly good roads. However that may be, I lay it down as a proposition without exception, that it is to the interest of every man, woman and child in Boone county, old or young, rich or poor and wherever situated, that we have a good system of roads, and as a corollary thereof, that we cannot attain the end, now or hereafter, without bonds. Later on these two propositions will be explained and proven. If they are true, then every question that you ask, every doubt that has been raised and every suggestion or fault that has been found, by you or anyone in the county, as to the execution of the plan and application of the proceeds of the bonds become unimportant, relatively speaking, because they are mere detail. As details they are important and difficult but can be solved from time to time as they arise. The question now is, bonds or no bonds; roads or no roads; a system of pikes or just a pike here and there.

It is well enough to anticipate and guard against mistakes, fraud inequality, etc., as far as possible, but because such things have occurred and may occur again is no reason at all why we should give up or even be discouraged. You say that, "the graft germ has become so virulent especially in respect to public funds that almost any one is liable to be inoculated causing greater expense." I have been in intimate relation with all the officers of Boone county for twenty years, all of whom have been Democrats and I am a Republican, and I cheerfully certify that I have not seen nor suspected one cent of graft in all that time, and I make this statement especially emphatic with reference to the officers of the various courts. THE WHOLE FAULT WITH OUR ROADS IS THE WANT OF SYSTEM, THE LACK OF MEANS, THE INCOMPETENCE OF MEN FOR LACK OF TRAINING AND THE INSUFFICIENCY OF TOOLS TO WORK WITH. Every one of these things is traceable right back to the people because they are the masters and are themselves responsible directly for their existence. It is true now as always, "that wherever there is a will, there is a way."

Referring to your pike, the Bullittsville and Dry Creek pike, that is clearly a thoroughfare used by perhaps one-fourth of the county; it should be freed and reconstructed by the county; to do so will cost about the same as to buy and reconstruct the Lexington pike. But say some of the mud roads, "We are opposed to that." Let us see. The people on that pike and for four or five miles on either side who use it, have for thirty years been paying the same road tax that the man on the mud road has been paying; but all that money has been used on roads other than this pike because it has been maintained by tolls paid by these same people. Furthermore the land along that pike in some form and by somebody built that pike, whereas the land on mud roads for various reasons has not assumed a similar burden.

Then again some on a pike will say, "We built our pike. I am opposed to building for others; let them build their pikes, like we did." That view is equally narrow and unfair. In the first place disposition is manifested, either in an individual or in a portion of the county, I think we can rely upon the good sense and fairness of our Fiscal Court to act with discretion in the matter.

Suppose for instance that when the bonds are issued the court would expend the money in each district in proportion to the tax paid, that would not be very unfair; but suppose the court would expend the money in proportion to the mileage, or in proportion to the population, or in proportion to the importance of the roads. Rain, Sleet, Snow, Zero

The rain that commenced falling Friday night turned to sleet about dark Saturday, and as soon as everything was well coated with ice, it began snowing and Sunday morning the ground was covered by about eight inches of the beautiful which drifted in some places, but not enough to stop travel entirely. The mail was carried in a buggy Sunday, and very few automobiles made their appearance Sunday, and those that did found it difficult sledding. John White made one trip to Erlanger and back and was glad when he got home. The mercury was two below zero Monday morning.

Rev. Riley was snow bound last Sunday and did not fill his appointment out of town.

It has taken Ollie James to explain to our German citizens that President Wilson didn't mean it that way. The Germans, however, would be quite as much justified in believing the President himself.—Augusta Chronicle.

An opponent of preparedness says we could not find officers enough for an army of 500,000 men. But we think he is wrong. What's the matter with giving commissions to the Majors for Jawjaw and the Colonels of Kentucky?—New Orleans States.

Kentucky has a foolish law—an enactment which prohibits the Legislature from acting on more than one constitutional amendment at a session. When the Senate of that State last week voted for the workingmen's compensation amendment the possibility of taking up the question of woman suffrage was put off for two years by the automatic operation of the statutory provision referred to. A great deal is heard of Kentucky chivalry, but in this instance the Senators evidently forgot the old rule of "ladies first."—Evening Wisconsin.

Kentucky has decided to present as her contributions to the Hall of Hideous Statuary at Washington "heroic bronze or marble statutes of John C. Breckinridge and Simon Buckner." Some members of the Kentucky Legislature and some newspapers there had the impudence to suggest Henry Clay; but as he was from Hanover county, Virginia, and did not leave this State until he was 20 years old and had studied law here in Richmond, conscience asserted itself. Virginia long ago asserted her claim to Mr. Clay by placing a marble statue of him in the Capitol Square. Barring the fact that now and then some misguided and accurate boy succeeds in knocking off one of the fingers with a rock, it is in excellent preservation and Kentucky need not fear that her great borrowed son will lack commemoration.—Richmond, Va., Journal.

Owen County Board of Education Indignant.

The temper of the Owen County Board of Education has been aroused by the effort of the Legislature to make inroads on the public school funds, as indicated by a protest, found in another column of this issue, against certain bill whose passage would either reduce the monthly salary of the public teacher, or shorten the school term.

The Board takes the position that no part of the school fund should be diverted to other channels and that the State University and State Normal Schools should be supported out of the general fund as they have been in the past. When the matter was brought up the Board was not tardy in condemning the passage of these proposed bills and in urging the Senator and Representative from this district to fight the measures to a finish.

The question envolved is not an additional appropriation for the State institutions of learning but it is the shifting of their regular annual allowance to the common school fund. These schools receive $237,000 a year from the State. The dog tax adds $50,000 annually to the school fund.

It is proposed that both of these items, the latter to be devoted to the Department of Agriculture, be taken from the money heretofore devoted to educations of boys and girls between the ages of six and twenty. This action would seriously cripple the common schools, but this is not the worst of the matter. There are good grounds for believing that these two laws are but "feelers" to test public opinion in order to prove the way for further and more serious inroads on the school fund. The time to stop attacks on this sacred fund, set apart of the education of the children, is now. It must not begin. Not a penny of the school fund should be diverted from its present use.

It is to be hoped that the public school people, patrons teachers, trustees and officials throughout the entire state will rise up in such strong indignation at this effort to deplete the public school fund as not only to prevent the present Legislature from passing the bills, but to give future legislators a true consensus of public opinion with reference to tampering with the school children's money.—Owen County Democrat.

TREAT BARB-WIRE INJURIES

Do Not Apply Axle Grease or Any Rancid Ointment to Wound—Remove All Foreign Substances.

(By DR. A. S. ALEXANDER, Wisconsin Agricultural College.)

This is the season of the year when stockmen are most frequently annoyed with barb-wire injuries to their horses. Just a few things to bear in mind at such times suggested:

After a barb-wire accident, do not apply axle grease or any rancid ointment to the wound. Wash the wound thoroughly with warm water. Then clip the hair as close as possible around it, and wash again to remove any hair or other foreign substance.

When sand or hair has lodged in the depths of a deep cut never use a wet sponge to clean it out. Use a piece of absorbent cotton or cotton batting. There will be much less risk of infection.

It will be useless to put stitches in a wound that is very deep or ragged, or that is located in a place not in perfect rest when the animal is making natural movements.

Dry dusting powder has a healing effect on barb-wire wounds and other large, moist cuts and abrasions. Such a powder may be prepared cheaply by mixing together equal parts of slaked lime, sulphur and charcoal.

Prevent lockjaw dangers in nail wounds of the hoof by opening them up freely, which provides drainage for serum and pus. Saturate with a solution of corrosive sublimate and water in the proportion of 1 to 500. Cover with dusting powder, absorbent cotton and a bandage. This treatment should be repeated daily until the wound is healed.

MUCH HORSE POWER IS LOST

Full Use of Animals Would Materially Reduce Cost of Crop Production —More Work Is Urged.

(By W. J. SPILLMAN.)

Carefully conducted investigations by the agricultural department of the University of Minnesota, as well as those conducted by the office of farm management of the United States department of agriculture, show that under ordinary conditions on American farms work horses are utilized only about three and a half hours a day on the average. Horse power is thus utilized to less than half its capacity. Per unit of work done this power costs more than twice what it should cost. The full utilization of the power actually available would thus reduce materially the cost of producing crops. The cost of keeping a work horse is on the average about $125 a year. The average utilization of the horse is about 1,250 hours a year, at an hourly cost of ten cents per hour. If we double the number of hours' work the horse does—and this can be done without injury to the animal—we reduce the hourly cost to five cents.

FEEDER PLACED ON RUNNERS

Large Storage Bin Arranged With Feeding Floor and Smaller Hopper —Like Bin Inside.

Live stock on full feed is being more and more left to its inclination as to when it is to get its feed and the amount. The balancing of the rations is being also put in the work of the steer in making the most economical beef from the feeds available.

Automatic Stock Feeder.

The self-feeder shown here, which system may be built for either hogs or cattle, was patented recently by a Topeka (Kan.) man. A large storage bin, mounted on runners, is arranged with a feeding floor and a smaller hopperlike bin inside, a spout feeding the smaller bin from the larger.

ENEMY OF THE GRASSHOPPER

Nothing to Be Gained by Encouraging Blister Beetles—Destroy All Grasshopper Eggs in the Fall.

Among the natural enemies of the grasshoppers are the blister beetles or old-fashioned potato bugs, the larvae of which subsist almost wholly on grasshopper eggs. The blister beetles become very abundant in grasshopper years when food is plentiful. However, little or nothing is gained by substituting a plague of blister beetles for a plague of grasshoppers and the wiser course is to destroy as many grasshopper eggs as possible in the fall, thereby cutting off the development of both sorts of pests.

Avoid Dirty Pond Water.

Cattle should not be allowed to drink from old ponds which happen to contain water. You cannot get good milk or butter from dirty pond water.

Time for Pruning.

Do not prune your trees until the sap has gone out of them, and then use very sparingly.

LIVE STOCK

FEEDING THE WINTER LAMBS

Results Given Herewith of Interesting Tests Made at the Ohio Experiment Station.

In tests at the Ohio station two lots of 12 Delaine ewes each, with their October or November lambs from a Southdown ram, as nearly alike as possible with regard to age, weight, conformation and breeding, were fed for 62 days, beginning December 1, as follows: Lot 1, corn and oil meal 4:1, alfalfa and silage; lot 2, corn, oats, bran and oil meal 5:2:2:1, alfalfa and silage. The nutritive ratio of the two rations was approximately the same. The hay and silage were fed ad libitum and approximately the same amount of grain was fed, it being all that they would consume. The lambs were fed alike, receiving corn and alfalfa. The ewes of lot 1 made an average daily gain per head of 0.095 pounds; those of lot 2, 0.129 pounds; the lambs of lot 1, 0.441 pounds, and lot 2, 0.411 pounds. The cost of feed per pound of gain made by the lambs was 7.1 and 7.5 cents respectively. No appreciable differences in degree of finish from the two rations were noted. Both lots produced prime hothouse lambs.

Two lots of 11 ewes each, with their lambs, were fed for 95 days, beginning December 24, the same ration as in the above experiment, except that during the last five weeks clover hay was substituted for the alfalfa. As these lambs were not intended for hothouse lambs they were not forced so rapidly as those in the first experiment. The average daily gain per head of the ewes of lot 1 was 0.013, of lot 2, 0.031 pounds; for the lambs of lot 1, 0.377 pounds of lot 2, 0.333 pounds. The cost of feed per pound of gain made by the lambs was for lot 1, 8.7 cents, and for lot 2, 10.1 cents.

WINTER CARE OF THE SHEEP

Fleece of Good Quality Cannot Be Secured From Half-Starved Animal —Give Succulent Food.

If the sheep are neglected and allowed to run down in flesh when the winter sets in the fleece will be injured in both weight and quality.

A fleece of good quality cannot be grown on a poor half-starved sheep. If the ewes are allowed to get poor during the winter the chances are that the lambs will be weak and will perish for lack of nourishment and from cold, while the lambs from a well-cared for ewe will be much abler to stand the cold if they should happeu to be dropped when the weather is cold.

The dams will have more milk for their young, too, if they are well cared for.

Sheep need some succulent food during the winter. They should have some rough feed such as corn stover or clover hay, and, above all, they should have a ration rich in both protein and mineral matter.

SUCCESS IN PRODUCING PORK

Pasture Grasses and Forage Crops Make Healthy, Vigorous Hogs— Some Grain Is Necessary.

Many now realize the fact that the growing of pasture grasses and forage crops that make healthy, vigorous hogs of good quality is the basic factor in successful pork production. They are raising hogs at a big profit.

Of course those who are successful realize the fact that a certain amount of grain feed is needed to grow hogs with a greater profit, but they use this grain only as a supplement to the feeds harvested by the hogs in the pastures and fields.

Cost of Mutton.

A pound of mutton can be produced at less cost than any other kind of meat.

WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS

By LOUISE OLIVER.

"Dear Connie:

"Can you come to dinner Friday? I have an extra girl, and as usual I need a man, Connie, dear, don't think I'm asking you for the tenth time this season just because I am so fond of you; such of course wo all are. But it is because you are such a darling to fill in. What would we do without you?

"Faithfully yours,

"Belle."

"P. S. "Don't tell the story about the flamingo. I simply can't laugh at it again. I can say it backward in my sleep. Hunt up a new story."

"Well, I like that," laughed Connie Collins good naturedly as he laid aside the note and resumed his grapefruit. "One thing about Belle—she's candid." He sighed. "So I'm to supply again! It seems to me I've developed into a regular married woman's relief corps."

He finished his coffee and went to the office where he called up his prospective hostess for Friday.

"Hello, Belle! I got your note. Count on me. Yes, sure. No, I'll not tell the flamingo story another—what's that? Oh, she's pretty, is she? That's encouraging. Say, Belle, have some of that crab meat again, will you? All right—good for you! I'll be there sure."

When Friday night came and Connie was presented to the young person he was to take in to dinner, his first impulse was to hunt up his hostess and weep tears of joy and thankfulness upon her shoulder. Miss Maywell—such was her name—was a vision of sweet delight.

At dinner his hostess kept nodding and smiling at him as much as to say, "It's your reward, Connie, for a long period of martyrdom."

Then gradually—so imperceptibly that no one noticed it for a while—the air, heavy with the scent of American Beauty roses, became pungent, a blue haze began to fill the room and finally an eddy of smoke trailed across the low circle of light thrown by the candles.

"Fire!" a woman breathed convulsively and the guests sprang to their feet. Belle's husband, Max Wells, threw open the door into the hall. There was a solid wall of white smoke.

Dorothy Maywell laid a hand on Connie's arm. "Do you think it's upstairs?" she whispered. "I—I've got to go up and get some things if it is."

"You mustn't think of that," he insisted kindly. "Lives first, you know." He laid his hand reassuringly over the one resting nervously on his arm.

"But I've got to. Doesn't anyono know where it is?"

Then, before he realized what she was doing, she dashed a glass of water over a napkin, caught it up to her face and was out of the door, through the wall of smoke and tearing up the stairs.

Connie was at her heels, but he could not stop her. There had been no time for him to protect himself, and the smoke in his eyes and lungs strangled him, but he kept on.

Upstairs the smoke was less dense. Dorothy ran along the hall and into a room at the right.

"You can't come in," she called. But Connie, with eyes alert for flames, paid no attention.

"Hurry!" he urged. "Get what you want. But for heaven's sake hurry!"

She flew to a bureau, opened a small top drawer, got something that looked like a card, slid it into the front of her gown and faced him. "I—I'm ready!" she choked.

Connie's eyes were smarting so he could scarcely see. But they groped their way along the hall, keeping as close to the floor as possible. They almost fell down the stairs. In another instant they were outside on the porch just as the firemen arrived.

The men rushed into the smoke-filled house, upstairs, down cellar, garretward—yet there were no flames, only a dense, acrid smoke.

"No fire in the house at all," yelled someone. "It's all coming out of the registers. Something wrong with the furnace."

So to the cellar they went and found a piece of damp carpet smoldering in a disused furnace.

Open windows soon cleared the house sufficiently for the guests to return to their coffee.

As Connie placed Dorothy's chair for her, he noticed a white square on the floor. He picked it up and saw—his own photograph, with something written on the back! In an instant it was in his pocket. In some way he knew it was what Dorothy had been so frantic to rescue. It was very puzzling! Instinct told him, too, that she must never know he had discovered it.

This was what was written on the photograph, and what Connie felt he was entitled to read before he put a match to it at bedtime:

"I love his eyes. I love the way the hair waves over his left temple. I love the cleft in his chin, and his firm, strong mouth. I wonder if I shall ever know him."

Connie went to bed too happy to sleep. "After all," he reflected, "there's some advantage in being a supply. But I'm afraid Belle will have to hunt up another handy man. I'm gone!"

WINTER SCENE IN BURLINGTON.
Washington Street Looking East From Court House.

THE STATE PRESS.

Harlan, Feb. 12.— A good road bond issue of $250,000 carried by a majority of more than eight to one in Harlan county today.

Bad luck seems to have overtaken the family of A. E. Ballard, a prominent farmer of near Fairfield. Mr. Ballard is confined to his home by rheumatism, Mrs. Ballard suffered the misfortune of falling down the steps and breaking an arm, and Margaret, the little daughter, also broke an arm climbing up to a hen's nest in the chicken house.—Bardstown Standard.

Apple growers of the county of Henderson have signed up 5,000 barrels of apples to the American Fruit Exchange of Chicago. As soon as 3,000 more barrels are secured the exchange will handle the sales for the county association at 30 cents per barrel. The exchange has closed a contract that it will dispose of 8,000 barrels before March 1 at top market prices.—Maysville Bulletin.

J. E. Clark, of the country, killed a hog a few days ago of very extraordinary size. Mr Clark is a prominent farmer and the veracity of the statement is not questioned, although the story sounds like a fable. The hog, which was a Duroc, weighed 737½ pounds, made 124 pounds of sausage and 31 gallons of lard. The value of the sausage and lard was estimated at $70.—Webster Journal-Press.

Frank French, of near Rineyville purchased last week sixty head of stock hogs to be delivered on April 15 at $8.50. This is the highest price paid in the county for some time. Frank French, however, is a safe business man, and when he buys ahead of time that market value, as he has done in this case, it is a good sign that hogs are going up. Frank knows a good deal more about hogs than the groundhog knows about the weather.—Elizabethtown News.

One of the meanest acts that has been committed in this county for some time was the poisoning of two horses belonging to Jess Hinkle, of Kevil, last Saturday night. Mr. Hinkle says he went to his stable Sunday morning and found one of his horses dead and another very sick. A doctor was sent for, and arriving said the horses had eaten Paris green, which had been mixed with salt and put in the feed trough. So far there is no clew to who did the act. The loss falls very heavy upon Mr. Hinkle.—La Center Advance.

Steve Flowers, of Paintsville, was in the city and had with him several old and interesting pieces of money. The one most worthy of note was a silver piece about the size of a dime and bearing the date of 1730. On the side where the date is found is also a figure representing the head and shoulders of a human being, and around the margin of the piece appears the words, Carolus III. Dei Gratia Cost. Carolus. On the other side appears what resembles a coat of arms in the center of the piece, and surrounding it are the words and letters, Mispan, Et. D. R. M. F. M. This particular piece of money has been in the Flowers family for at least three generations.—Hancock Clarion.

Mr. H. M. Potts, assistant cashier of the Deposit Bank, says the State is suffering from an epidemic of swindlers and cold check artists. Warnings have been sent out by the Bankers' Association, and printed cards bearing the words, "We cash no stranger's check," have been distributed by the banks for use among their customers. A local hotel man recently cashed a supposedly "certified" check for a stranger, and upon investigation found that there was no such bank in existence as that upon which the check was drawn. The check bore every evidence of being genuine, the amount being stamped in with a check protector, and the check being drawn in proper form. The swindlers evidently have a printing and lithographing plant at their disposal.—Carlisle Mercury.

When the law providing for a State Saloon License Commission and its auxilliaries was cast upon the scrap heap last week there was closed an effort to create by law the greatest political machine building plant ever conceived in Kentucky. The Recorder is slow to believe that Gov. Stanley was pushing the proposed law until he discovered it was doomed. Such an act on his part would have been inconsistent with his declarations not to interfere with legislation, made at the beginning of his term and since.

KEEP PUREBRED FOWLS

No Branch of Farming That Pays Better Than Poultry.

Progress Made by Farmers in Greater Part of Country Is Encouraging —Attention to Details Essential to Success.

The progress made by the farmers raising poultry in the greater part of the United States in the past few years is not only remarkable, but is very encouraging to those who are trying to establish this very important branch of farming on a broader and more profitable basis than it has heretofore occupied. But still there is plenty of room for further progress and advancement. Some of the occupants of farms who raise poultry being rather slow in learning the difference between haphazard methods and inferior stock, and careful, methodical work with purebred fowls, you can easily see from the returns of their efforts that the state experiment stations are doing much to overcome this sort of poultry work and to show these farmers who have neglected poultry altogether as not paying that there is indeed no branch of farming that pays better, when equal attention is given to modern methods and the little details which are now considered as absolutely essential to success with poultry.

Until very recently the poultry on most farms has been a mixture of all sorts and breeds all running together, and you might travel for miles and visit farms and not be able to see one purebred fowl of standard variety. But that time has passed and many farmers are keeping nothing but purebred fowls, though there is still far too much of the mongrel variety which is of very little value being raised, though this is decreasing year by year as the farmers are becoming educated better along this line.

For a long time it has been the rule that any place on the farm was good enough for the hens and they have often had to live and even raise their young under the very poorest conditions, often being obliged to live in the hogpen and wade around among their filth. What can be expected of poultry raised in any such manner? Surely not very much. No farmer would expect any return of profit from any of the rest of his live stock on the farm unless he fed and cared for it well. The same rule holds good with poultry. It is a fact that the hens will give a better and clearer profit without feed, except what they pick up, and without the proper attention (all but gathering up the eggs) than any other living animal on the farm. How much more could be expected of them, then, if the right kind of attention be given them. The progressive farmer ought to make all he can out of every branch on the farm. Why pay all of his attention to one line and entirely neglect another line? If he can be convinced that it pays better to put in a stock of purebred poultry instead of continuing to breed scrubs, he certainly ought to make the change, and it is up to us who believe in the best paying the most profit, to show this sort of farmer the better side of standard bred poultry.

HOW TO REMOVE RUSTY NUTS

Soaking With Kerosene is Often Sufficient, but Easier Method is to Use Hot "S" Wrench.

(By E. W. HAMILTON, Idaho Experiment Station.)

Soaking the nuts for hours with kerosene is often sufficient for loosening them.

A much quicker method, and one that is highly satisfactory, is to heat the nut with an S wrench. Heat the proper end to a bright red, then place same on the nut, removing wrench after a few minutes. The nut can now be readily removed with another wrench. The nut is expanded by the heat, but not the bolt, thus loosening the nut.

Do not try to turn the nut off with the hot wrench, as it is easily strained when hot.

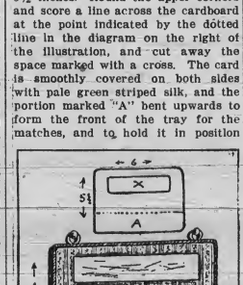
Successful Beef Feeding.

The successful feeding of beef cattle begins with the growing of the feed and not, as many seem to think, when the animal goes into the feed lot.

Sugar Beets for Cattle.

Sugar beets make a very good feed for the cattle, but grain, clover and alfalfa should go along with them.

DANCING FROCK



Simplicity marks this charming frock for dancing and evening wear of black net and velvet bands. The skirt reaches just above the ankles, where it is edged with a strand of beads. Broad velvet bands are used effectively on skirt and waist. The waist itself is extremely decollette. The hair is frizzled and raised high above the head like a Kaffir chief's headdress.

MATCHES ALWAYS IN PLACE

Holder Is One of the Most Convenient Things for the Bedroom or the "Den."

Where many members of a family happen to be smokers, boxes of matches have the most wonderful knack of disappearing never to return, and under those circumstances a holder for matches that cannot be removed is a desirable possession. It is also nice to keep matches in a bedroom in such a position that they can be easily found in the dark, and the holder we illustrate can be hung upon the wall within easy reach of the bed.

To make it: Cut out a piece of stiff cardboard measuring 6 inches by 5½ inches. Round the upper corners and score a line across the cardboard at the point indicated by the dotted line in the diagram on the right of the illustration, and cut away the space marked with a cross. The card is smoothly covered on both sides with pale green striped silk, and the portion marked "A" bent upwards to form the front of the tray for the matches, and to hold it in position two small triangular pieces of card covered with silk are sewn in on either side.

A piece of cardboard is next cut out rather larger than the space that has been cut away in the upper part of the holder, and a piece of sandpaper is glued to the card, and it is then glued on to the back of the holder so that the surface of the sandpaper fills up the open space. It is edged throughout with fine silk cord.

Two small rings are sewn on to the upper edges by which it is suspended. This holder is intended for containing wax matches or small wooden matches that can be struck on the sandpaper.

BOWS AND BUTTONS ARE HERE

Made Use of as Trimming in Some of the Most Effective and Charming Ways.

One of the revived ways of trimming that has met with much discussion is the lavish use of buttons and prim bows. They are placed to give line or accentuate some movement of drapery. Small black velvet and taffeta bows are put on the bodices in a way that is really more suggestive of the pictures in the gallery at Versailles than of the daguerotype, from which so many of our styles are taken.

The best French houses use them in color as well as in black, preferably in the shade of light blue so beloved by Boucher. The bodice, which is high at the back and has its decollettage in front outlined by a soft kerchief of lace, is an admirable setting for the colored bow, but, perhaps, the rehabilitation of the one suggested the use of the other. Even primmer bows are placed on skirts in a straight row and on the bodice from waist line to bust or ne

POSSUM HUNTERS ON TRIAL.

Harford, Feb. 11.—The trials of fifty-nine Possum Hunters were called in the Ohio Circuit Court here today. These are the last of the cases which have resulted in the conviction and sentence of about half a dozen members of the band which for many months terrorized Ohio county.

The operations of the gang began about two years ago, and even now, despite the convictions obtained, there is much uncasiness in some sections of Ohio county, as it is feared the friends of those men who have been sent to the penitentiary may try to secure revenge for the convictions.

Judge R. W. Slack, of Owensboro, is presiding for the first time in these cases, while Claude Smith, who was elected with Judge Slack last November, is conducting the prosecution, assisted by County Attorney Crowe.

The men will be tried in "bunches" of from half a dozen to twenty, and the trials will occupy some days. Considerable trouble is expected in securing a jury in the various cases.

It is hoped to "clean up" all the cases at the present term of court.

One of the most interesting phases in connection with the trials is that the prosecution has been able to obtain a full copy of the oath taken by the Possum Hunters. It is as follows:

"Section A—I, in the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses, do sincerely and solemnly swear that I will never reveal any of the signs or passwords of this order to any persons in the world, unless they are justly entitled to same. And not unto such persons of this order unless I believe they will be benefitted by such information.

"Section B—I furthermore promise and swear that I will never reveal any of the transactions of this order in the lodge room or out of it to any persons in the world unless they are justly entitled to the same, and not unto any such persons of this order unless I believe they will be benefitted by such information.

"Section C—I furthermore promise and swear that I will obey all orders coming from this lodge or this order either day or night, unless prevented by sickness of myself or family.

"Section D—I furthermore promise and swear that I will not use this order on any personal enemy or for revenge.

"Section E—To all of this I most solemnly promise and swear, binding myself under no less penalty than that put on me by this lodge or this order, so help me God and keep me steadfast in due performance of this high oath."

No More Paris Green.

In the balmy springtime, when the sap flows and the cuckoo carols to its mate, it has long been the custom of the "base ball bug" to claim the day as his. Things have changed, however. The potato and the base ball bug have engaged in fearful conflict, and indications are that friend potato bug has put one over with a vengeance, says the New York Commercial.

Paris green, deadliest enemy of the potatb bug, is no longer obtainable in this country. The extinction was effected gradually. Today there is less than five hundred pounds of Paris green in the country and the holders of the goods demand all the way from 21 to 50 cents per pound, according to the quantity desired. Urgent inquiries for the product are heard from Louisville and elsewhere.

Prior to this year all the Paris green sold in this country was produced early in January and February. No manufacturing operations of any kind have been undertaken, since, as manufacturers have been unable to secure sufficient quantities of blue vitrol, or sulphate of copper, as well as white arsenic, for its manufacture. Where a manufacturer was accustomed to buy upward of 200,000 pounds of blue vitriol a few months ago as low as three and four cents a pound, he is today paying 16 and 17 cents a pound, and is unable to secure as much as 10,000 or 15,000 pounds with any degree of certainty.

Insecticide manufacturers, being unable to prognosticate how high the price for blue vitriol will go, have therefore decided to discontinue the manufacture of Paris green this season. This will not only make for additional worries on the part of planters all over the country, but will be felt in the paint trade, where it is occasionally sold to the ultra-fashionables, who have a particular leaning for its light emerald green color when applied to blinds, window screens and other parts of the domicile.

Borer Attacks May Kill Trees.

Fruit tree borers are the bane of many fruit growers' existence, according to R. B. Cruickshank, of of the College of Agriculture, Ohio State University. Great difficulty is met in preventing their entrance and many apple and peach trees are killed each year by these insects. After the bores have made their way into the trees, the only remedy is to dig them out. This may be done in various ways. One of the best ways is to use a flexible wire which is run into the burrows until the borer is reached. The best time to dig out the borers is during the fall and winter. Orchardists can utilize the warm sunny days in doing this work and it can be done in the spare hours. It is important that borers be destroyed as it takes but a short time for a tree to become greatly weakened or even killed by injuries received from these insects.

A Remarkable Man.

Whitesburg, Ky.—There is little question that Uncle Bob Bates, who a few days ago rounded out his ninety-sixth birthday at his home on the headwaters of Rockhouse Creek, ten miles from here, in Letcher county, is the most remarkable man in this country. Uncle Bob a few weeks ago, became the father of a bright baby, making the 21th that had come to bless him.

Talking of his children Uncle Bob said, pointing toward a tot in the corner: "There's our baby boy snugly tucked away under the cover—he's a corker—the most wonderful child in the world, according to my version. We think of calling him Woodrow, in honor of President Wilson. Here (pointing to a little girl close by his side) is Mildred Cleopatra. Cleo we call her for short, our two and a half year old girl, and there's little Minerva, our four-year old. Both are good little girls—we hardly know they are on the place." Being interrogated by the correspondent regarding his family in general Uncle Bob said: "You see, I have been married three times and as a result I have three families—by my first wife nine children, by my second wife eight children and by my third and present wife seven children, making 24 in all. Am proud of all of them as any one could be, and I have none to spare. Wife thinks there's nothing like the three last ones—especially our baby boy, thus we've been quite a while in giving him a name—then it looks like I have about utilized everything in names—in naming the great number of children. By the way I don't believe a word of "race suicide."

Not long ago Uncle Bob set out on horse-back from his home on Rockhouse creek to Mt. Sterling, Ky., a distance of about 200 miles. Although much of the trip was over rough mountain roads he made the distance in a little less than two days.

Hearing of a bunch of cattle, he a few days later set out on horse back into Washington county Virginia. "I could see no money in the cattle, so I returned without them," said Uncle Bob. He often sets out afoot and covers many miles over mountains to gather up young stock. At the recent November election he set out to his voting place at Colson afoot, seven miles, and returned before noon, making the 14 miles "with the least fatigue," as he expressed himself.

While Uncle Bob has never been a politician—what some men call politicians—yet he, upon the earnest solicitation of his legion of friends became a candidate for the Legislature 63 years ago, to be exact. He was overwhelmingly elected, but, not satisfied with the whims of politicians, he decided he would never again become a candidate. Thirty-three years ago he again responded to the call of friends and became a candidate for a place in the Kentucky House of Representatives, was elected, a Democrat from a Republican district, and it was during this session of the Legislature that he had passed a number of important measures. One was the establishment of a new county—the county of Knott, out of parts of Letcher and Floyd counties. The important measures won him considerable fame. Several years later he became a candidate for the office of Sheriff of Letcher county. He ran away ahead of his opponent and made a splendid official. Afterward he was urged to become a candidate again. "I am forever out of politics," he said.

During the Civil War Uncle Bob joined the forces of the South, became a Colonel and saw service in many a memorable conflict for his country's cause. He is to-day well preserved—as well as the average man of 60. His eye sight is good, his hearing all that anyone could wish—in fact every indication points to the fact that Uncle Bob will live and enjoy the fruits of his labors many years longer. He said he had never used tobacco nor coffee, had never smoked a cigarette, had taken life easy, had never worried in the least, which are safe attributes of his long and successful life. Closing, he said: "I have always drank a moderate quantity of whisky—pure whisky—moonshine, unadulterated, if I can get it. No one can deny that it is not healthful."

Uncle Bob stated that his descendants numbered nearly 200 grandchildren, about 150 great-grandchildren and from 50 to 75 great-grand-children scattered over Letcher and Knott counties. He is a brother of Captain Martin Van Euren Bates, the famous Kentucky giant, now residing at Seville, Ohio, whom Uncle Bob is preparing to visit this year. Uncle Bob has been a life-long Democrat, having rarely "scratched" his ticket.

Uncertainty as to the future price of printing paper is causing uneasiness in the printing business. Scarcity of both dyestuffs and other material used in the manufacture of paper has driven the price of paper upward from 25 to 50 per cent., according to dealers, and printing ink also is much higher. Some paper mills have stopped making certain kinds of paper altogether because they are unable to secure the proper coloring material. This is especially true with regard to blue yellow and red paper. Paper mills are refusing to quote prices for the future and have withdrawn all price lists. In addition to the lack of dyes the scarcity of rags is making itself felt. As in so many other instances the European war is being blamed for the situation. Immense stores of rags in warehouses two years ago have been used, and no supplementing supplies have reached this country for many months.

For the Merchants Eye.

At a meeting of the American Advertisers Association, Arthur Brisbane said: "Not the country publisher but the business man is the chief sufferer from the fact that our merchants and manufacturers have not utilized the country newspaper's advertising columns as they should and can be utilized. Remember these facts: He who reads the little crossroads newspaper of the fairsized town is a man who buys everything. He lives in a house and on land that he owns. He is interested in every thing that the business men are doing. Through good advertising you can sell him everything, from the paint on the roof of his house to the cement on the floor of his cellar. Everything between the roof and the cellar, everything in the barn, and every tool in the field he buys and you may sell him. He is not like the dweller in the big flat, who gets his water thru a pipe, his light through a wire, his heat from the basement, and whose shopping consists in getting a ready made dinner in a tin or paper box. The man who reads the country newspaper buys everything. He buys pumps, lamps, stoves, automobiles, clothing, dresses, books and paints, farming implements, furniture, carpets, oils. In this room are 250 individuals. Some of them represent a dozen manufacturing enterprises and more. There is not a man here who has anything to sell to the readers of a country newspaper. And every man here could more profitable advertise in a country newspaper in proportion to its circulation than in anyother publication on earth. I emphasize the value of the country newspaper as an advertising medium, for it has that value.

NOTICE.

We, the undersigned, owners and tenants in charge of land bordering on the Ohio river at Rabbit Hash, Boone county, Kentucky, hereby give notice that all persons are forbidden to land or tie up any wreckage of any kind on or in front of our land without our consent.

We further give notice that all persons are forbidden to take anything out of any drift pile that may lodge on or in front of our land without our consent.

The courts have decided that the laws of Kentucky give us ownership to such drift piles, and as we have to clean them off of our land year after year, we desire the benefit of anything of value they may contain, and any person disturbing them will be prosecuted:

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make hair soft and glossy. It will not soil scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and a rub off.

Miss Martha Rouse returned home Wednesday from Asheville, North Carolina, where she spent the past several months. Her health has greatly improved.

George W. Ransler spent last Thursday in Louisville attending the U. S. Court as a witness in the case between the L. and N. Railroad and the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crowe have decided to make their home at Williamsport, Ind., where his relatives reside. They were recently married, the bride being Miss Edna Watson of Walton.

Walton Masonic Lodge will have work in the Fellow Craft degree at the Masonic Hall next Friday night, Feb. 18th, to which all members in good standing are most cordially invited.

Dr. D. M. Bagby who was very ill the past two weeks is improving with every indication of early recovery. The services of a trained nurse the past two weeks has added much to his recovery.

Raymond M. Renaker placed his membership with the Walton Baptist church at the last regular meeting. He was formerly a member of the Baptist church at Beebe, Arkansas, where he was the cashier of a large deposit bank.

The Town Council at the regular meeting last Friday night appointed J. M. Arnold to superintend the cleaning of the mud that accumulates on the streets and makes the thoroughfares so very unsightly and disagreeable to travel.

Dr. and Mrs. J. G. Slater and daughter, Miss Nell, of Ludlow spent the first of the week here, guests at John C. Miller's. Dr. Slater has about recovered from the effects of an operation for appendicitis, and is looking remarkably well.

Married—Thomas Slayback and Miss Sadie Mellen of Beaver Lick, were united in marriage in Cincinnati last Wednesday, and are now enjoying their honeymoon with home folks at Beaver Lick. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Slayback and the bride is the daughter of William Mellen and wife.

Mrs. Alice Stephens who has been quite ill for some time was taken to Newport last Saturday, where she will make her home with her sister Mrs. B. A. Northcutt, believing the change will be helpful in several ways. Her sister, Mrs. H. R. Rogers, of near Richwood, accompanied her on the journey to arrange for her comfort.

Benj. B. Allphin and Bruce Dudgeon, comprising the live stock firm of Allphin & Dudgeon, have embarked in the tobacco business and had a fancy lot on the loose leaf market at Glencoe last week. They bought the crop of Charles Judd, raised on the Wm. B. Norman farm near town, for 13 cents all around. The crop was very fine and contained about 2,000 pounds.

Robt. W. Jones, our Hudson automobile agent, has made two sales of The New Hudson Super-Six for March delivery, the purchasers being O. K. Whitson, cashier of the Verona Bank, and J. C. Hume, the tobacco and stock dealer, both of Verona. Mr. Jones will not get his Super-Six Demonstrator until the last of February, and these orders were given without ever seeing the car.

At the sale of personal property of the estate of Jno. F. Stephens, deceased, near Independence, last Thursday, the bank stock sold as follows: Ten shares Independence Bank at $143.60 per share; eighteen shares of First National Bank of Covington at $150 and $151 per share; four shares of Peoples Savings Bank and Trust Co. of Covington at $115 per share, and twenty shares of the Walton Bank and Trust Co. of Walton, sold 15 shares to Prof. J. C. Gordon at $160 and five shares to Mrs. Lucy Hill at $161.

Judge J. G. Tomlin spent the first of the week in Louisville attending the United States Court as a witness in the controversy between the L. and N. Railroad Company and The Western Union Telegraph Co., over the question of valuation of the use of the land which the poles of the telegraph company occupy on the right of way of the railroad company. The first suit to make the telegraph company move the poles from the right of way of the railroad company was won by the telegraph company, and now the question at issue is the value of the use of the land to the telegraph company occupied by its poles.

Edwin M. Johnson has in his possession a silver dollar of 1775 which was given him by his father the late Rev. Lafayette Johnson. It is remarkably well preserved and the inscriptions stand out in bold relief. One side contains the American eagle with a wreath around it. On the reverse side is the medallion of liberty with the words "United States of America" in a circle, with 15 stars on each side of Liberty. On the edge of the coin is stamped in denomination, "One Hundred Cents. One Dollar." The old coin was given Rev. Johnson by his father and was found with other coins buried in the earth when there were but few banks in existence, and money was then buried in the earth for safe keeping.

Dairy Institute at Walton.

The special Dairy Institute to be held here Saturday, March 4th, under the auspices of State Agricultural Department, promises to be very valuable to those who have any interest in the cow, milk, butter or the beneficial results from turning the rundown farms into dairies.

It was with considerable difficulty that this institute was arranged as it involved a lot of trouble and work to get it ready, but a few public spirited citizens, who have no other interest, except the welfare and prosperity of their fellow citizens and the upbuilding of the country, took the matter in hand and secured the services of the best instructors in the State to conduct the institute and give the people the benefit of their information so that we will understand and comprehend this very important industry that means so much to this locality with its close proximity to the great metropolis, Cincinnati.

We all depend on eachother to a certain degree and consequently we should be interested in the prosperity of all.

Dairy farming means soil-building and soil-building means a rich agricultural section—the bone and sinew of the prosperity of Kentucky.

Where dairying has been followed on practical lines the country has prospered and grown rich while the fertility of the land has constantly improved. We need this rejuvenation in this section.

Those who have been following practical dairying lack much practical information, and those who have never investigated the matter should do so. The coming institute will be one of the rare opportunities and those interested in this important matter may not have the benfit of such information in a long time. Come if you can. It is your institute, gotten up to help you because we want you to prosper, and let us have conditions that will cause all to feel and say, "Kentucky is good enough for me."

FLORENCE.

The Ladies of the Baptist Missionary Society, met at Mrs. C. W. Myers', Saturday afternoon. A very interesting program arranged by Mrs. McClung on Missionary work in South America, was enjoyed. A lovely luncheon was served.

The Fidellas Class B. S. School has arranged a program for the Martha Washington Supper, Feb. 22. A Darkey Town Convention will be held. Old melodies sung and a banquet, where Martha and George Washington will preside, with their friends waited on by colored servants. Entertainment with supper 25 cents.

PT. PLEASANT.

Harvey Souther is laid up with lagrippe and tonsilitis.

Mrs. R. L. Tanner entertained several friends at dinner last Friday.

Bauer Bros., of Florence, purchased two loads of nice millet of Benj. Northcutt.

James Brown called Dr. Clore of Erlanger, to see a sick cow one day last week.

J. C. Gordon of Walton, visited his sister Mrs. Sallie Souther last Saturday and Sunday.

Louis Houston and wife, who lived with her father in Crescent Springs, last year, are living with his father R. R. Houston on the Joe Graves farm.

John Stephenson, of Limaburg, and Albert Conner, of Burlington, were callers in this neighborhood last Friday. Mr. Conner was looking after his tobacco interests.

Chas. Darby and family have moved from the toll gate on the Anderson's Ferry pike to a portion of the house occupied by Val Dolwick on the Adam Dolwick farm.

Val Dolwick has torn down a barn that was badly twisted by the storm last July on his father's farm and moved the material near the house in which he lives where Jonas Tanner of Hopeful, is rebuilding it on a smaller scale.

The charge that "the greatest lobby ever known to the American people" was seeking to prevent the substitution of the space for the weight payment system in the railway postal service was made in the House by Chairman Moon, of the Postoffice Committee in presenting the annual post-office appropriation bill. Mr. Moon declared the real object of the opposition was to throttle the parcel post service in the interest of the express companies and rail roads.

One Large Family. Is it True?

Did you ever try to define life? Did you ever try to conceive the true meaning, and what it takes to make up what life ought to be? Do you think it is as Josh Wise put it: "Just what happens before death?"

If we live just for our selves we wont get much out of life.

I have never felt that I wanted to live just for self alone. I think Kentucky people, especially Boone county, at present, should carry out the sentiment from abroad. Do you, dear reader, know what people of other States say about Kentucky?

We are noted for many things, but what pleases me most is that we are considered one large family.

I was driving one afternoon with a man from another State and just before sunset I stopped to talk to a friend, standing in his yard, and after introducing my client and exchanging a few words, I remarked that I would have to drive on as it was getting late. My friend exclaimed at once:

"Stay all night!" and insisted that we do so. After driving away my client said to me:

"Was that fellow in earnest about us staying all night?"

To which I answered:

"He was."

"Well, we never have anything like that with us."

He also said he always heard Kentucky people were just like one large family.

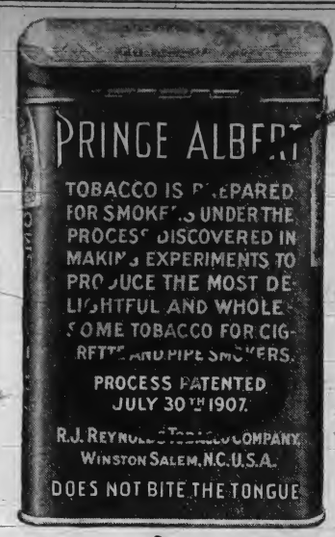
Isn't that fine? How about it, brother farmer and business man? How about that my dear old friend? You live way down at the end of that muddy lane. Do you think your friends are worrying about you? Are you going to let us do all the worrying because you and your little family are marooned three or four months out of the year? You are the man that our hearts go out to. Experience teaches best lessons, and having had experience of the many trials and disappointments of mud roads, I think I am competent to judge.

In my early childhood days I travveled over three miles of one of the worst roads in Boone county to and from school, trying to get an education. That three miles of mud road was a constant dread and was on my mind more than my studies. It took me three times as long to go as it ought to, exposing myself to the rigid weather, and I never looked like anything when I got to school.

Try it yourself. You can not get around facts. Mud roads are detrimental to almost any business. The trouble has always been that most all rural farmers did not want to pay taxes, preferring to pay for the farm and then sell and buy on a good pike. Now isn't that almost invariably the case? Never thinking that the other fellow will have to take up the fight where they left off. Now why not all pull together? Be loyal to our friends, our county and state. The fact is we are behind the times in old Boone county with our roads. We have about the only toll roads in the State. We haven't any thing to say against men owning the toll roads and I would rather pay double thau travel mud roads.

Now do not try the old dodge that some one has a lot of land or other property that they can't sell and want the county to build a road to it. I cannot believe in such talk. There is a good roads feeling abroad today, and the promoters, and those who are advocating it, are just good, loyal open hearted citizens, ready to spend their money, and are already boosting, what every one of Boone county's loyal citizens ought to be doing. The time has come that old Boone county must be heard from. The eyes of Kentucky, and I would say, the United States, are upon us. Now is the time to use that family tie. Let it encircle the county. Get the Good Roads Feeling; "that stay-all-night-with-me," feeling; that "come-over-to-my house" feeling, and let us decree from the 8th day of May, 1916, that old Boone county shall not be called the hind end of nothing, and that from now on we will give more attention to the beauty and joy of life which is now given to making and hoarding money, and that some day country life will be organized so as to be as attractive as city life; that some day there will be no persons of unearned privileges, but every new born will "Start at the scratch" and have equal opportunity with every other babe.

A man cannot succeed by himself. No great business is ever established by any one man working alone. If we are attending to big things, we must trust our associates, and they us. Let us have that fellowship of interest. It was a wise Providence that created men with differences, as He also created the variations in color of flowers, but our duty is to blend those differences into practical needs. If we conflict we are inviting failure. Just a little earnest thought. Just a little more education along these lines of thought, and then the people of Old Boone County will certainly respond as they never have before, by placing our officials in a position to make Boone county what she ought to be.



I am in favor of piking every road in Boone county, or as nearly as possible, thus equalizing as nearly as possible, all farming lands in the county.

I have been criticised on several occasions for remarking that farms located on mud roads were hard to sell. I never intended to hurt anyone's feelings, but I am right. Here is where experience comes in again, and now I am ready to help you out. My hand comes to you. So now listen. I have a good pike just in front of my house. A cement pavement almost to my door. I haven't anything to sell. I don't wish to buy. I am not looking for any office, but just "let me live by the side of the road and be a friend to man."

Mr. Sam B. Sleet and E. Allen hauled their tobacco to Hamilton, and shipped to the loose leaf market at Carrollton, last Saturday.

A great many more in this neighborhood are in favor of the bond issue since the Fiscal Court outlined its policy through the Recorder.

On Wednesday night of last week Sam B. Sleet heard his logs in a terrible turmoil, when, with lantern in hand, he hastened to the lot, where he found a shepherd dog worrying his swine. He secured a club and succeeded in knocking the dog down, but it got up and made its escape. Upon examination Mr. Sleet found several of his hogs badly mangled about the nose and head, and its feared that the dog had hydrophobia. Mr. Sleet and his neighbors are uneasy for if the dog had hydrophobia there is no telling how much stock in this neighborhood was bitten. Mr. Sleet will keep a close watch on his hogs and await developments.

He is Not a Candidate for Congress

Representative Frank C. Greene, sometimes referred to at Frankfort as the "daddy of the disturbance," let it be known Wednesday during the debate in the House on the defeated resolution indorsing nation-wide prohibition that he is not a candidate for Congress. In as much as he stated at the opening of the session that he would make the race against Representative Arthur B. Rouse for the Democratic nomination if he had to do it "on cheese and crackers and pond water," the gentleman from Carrollton appears to have changed his mind.—Sunday's Enquirer.

Want to See the Work Going Forward

Those who are managing the construction of the Rabbit Hash and Landing turnpike are anxious to see weather that will permit the resumption of the work on the road. When completed the East Bend people will soon be asking themselves how they did without the road so long, as it will bring to the front advantages never before thought of.

BUCKEYE CORNER.

Roy Stewart shipped a bunch of nice cattle to the city last Sunday night.

Wm. Scudder will move in a few days to Steel's Bottoms near Paint Lick.

The High school at Hamilton was closed last week, Prof. Knox being sick with grip.

Ben Cunningham and brother delivered 5700 pounds of tobacco at Verona, Thursday.

Mrs. Geo. Burris and Mrs. Wm. Barnes and little daughter are very sick with the grip.

Rook parties are very popular in this section these long, winter nights. Bennie Stahl entertained some of his friends with a Rook party Saturday night.

The Morning Star Council D. of A. Lodge initiated into the mysteries of their order last Thursday four candidates, Miss Martha Black, of Big Bone; Mrs. John Allen and Mrs. Minnie Karsch, of Beaver, and Robt. Harris, of Berkshire.

In the piece about the D. of A. organization the writer wishes to correct a mistake she made in the name of the Captain of the drill teams. Geo. Sparks, a State Guard, of Lexington, was elected captain of the drill team instead of Russell Sparks as was printed in the Big Bone news. He was called back to Lexington last week to report for duty.

CONSTANCE

Master Lawrence Wilson is sick.

The Sunday school will have a social March 17th.

Mrs. Henry Haberle, Sr., fell last Wednesday and sprained her arm and fractured some of the small bones in one wrist.

John Wranz is getting ready to remodel the old Weimer homestead to which he will move, having sold his farm on Dry creek to his son John.

Lee Klassener and wife and brothers, Rome and John, of Cincinnati, sons of James Klassener, were Sunday guests of their uncles, John and Henry. They came from the city in an auto.

C. J. Craven has sold his store and dwelling to A. P. Milner, who sold his farm on the Limaburg pike to Mr. Geo. Werns. We are sorry to lose Mr. Craven's family from our town but wish them success wherever they go. We are also glad that our new storekeeper is not a stranger.

PT. PLEASANT.

Geo. Heist has purchased the late Allen Southes property.

A. F. Milner was confined to his room a few days last week with a cold.

G. G. Hughes and daughter, Miss Margaret, spent the past week at Petersburg with Mrs. Earl Walton.

Atty. Samuel Adams, of Erlanger, was transacting business in the county clerk's office last Saturday afternoon.

Miss Olga Kirkpatrick came in from Indianapolis last Saturday and remained with her mother, Mrs. Annie Kirkpatrick until Wednesday.

Eli Surface and son, Joseph, of Mt. Zion neighborhood, and John S. Surface, of Florence, were among the Recorder's callers last Saturday.

Mrs. Nannie Maurer was at home last week on account of the Belleview school being closed because of the prevalence of the whooping cough in that district.

W. C. Johnson, of Beaver came up last Sunday and remained until Monday with his son Samuel and family. He reported the roads over which he traveled as being in very bad condition.

Thomas Fenton and wife and Miss Nellie Berkshire of Cincinnati, and Wm. Gross, of Louisville, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Berkshire out on the Belleview pike.

W. B. Arnold and G. S. Walrath, of Belleview, were business visitors to Burlington one day the past week on business pertaining to the estate of Mrs. Walrath, who died a few months ago.

Miss Miller, one of the teachers in the local school, who was absent last week on the account of the serious illness of a relative in Bracken county, returned last Sunday and resumed her work Monday morning.

J. B. O'Neal, of Covington, Secretary of Big Bone Springs Water Co., was transacting business in Burlington one day the past week. He is very much encouraged because of the outlook for the success of his company.

C. C. Roberts came over last Saturday afternoon from his farm in Pleasant Valley neighborhood, where he has found plenty of entertainment for the last year. Since the appearance of the meteor several weeks since Mr. Roberts has not seen any of those mysterious lights that flitted about in the range of his vision nearly every night.

Why It Was Done.

The protest that is going up in some parts of the county because of the taking over and the reconstruction of the Burlington and Florence turnpike is evidently due to the fact that the people are not familiar with the conditions that prompted that action on the part of the Fiscal Court.

The county had, by a decisive majority, voted in favor of freeing the turnpikes, but refused to make any provisions in regard to financing the scheme, thereby enabling the Fiscal Court to obey the desire of the people expressed at the polls.

Having been offered the Burlington and Florence turnpike for what the Fiscal Court considered a very reasonable price it was purchased, the purchase placing it in an attitude to receive state aid in its reconstruction, the state aid to which the county was entitled last year for work on county seat roads being something in excess of $9,500. To obtain this amount it was necessary to have that pike reconstructed, the county to pay one-half the cost of the road and one-half the cost of reconstruction, the State to pay the other half. If the fiscal court had not done this the amount of money which had been apportioned to Boone county as her share of the State Aid Fund would have reverted to other counties in the State, and as it was only a question of time when the road would have to be purchased and repaired the Fiscal Court decided it was the better policy to secure the $9,500 for its own use than to present it to other counties, thereby increasing their amount of State aid.

Had the Fiscal Court failed to secure the $9,500 from the State to expend on the Burlington and Florence pike, no doubt those who are now criticising the court for its action in this matter would have been louder in their denunciation.

In regard to the State aid that is figuring in the purchase and reconstruction of the Burlington and Florence turnpike the dog in the manger policy in a decidedly malignant form has cropped out in some localitirs in the county, but the members of the Fiscal Court are too broad minded and too good business men to cater to such a sentiment by throwing down a business proposition of the character of the purchase and reconstruction of the Burlington and Florence pike with the assistance of State aid.

Thomas Howard, of Petersburg, who was ill of typhoid fever, and had a relapse, is again on the road to recovery.

Newton Sullivan, the box ball artist, is now domiciled in a portion of the residence owned by Elmer Kirkpatrick.

An earthquake shock was felt in Eastern Kentucky cities late Monday afternoon lasting from twenty to thirty seconds.

It begins to look like quite a number of names will be dropped from the Recorder's subscription list before the next issue.

A peregrinating violinist observed Washington's birthday by dispensing music in Burlington. He made numerous calls, mostly on business houses.

Cecil Gaines and wife moved from Erlanger to Burlington, yesterday, and are at home in the residence owned by his father, Judge Sidney Gaines.

If Kentucky ever happens to elect a legislature that will do the work for which it is chose the State's condition will be improved instead of going from bad to worse.

R. W. Rouse, agent for the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Co., passed through Burlington, Tuesday morning, enroute to Rabbit Hash on official business. Mr. Rouse makes his company a good representative.

County officials of Kentucky are requested by R. C. Terrell, State Commissioner of Roads, in a circular letter to urge the Kentucky Senators to support the Shackleford bill in Congress, which, if passed, will give Kentucky approximately $750,000 Federal money to assist in State road work.

Mrs. Nannie Olds, the venerable aunt of Harry McWethy, of Petersburg, died last Friday. Mrs. Ogds' age was 72 years, 1 month and three days. She was long a most useful member of Petersburg Methodist church, in the work of which she will be missed. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Nelson last Sunday.

An examiner was in Burlington one day last week and examined the books of R. B. Huey, Secretary of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and also the books of Hubert Conner, Secretary of the County Livestock Insurance Co. In each instance the books were found in most excellent shape.

The General Assembly will accomplish very little at this session that will be of any benefit to the State. The temperance fight which was injected into the proceedings shortly after the two houses were organized has kept them so demoralized that it has been impossible for those members who desired to correct some of the faulty legislation of the past and envct laws that the good of the Commonwealth demands to succeed.

Honor Roll Boone County High School for fifth month.

There was no honor roll published for the fourth month owing to the fact that the entire school was dismissed a week and the grades were out longer.

There are no names from the Intermediate department this month owing to Miss Miller's absence.

Primary Department—
Terrill Riley,
Ruth Walton,
Charles Johnson,
Amadore Birkle.

High School Department—
Denzil Carpenter,
Galen Kelly,
Elizabeth Kelly,
Ralph White.

Renewing his subscription to the Recorder, R. O. Stephens, of Woodland, Mo., writes: "I don't see how I could get along without it as it is like getting a letter from home, and I keep in touch with all my old friends. The people in old Boone have a warm place in my heart. We have had the worst time this winter to get around I ever knew, on account of the mud and ice. The pastures were a sheet of ice and a person could skate across the country without trouble anywhere they wanted to go. It is all gone now and the weather is fine. We have some mud but that will soon dry up if this fine weather continues. We have good roads here in the summer and fall. Give my regards to all my friends.

He Will Get the News

The Recorder has secured the services of a submarine in Beaver neighborhood that will capture and sent to it all the items of news afloat in that neighborhood.

They are in Earnest

Erlanger business men have grown weary trying to coax the company to extend the Ft. Mitchell car line to Erlanger, and have appealed to the General Assembly to take a hand and pass a law requiring the extension to be made.

For Sale—Fine Jersey bull aged two years. Address B. Carpenter, Florence, Ky.

THE DAIRY

NEGLECT VALUE OF RECORDS

Cow Bought at Low Price Not Always Best Investment—Best to Keep Track of Feed and Milk.

Is the cheaper-priced dairy cow necessarily the better investment? The question is well answered in the following instance: A man wishing a cow for dairy purposes called upon a dairyman who kept milk records as well as cost accounts. The buyer confined his attention to two cows. One of these would cost him $75, the other $175. The former was in good condition, but the dairy characteristics were not as fully developed as they might have been; the latter was the direct opposite. The records of the two cows were shown the buyer, but he was not as much interested in records as he should have been. He did not consider it worth while to sit down and figure out which would be the better investment.

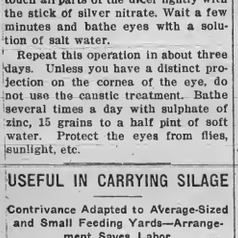
Butter sold for 35 cents per pound the year around.
The $75 cow had a record of 226 pounds of butter.
226 pounds at 35c—$79.10.
Cost of feed—$72.
$79.10—$72.00—$7.10 profit per year.
The $175 cow had a record of 415 pounds.
415 pounds at 35c—$145.25.
Cost of feed—$84.00.
$145.25—$84.00—$61.25 profit per year.

From these figures we see that it would take the $75 cow about ten years to pay for herself in butter; if she was a middle-aged cow she would never do it. On the other hand, the $175 cow would have paid for herself in butter in less than three years.

The buyer bought the $75 cow. Would he have done this if he had appreciated the value of records, and figured out the value of each cow?

TREATING ULCERS OF CORNEA

Touch All Parts of Sore With Stick of Nitrate of Silver—Bathe With Solution of Salt Water.



Ulcers of the cornea in calves may be caused by several things, such as bruises, abscesses, or beards from foxtail; or it may be the result of a severe attack of pink eye. You can tell ulcers of the cornea from pink eye by means of the discharge. Instead of pus, you will find an acid, watery fluid. If it should be ulcer of the cornea, or ulcers formed by very violent cases of the pink eye, the treatment is about the same. Take a stick of nitrate of silver, sharpen as you would a pencil, get an attendant to hold the head of the calf, keeping the eyelids back, and touch all parts of the ulcer lightly with the stick of silver nitrate. Wait a few minutes and bathe eyes with a solution of salt water.

Repeat this operation in about three days. Unless you have a distinct projection on the cornea of the eye, do not use the caustic treatment. Bathe several times a day with sulphate of zinc, 15 grains to a half pint of soft water. Protect the eyes from flies, sunlight, etc.

USEFUL IN CARRYING SILAGE

feeding yards and is a highly useful and labor-saving arrangement. The boom or arm to which the carrier is attached must be strongly attached and guyed. The feeding racks are arranged in a semicircle that brings them just under the tip of the arm.

GIVE COWS SALT REGULARLY

Best Plan Is to Have Box Handy Where Animals Can Help Themselves Whenever They Wish.

Don't forget to salt the cows. In experiments it has been found that a cow should have three-fourths of an ounce of salt a day live weight, with an additional six-tenths of an ounce for each twenty pounds of milk produced, to keep her in the best of condition.

Animals deprived of salt become emaciated and of low vitality, finally suffering a complete breakdown. Salt should be provided regularly.

The best plan is to have a box containing salt where the animals can get to it whenever they so desire. Either fine salt or rock salt can be used, although we prefer the latter.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

Pride is one of the seven deadly sins, but it cannot be the pride of a mother in her children, for that is a compound of two cardinal virtues—faith and hope.—Dickens.

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

This is the season when we read of families with "mushroom appetites and toadstool judgment." Most people speak of the unedible mushroom as a toadstool, but there is no such distinction. Mushrooms are edible and poisonous; those which are not edible are also mushrooms. The so-called tests, blackening of a silver spoon, and similar tests are absolutely unreliable. The only way to be sure of the kind of mushroom is to study it. No mushroom which is not positively known should be used for food. Anybody with a very little training may learn to identify the field mushroom, which is one of the most common and best flavored varieties. The inky caps are another which are easily learned. Study them carefully and take no risks, for experts are often deceived in kinds not well known.

Alcohol for cleaning mirrors is a great saver of time. Moisten a cloth with water, shake over it a little alcohol and rub over the mirror. It will clean very quickly and be well polished.

Cook strongly flavored vegetables in an open dish, such as cabbage, turnips, onions and cauliflower. The odor will not scent the house as permanently and the vegetable will be most digestible.

When possible have a meal as often as convenient on the porch or lawn. On a hot day there is nothing more restful than a meal out in the open. It will not be too much work, the children will think it is fun to do their part in the getting ready. In many homes in a screened-in porch makes a fine breakfast room, which is being used more largely during the heated term.

Fruit Cream.—Take the juice of three oranges, three lemons and three bananas, mashed through a sieve, add a pint of sugar and a quart of thin cream, freeze.

When icing a cake and you are desirous of having a thick top frosting, wrap a greased paper around the cake, pin firmly, allowing it to stand up an inch above the cake, then pour in the frosting and let it harden. Then peel off the paper and you have a fine thick frosting.

The KITCHEN CABINET

If sin has not overwhelmed you
And peace within you abides,
Then hold the mantle of your love
O'er him the world derides.

Do not try to do efficient work in an inefficient house. First transform your conditions.

GOOD THINGS.

Here is an old and well-tried sponge cake that will be liked by those who possess ten eggs to try it:

Great Grandmother's Sponge Cake.—To the beaten yolks of ten eggs add a pint of granulated sugar; beat until very light, then add a cupful of cold water and a pint of sifted flour, one-half a lemon, juice and rind; beat thoroughly together and then carefully fold in the stiffly beaten white. Pour into a deep pan and bake in a moderate oven.

October is the time to buy canned goods for winter as the canning season is over. The price per can is considerably less when purchased in quantity and your dealer will be glad to take your order. Never buy cans that have bulged, as this shows the contents to be fermenting, or do not buy cans that have been resoldered, showing that they have worked and been recooked.

When using canned goods the entire contents of the can should be turned out at once, as any of the food exposed to the air in the tin causes decomposition and makes the food unwholesome. Most of the cases of ptomaine poisoning are caused by lack of attending to this important duty.

Snowball Pudding.—Beat the yolks of three eggs until light, then add gradually one cupful of granulated sugar, beating all the while. When light, add two tablespoonfuls of milk, one cupful of flour, sifted with a teaspoonful of baking powder. Fold in the whites of the eggs beaten stiff. Fill buttered cups two-thirds full and steam 20 minutes. Roll in powdered sugar and serve with foamy fruit sauce.

Foamy Fruit Sauce. — Put three tablespoonfuls of any jam or marmalade into a saucepan, add the juice of a lemon, and a cup of boiling water. Bring to the boiling point, sweeten to taste, add a tablespoonful each of flour and butter, boil until smooth, then fold in the beaten white of an egg. Serve at once.

W. C. T. U. NEWS.

(Furnished by Mrs. Belle Dickey.)

Letters, Resolutions, Petitions.

Within the last few days a peremptory call has gone out from Samuel Woolner, Jr., president of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, to the liquor dealers, urging them, in the interests of self-preservation, to close their desks, let their business take care of itself, and devote themselves to getting their friends, neighbors and acquaintances to communicate with their Senators and Representatives in Congress, instructing them to work and vote against the District bill.

Until action is taken on this measure every Senator and Representative will receive from his anti-prohibition constituents letters and telegrams by the hundreds. For every letter and telegram that goes to Members of Congress from these men who are actuated by a selfish interest in safeguarding the liquor traffic, there should be at least two from patriots who would drive the saloon from the Nation's Capital. The passage of the District bill cannot fail to give a decided stimulus to the National Constitutional Prohibition movement.

Resolutions passed by churches, Endeavor Societies, W. C. T. U's, Y. M. C. A.'s, or any other organizations should be signed by the pastor and clerk of the church or by the president and corresponding secretary, stating approximately how many have voted and the name of the church or society. Titles always add to the weight of a resolution, and if there are titles, as D. D. or M. D. or LL. D., let them be affixed to the signature.

Resolutions count for more than petitions. A long list of signatures may not be recognized by a member of Congress, but a church with a pastor's name, or an organization with the name of president and secretary, is recognized as an important part of his constituency and respected accordingly.—Union Signal.

The Good of the Nation Demands It.

Whether or not the world would be vastly benefited by a total and final banishment from it of all intoxicating drinks, seems to me not now to be an open question. Three-fourths of mankind confess the affirmative with their tongues, and I believe all the rest acknowledge it in their hearts. Ought any, then, to refuse their aid in doing what the good of the whole demands?—Abraham Lincoln, in his Washington Address, delivered in Springfield, Illinois, February 22, 1842.

A Cause for Righteous Indignation.

The insolence of the liquor interests in making uss of the picture of Abraham Lincoln in their advertisements arouses in the heart of every Christian patriot righteous indignation that seeks for expression in some definite fashion. At this particular time of the year when we are recalling the wonderful life and character of this greatest of America's citizens and emphatic opposition to the liquor evil, we have brought to our attention the fact that though these obnoxious advertisements he seems to many people to be advocating the liquor traffic, which, with all the power of his clean, pure soul, he really hated.

One thing at least the right-minded people of every community can do, and the month of February is the time of all others to do it, gives all possible publicity through the press and by posters and the distribution of leaflets to what Abraham Lincoln really did say concerning the liquor evil. Call attention to the historic fact that his great soul rebelled against the passage by Congress of a measure providing for the raising of revenue from the liquor business and that he consented to it only as a war measure and on the positive assurance from leaders in Congress that as soon as the war was over the law would be repealed. Give prominence to the prophetic words with which he closed a great address:

"And when the victory shall be complete, when there shall be neither a slave nor a drunkard on the earth, how proud the title of that land which may truly claim to have been the birthplace and cradle of both these revolutions, that shall have ended in that victory."

Pass Anti-Alcohol Provision.

The United Mine Workers of America, which has just closed its annual convention in Indianapolis, adopted an amendment to its constitution providing that any officer or any employe of any branch of the organization seen in public in a state of intoxication shall, on conviction, be at once removed from his position. The amendment was adopted without discussion and by a unanimous vote.

British Columbia Campaign.

Owing to the going into effect of the prohibition law in the state of Washington on January 1st of this year, its near neighbor, British Columbia, the only adjoining license territory is facing an unpleasant situation. Vancouver newspapers say undesirables are flocking across the border and intend to make their homes in "a free country," where they can drink as they please. They are far from welcome as pioneers, however, for the authorities realize that this immigration means an increase of public expenses, since many of the comers will have to be taken care of in jails and hospitals and eventually in almshouses. This fact has given an impetus to the British Columbia dry movement, and quite possibly the province will vote out liquor in self-defense.

Can You Add to this List?

The reference in a recent issue of The Union Signal to the dangerous books on the liquor question which are being found in the public libraries of the country, has led to quiet investigations in many communities. One white rib boner, a resident of a large western city, writes that while getting ready to inaugurate a prize essay contest, she investigated her local library to see what the children would fine in the way of reference books and discovered that of ten books on the temperance shelf, seven were against total abstinence and prohibition, the titles of some of them being "Religion and Drink," "Drink, Temperance and Legislation," "A Text Book of True Temperance," "Alcohol, the Sanction for its Use," "Prohibition, the Enemy of Temperance," "Prohibition, its Relation to Temperance, Good Morals and Sound Government." The local union of that city immediately called the attention of the library board to the inconsistency of permitting the liquor interests to teach intemperance thru the city library when the law expressly provides that the children shall be taught in the schools the evil effects of drinking liquor.

COMPARE BEEF BREEDS.

Experiment Station Unable to Say Which One Is Best.

A number of experiment stations have compared the different breeds of beef cattle by steer feeding tests, with the result that they are unable to say, under the general farm conditions, which one is best.

As an average of experiments by four different stations, Hereford steers made an average daily gain at the age of two years and eight months of 1.54 pounds; Shorthorn steers in five experiments, at an age of two years and nine months, made an average daily gain of 1.5 pounds, Angus steers in four different experiments made an average daily gain from birth to an age of two years and seven months of 1.62 pounds.

This is not enough difference to warrant anyone saying that any one of these prominent beef breeds gains more rapidly than another. Conditions might readily enough have been changed, and perhaps only slightly, so as to change these gains one way or another in the case of any or all of the breeds. In general farm feeding steers of all four breeds will do about equally well in the feed lot in the making of daily gains.

Neither is there much difference in the feed it takes to produce a pound of gain by the steers of these four breeds. In eight different experiments at five different stations, Shorthorn steers required an average of 694 pounds of grain to produce 100 pounds of gain; Hereford steers required 739 pounds of grain; Angus steers, 761 pounds, and Galloway, 699 pounds. Here also a slight change in conditions of feeding or management, might have produced different results in favor of one breed or another.

Does one of the beef breeds sell enough better on the market to warrant anyone making a statement to that effect? No. The Aberdeen Angus, it is true, have won ten out of a possible 14 grand championships in the single fat steer classes at the International Live Stock exposition, 11 out of a possible 14 grand championships in the carlot fat steer classes, and 13 out of a possible 14 in the fat steer carcass classes, and this has given them the edge on prices paid for fat show cattle sold during International week at auction.

Daviess county will issue $600,000 good roads bonds.

The changing weather has had a bad effect on young lambs, resulting in the loss of quite a number of the early born. Several farmers have sustained losses of lambs as a result of the peculiar weather.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

Perry Ingram put his name on the honor roll at the People's Tobacco Warehouse yesterday morning by selling one of the finest crops of tobacco produced in Boyle county this year. On a sale of 3,590 pounds he realized the unusual average of $17.50 per hundred clear of charges.—Danville Advocate.

An ear of Hickory corn, which is to be seen in the Favorite office window, is a sample of the crop raised last year by S. P. Grace, of Tempe, Arizona. Twenty years ago Mr. Grace began growing this quality of corn, and has intelligently improved it each year. While only eight rows of grains appear on the cob—a peculiarity of Hickory corn—the quality is excellent and the quantity is in excess of most varieties with twice the amount of rows to the cob.—Franklin Favorite.

ACCIDENTS IN FILLING SILOS

Practically All Are Result of Carelessness and Can Be Prevented—Three Excellent Rules.

(By W. E. MARKEY, Iowa Experiment Station.)

With the opening of the silo filling season there will be frequent reports of serious and fatal accidents. The manufacturers of silage cutters have greatly improved their construction in recent years, and most accidents nowadays are the result of carelessness; practically all of them can be avoided by the exercise of reasonable care. In addition to the exercise of common sense at the feeding end of the machine, here are some things that the inexperienced man should do:

1. Be sure that the machine is being run at the proper speed.

2. Take care that corn is never put into the machine until the motion is up to full speed.

3. In stopping, be careful not to shut off the power until the elevator is empty. If the elevator is not empty, the cut material will fall back and lodge in the fans. Then when the machine is started again, the cut corn jams the fans, and as a result they are bent or broken.

PROPER SELECTION OF SEED

Determining Factor in Production of Maximum Crop of Potatoes—Bulletin Explains Methods.

(1) Good seed is a determining factor in the production of maximum crops of potatoes.

(2) Good seed may be obtained by the tuber-unit and hill-selection methods of selection through the elimination of unproductive and weak plants. These methods are explained in Farmers' Bulletin 533, "Good Seed Potatoes and How to Produce Them."

(3) Like produces like. If tubers from unproductive or weak plants are used a similar harvest will be reaped.

(4) All tubers showing marked discoloration of the flesh should be rejected.

(5) Purity of seed stock is an essential quality of good seed. Serious losses are sustained by the grower through mixtures.

EFFECTIVE AS SCARECROW

Inflated Bags Tied to Arms of Ordinary Ragman Will Materially Aid in Keeping Birds Away.

The ordinary ragman used as a scarecrow can be made more effective by adding to it something to make it move, or some part that flutters in the wind. This can be accomplished in one way by blowing up paper bags to expand them to their full extent, tying the openings as if they were filled with some commodity for the household and fastening them to the arms of the dummy as shown, says Popular Mechanics. These will swing and flutter about in a way that will materially aid in scaring away the birds that damage the crops.

SAFEST FORM OF INSURANCE

Succulent Feed Assists Materially in Keeping Herd in Good Health and Insures Milk Flow.

(By ROY T. HARRIS, Wisconsin Experiment Station.)

A silo is not only the safest form of crop insurance for the farmer, but is stock insurance as well. The succulent form of feed helps to keep the herd in good health and insures a milk flow.

The farmers who have silos are not uneasy because of the backwardness of the corn crop. Even if the season has been backward they are confident that the crop will go into the silo in fine shape for the stock. And many farmers who, before this year, have not thought of investing in silos, are now asking themselves, "What kind shall I build?"

The value of silage as a feed cannot be overestimated during any year, but in a year like this the worth of a silo in making sure an otherwise somewhat doubtful harvest is emphasized.

UTILIZE ALL WASTE PLACES

Wet Spots Can Be Put to Good Use By Preparing Them Late and Sowing Quick-Maturing Crops.

Nearly every season there is more or less land on most farms that, on account of being too wet, cannot be put into corn or the early small grains. These spots can be utilized to good advantage by preparing them late and sowing quick-maturing forage crops like the sorghums or the millets. These spots are usually very fertile and produce heavy yields and the winter forage they may return is likely to be most acceptable. They should never be permitted to go to weeds in any year.

No Place for Milk.

Don't let the milk stand in the stable. Take it to the dairy and strain or separate it before it has cooled.

LIVE STOCK

CARING FOR THE BROOD SOWS

Give the Animals Good, Hearty Ration, Strong in Protein and Not Rich in Fat-Making Foods.

People will tell you that a brood sow should not be too fat at farrowing time. That's true; but that doesn't mean that she should be starved to a shadow. She should be fed a good, hearty ration, strong in protein, and not rich in the fat-making foods. She should have plenty of exercise. She should be in that thrifty condition which makes her as strong as a bull—but not fat.

There's no danger of her having too much bone and muscle. The heavier she is the better—provided that too much of her weight is not fat. An all-corn ration robs her of the strength she will need at the time of her trial, and fills the cavities of the body with fat. Then she will be fat and lazy and will kill her pigs by lying on them. Or she may never be able to bring them forth. Or her appetite for bone and muscle-forming foods may be so abnormal that she may eat them up.

But if she is kept from being too fat by the simple method of starvation, she will not give the litter the proper amount of milk.

If the sow becomes constipated before farrowing, as some sows do, epsom salts may be given in the slop for three or four feedings—just enough so that the taste will not repel the sow and keep her from eating.

At farrowing time occur the most of the pig losses. Some of them come from the absence of the owner when the pigs arrive, and some from his presence. The sow should be carefully watched, but she should not be disturbed. In other words, no dogs should be allowed anywhere near, and she should not become aware of the presence of those who watch her. A good brood sow stealing her nest in the grove or fields will on the average bring to the feed trough a better litter than the one which is fussed over by a solicitous owner. Yet she sometimes needs help. Combine the merits of the two methods.

EXPENSE OF KEEPING HORSE

Cost Is Much More Than Many Persons Usually Believe—Estimate Placed at $75 Yearly.

The cost of keeping a horse for a year on a farm is much more than many persons usually suppose. In an estimate of such cost it was found that a horse weighing 1,200 pounds and kept at moderately hard work costs $75 a year for board. Foods, of course, are usually higher in some places than others, where it would not cost so much.

Taking one horse with another, as kept on our farms, and allowing for the period of idleness in the winter season, the cost to keep would not be more than $50. Larger horses would, however, cost relatively more than those of lighter weight.

PARTITIONS IN HOG TROUGH

Device Prevents Young and Small Animals From Being Crowded Out of Their Allowance.

Partitions in a hog trough will save the owner much trouble in feeding. Where there is nothing to prevent the young and small pigs are often crowded out of their rightful allowance by the older and bigger animals.

The trough shown in the illustration is partitioned off to save this trouble. The bottom of the one I made was a 1-inch board 14 inches wide. The sides were 4 inches high, partitions 6 inches wide. For the V sides on top I used 1 by 8, and at the lower edge of these nailed strips of 1 by 4 to keep the slop from wasting, writes Odom Tyson of Lee's Summit, Mo., in Missouri Valley Farmer. The partitions were spaced 10 inches apart. They were cut sloping across the top, and from the bottom of slope to bottom of trough is 8 inches.

ERADICATE LICE ON CATTLE

Frequently Serious Pest in Winter—Any of Various Dips Will Prove Quite Satisfactory.

Lice on cattle and young stock are frequently a serious pest in winter. Any of the various dips advertised or sold for this purpose are effective. They can be put on with a sponge or brush and worked in thoroughly to the skin, but it is not always safe to wet an animal all over in cold weather.

Kerosene and lard rubbed in from horns to the tail is a safe and sure remedy. An even better one is to use powdered sulphur. Rub it in well with the hand and repeat in two weeks. There is no danger from using this.

What the Panama Canal Cost.

Up to the present time the Panama Canal has cost the people of the United States $357,436,084.84. Of that amount $14,689,873.30 has been devoted to fortifications. Congress has actually appropriated for the canal a total of $394,399,143.02 to June 30, 1915. These figures are given in the annual report of Major General G. W. Goethals. So far, the American people have had little use of the Panama Canal. Whether there is to be strategic military advantage remains to be seen, as there has not yet been any attempt to send Dreadnoughts through the canal. The canal is being paid for out of current revenues, although the beneficiaries largely will be future generations. This is also true of the large sums of money spent annually on rivers and harbors and public buildings. It is especially true of the $50,000,000 which physical valuation of the railroads is costing. No large corporations could survive under such a system of finance. Stocks and bonds are issued for permanent improvements. The United States Government pays for permanent improvements out of current revenues, so that the entire burden is placed upon the present generation. Only a few pennies of the price paid for a railroad ticket go for permanent improvements, such as for the railroad station in which the ticket is purchased. This distributes the burden for permanent improvements over a long period of years, that the hardship is felt by no one. As pointed out in this department recently, one of the greatest needs of this Government is for a general plan of financing extending over a long period of years, and accompanied by an understanding budget system.—Leslie's.

HUSBAND RESCUED DESPAIRING WIFE

After Four Years of Discouraging Conditions, Mrs. Bullock Gave Up in Despair. Husband Came to Rescue.

Catron, Ky.—In an interesting letter from this place, Mrs. Bettie Bullock writes as follows: "I suffered for four years, with womanly troubles, and during this time, I could only sit up for a little while, and could not walk anywhere at all. At times, I would have severe pains in my left side.

The doctor was called in, and his treatment relieved me for a while, but I was soon confined to my bed again. After that, nothing seemed to do me any good. I had gotten so weak I could not stand, and I gave up in despair.

At last, my husband got me a bottle of Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I commenced taking it. From the very first dose, I could tell it was helping me. I can now walk two miles without its tiring me, and am doing my work."

If you are all run down from womanly troubles, don't give up in despair. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic. It has helped more than a million women, in its 50 years of wonderful success, and should surely help you, too. Your druggist has sold Cardui for years. He knows what it will do. Ask him. He will recommend it. Begin taking Cardui today.

The Nation's Right To Freedom of the Seas and To All Neutral Markets of the World.

It is said that the people of the Southern States, owing to better prices for cotton and through their adoption of the diversified crop system have been the recipients of fully $2,000,000 more for thair 1915 crops than they received for the crops of 1914.

We believe that this statement is true, absolutely true, but we are also of the opinion that if the United States Government had done its duty by the planters of the South in 1914, as it did by the bankers of the country the same year, that 1914 would have given the Southern people fully $300,000,000 more for the crops of that year than they received.

We also believe that if the markets of the neutral nations of the world had been kept open to the products of the lands of the South, the North, the East and West, the farmers of the United States would have received fully $300,000,000 more in 1915 for what they raised than they did receive.

As it has stood all through the past twelve months, by virtually closing neutral markets to our farming products, the allied nations have been able to buy our cotton and grain and all other farm products much lower from our agriculturalists than if the neutral markets had been open to our farmers and neutal demands could have been supplied.

By closing those neutral markets the allies restricted demand, shut off competition, bid their own prices, and our farmers in all sections have been seriously injured by the failure of this Government to take strong action in defense of the national rights.

Instead of $200,000,000 gain in receipts for their products over 1914 the Southern people would haver gained double that amount if those neutral markets had been open to them as they should have been.

The war may be prolonged until after the crops of 1916 are gathered, and if these neutral markets are not opened to our products before that time the allied Powers will again fix their own prices for the products of the lands of the United States, and again the third successive year will compel the sale of our products in one-half of markets of the world, while the status of the United States as an independent nation gives it the right to the markets of all the world.

There is not the slightest doubt but international affairs will play a great part in the issues and discussions of this year's political campaign, and it is most interesting to note how the Republican, the Progressive and the Democratic parties propose to meet this question of national rights upon the seas and in foreign markets.

The farmers of all sections, the manufacturers and their employees of all sections, the mining interests in all sections, the business men of all states and the people of the entire country are a unit in demanding the freedom of the seas and full and free access to every neutral market in the world. How will the political parties meet the issue?—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Why The Hoop Net!

Persons who are interested in seeing the streams in Kentucky restocked with fish inform the Courier-Journal that it seems to be the disposition of the Legislature to pass a bill to permit the use of hoop nets in "navigable streams." It is their opinion that the term "navigable" will be construed liberally and that the restocked streams will soon become barren again. They point out that the Fish and Game Commission at Frankfort, and local sportsmen cooperating with the body, have placed many thousands of fish in streams, at considerable expense, and that the recrudescence of hoop-net fishing would nullify all of the efforts that have been put forth. This view of the proposed law seems reasonable. Even if hoop-net fishing would be revived upon the larger streams, only those navigable for steamers, what warrant is there for passing such a law? Kentucky River, which flows under the bridges, which the law-makers cross in Frankfort, is a navigable stream which has been the scene of so much vandalism that few fish are left in it. The old fishermen about Louisville say that blasting at the falls has driven away the fish which formerly were so plentiful in the Ohio. The fact is, no doubt, that taking fish by every means known to fishermen from the head of the Ohio to its mouth has all but exterminated the fish. The conservation work that has been done is approved generally. Interference with it will not meet with popular approval. Who is lobbying for the hoop net bill?—C.-J.

STATE DEBT TO BE REFUNDED

General Assembly To Pass on Plan of Gov. Stanley and Bankers

TAXES MAY BE RAISED

Extra revenue of five cents on the hundred dolars needed — Special session seems assured.

Frankfort, Ky. (Special)—If the Legislature so resolves, the people will have an opportunity to pass on the question of issuing bonds for the payment of the $3,000,000 debt in the form of outstanding warrants against the State at the November election.

Bonding this debt would mean a saving of about $50,000 a year in interest and would place the State's credit on a firm basis.

A committee of the Kentucky Bankers' Association was called together at the executive mansion, where they discussed with Governor Stanley the questions of refunding $3,000,000 of out-standing state warrants. It was the consensus of opinion that the interest-bearing warrants should be refunded. Ways of bettering the State's financial affairs were also discussed at length.

Kentucky bankers and party leaders are of the opinion that an additional revenue of five cents on the hundred dollars is needed to make ends meet and provide for the actual necessities of government.

A special session of the General Assembly to determine the matter of revenues and taxation seems assured and it is believed that administration leaders will blame the injection of the prohibition question into the present sessions the cause for delay and as the reason for a special session.

An investigation will be made of the charges against Representative Harvey, of Webster County, arden leader for the prohibition cause, by Representative Pumphrey, of Fleming, on the House floor, to the effect that Harvey has approached a chamber-maid in the Capitol Hotel with outstretched hands. A resolution providing for this investigation and also of the charges made by Harvey that Governor Stanley was elected by the liquor interests and that a distillery had contributed $25,000 to his campaign passed the House. It provides that a committee of three shall be selected by each side and that the seventh member shall be selected by the six. So far the six have been unable to agree on the seventh man. The representatives of Harvey have suggested Lieut-Governor James D. Black, which was not acceptable to the Pumphrey side.

Harvey has denounced the Pumphrey charge as a "frame-up," and in an effort to prevent his activities for the prohibition cause. He has received hundreds of letters, scores of telegrams and resolutions from churches from all parts of the State have been forwarded expressing confidence in him.

The Senate refused to concur in the amendments tacked on by the House to the Zimmerman anti-lobby bill, and the Chair appointed a Conference Committee, composed of Senators Zimmerman, Frost and Huffaker to confer with a like committee from the House regarding these amendments.

* * *

A bill permitting adjacent counties to maintain joint high schools, introduced by Senator Frost, passed the upper body by a unanimous vote.

A joint resolution was passed by both branches of the General Assembly to adjourn from last Saturday over until Wednesday morning of this week Tuesday being the anniversary of the birth of George Washington.

* * *

A joint resolution, originating in the Senate, petitioning Congress to take steps looking to the prevention of floods and flood damage in the Mississippi Valley was adopted in the House on motion of Representative McMurray, of Fulton County.

* * *

The bill of Senator Williams to protect birds and game animals, passed the upper house without a dissenting vote 28 to 0.

An unsuccessful effort to call up the bill to abolish betting on horse races was made by Representative Oliver, of Scott County.

After four hours of careful consideration, the Spoor-Vance corrupt practices act passed the Senate by a vote of 25 to 1. Senator Moore casting the dissenting vote.

Although voting for the bill, saying he believed it to be a step in the right direction, Senator Frost dedounced the bill as a "hush-up." It was the intention, he said, to fool the people by the passage of this measure, which would be of very little avail. The bill, he declared, gave the Governor the right to spend $20,000 in elections, but put no limit on the amount his friends spent, if he disclaimed any knowledge of the expenditure.

Another amendment added reduces the amount to be expended by a candidate for State Senator from $1,000 to $500.

The bill, as passed by the House, did not call for statements of expenditures in elections for bond issues, franchise issues and local option elections. This defect in the bill was remedied by the amendment of Senator Frost.

A Board of Accountants to examine and accredit accountants, introduced by Senator Booles, passed by a unanimous vote.

* * *

The House resolution, authorizing the state university to participate in the funds which will accrue under the Smith-Lever bill, pending in Congress, was passed by the Senate.

Non-residents are taxed $7.50 license in a bill which seems to regulate the issuing of licenses and penalties for illegal hunting, which passed the Senate 17 to 11.

* * *

Providing for the teaching of agriculture in the common schools, the bill of Senator Antle passed the upper body 28 to 4. The bill was so amended as to give teachers until July 1, 1918, to qualify to teach agriculture.

* * *

A petition was presented to the General Assembly from citizens of Pike County, requesting the support for the bills affecting Covington and Newport saloons.

* * *

Fathered by citizens of Covington, a bill, authorizing the acceptance of gifts of trusts by boards of education and public institutions, passed the Senate by a unanimous vote.

* * *

An important bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator Combs, which proposes to make the election of County School Superintendents non-partisan. It provides for the doing away with the emblem in this particular contest.

* * *

Another bitter liquor fight developed in the House when a resolution, requesting the Kentucky delegation in Congress, to vote for Nation-wide prohibition came up. Representative Myers tacked on an amendment which provided for compensation. This was passed by a vote of 48 to 47. After the adoption of the amendment in this form, which was not acceptable to the "drys," a motion was made by Representative Greene, author of the resolution, to table the matter, which was carried by a vote of 72 to 14.

Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, Chairman of the Kentucky Illiteracy Commission, upon invitation, addressed a joint Assembly session in behalf of the bill proposing a $20,000 annual appropriation for the work in the state during the next four years.

Mrs. Stewart, without compensation, has spent much time in the state in opening "Moonlight schools" and reducing the illiteracy which existed in many parts, especially the mountain districts.

She has the endorsement of educators from all parts of the country and her work has been commendable in every respect, according to those who have been in position to see some of the activities.

The Central Kentucky Millers' Association, at their annual conference in Lexington, made known their opposition to the bill recently introduced in the Legislature, proposing the control of the sale of manufacured feeding stuff be transferred from the Kentucky Experiment Station to the State Department of Agriculture. The Insurance code bill, now before the Legislature, was given unqualified indorsement.

* * *

An amicable settlement of what threatened to become a serious factional dispute over the instructions to be given Kentucky's delegates to the Republican National Convention, appears to have been made.

A conference of leaders was held, with the result of which eight instead of four delegates-at-large shall be sent from Kentucky, each to have half a vote at Chicago.

Endeavoring to win favor of the delegation and have them instructed for Charles W. Fairbanks, of Indiana, the program of Edwin P. Morrow seemed to be extremely distasteful to Congressman Caleb Powers, John W. Langley and to J. Frank Taylor, of Glasgow, who led the factional element in the conference. It is said that neither side wished to send an uninstructed delegation.

Those most prominently mentioned in connection with places on the state-at-large delegation include both of the Congressmen named, Mr. Morrow, Richard P. Ernst, Covington, Marshall Bullitt and Augustus E. Willson, Louisville; Judge E. C. O'Rear, Frankfort, and Phil Brown, a negro editor of Hopkinsville.

Senator Stricklett and Representative Meyers were selected by Governor Stanley to introduce and handle the administration senatorial and legislative redistricting bills.

Permitting third-class cities to improve streets on a ten-year-payment plan, the bill of Representative Myers, considered one of the most important bills of the session, passed the Senate 24 to 0.

If the bond issue, which it is proposed to vote on May 8th in this county carries, the proceeds of the bonds issued can be used only for building and maintaining roads. Money with which to buy roads will have to come from some other source.

A dinner to Joel C. Clore in honor of his accession to the Postmastership, will be given at the Business Men's club Monday evening, March 6th. Preliminary plans for the affair were made at a meeting at the Business Men's Club yesterday by friends of the new Postmaster.—Cincinnati Daily Equirer.

Gross earnings of United States railroads making weekly returns to Dun's Review continue to show substantial improvement, the total of all roads reporting for the first week in February amounting to $6,743,230, an increase of 11.6 per cent, as compared woth the corresponding period a year ago. Although storms and floods have considerably reduced traffic in some sections, notably in the southwest and west, the earnings of very few roads are smaller than last year at this time, while, on the other hand very substantial gaines continue to be shown by many of the more important systems. These gaines reflect an enormous movement of freight and indicate well-maintained business in all parts of the country.

The ground hog has so far sustained its reputation saw a weather prophet, and if bad weather fails to drop in again this spring no one will deny his hogship the honor long enjoyed by it.

Big Prices for Hogs

Edgar Riley and Richard Stephens attended a big sale of Duroc hogs over in Ohio, one day last week. The animals sold brought from $65 to $900 per head. Messrs. Riley and Stephens made no purchases.

Has Purchased a Farm

Ransom Ryle has purchased of Dr. A. G. G. Richardson his farm in Beech Grove neighborhood. It will not be long after Mr. Ryle gets located in his new home until he will inoculate that neighborhood with the good roads fever.

Will Engage in Merchandising

A. F. Milner, who has a sale of his personal property advertised for the 26th inst., has purchased of Charles Craven his store at Constance. He takes possession on March 1, but does not expect to get thoroughly installed in the business before the first of April.

Only a Majority is Necessary

The Court of Appeals handed down an opinion last week in which it was held that it requires only a majority vote of a county to authorize the Fiscal Court to issue road bonfs, making it much easier sliding for the bond issue that will be submitted at a special election to be held for that purpose on May 8th.

A Very Sick Man

The condition of Geo. C. Voshell, who has been very ill at the home of his son Charles, near Dills boro, Indiana, does not improve and he has been failing gradually for several weeks. Mr. Voshell is over eighty years of age, and is a brother of L. H. Voshell, of Union. He was born and raised in this county.

Going Slow Just Now

Not much has been done yet towards raising money with which to repair the streets of Burlington, although the Recorder's suggestion last week started the discussion. The repairs will have to be made and it will take considerable money, and the plan by which it is to be raised will have to be worked out and there is no need of delay.

Matrimonial Market Slow

The license record at the county clerk's office does not indicate any increase in the matrimonial line since the advent of leap year, which is very unsatisfactory to the bachelor clerk for two reasons, one of which is the limited financial output from that department of his office. The other reason you can guess.

If Second Case is Typhoid there Must be a Local Cause

Two cases of typhoid fever in Burlington, one immediately following the other, was never before known. Previous to this year there have been very few cases of that disease in the town, each of which was believed to have been imported, but there is no doubt but the two cases this year are due to some local cause yet unknown.

Some Names

A few days since County Clerk Rogers recorded a deed in which the names of the parties on behalf of whom the conveyance was made, required three pages of the large deed books in which the instrument was made. It was a commissioners deed by Master Commissioner Maurer in the case to divide the property of Cassie Barlow.

Left the Henry Clay

Coleman H. Lassing, formerly of this county, who, for the past five years, has been connected with the Henry Clay Fire Insurance Company, of Lexington, Ky., has resigned his position with that company, and has accepted the position of Special Agent and Adjuster for the London Assurance Corporation, a large British concern, and one of the oldest insurance companies in the world. Mr. Lassing will have supervision of that company's business in the states of Kentucky and Tennessee and will have his headquarters in Lexington, where he will continue to reside.

Got a Judgment for $200

The following is taken from last Friday's Covington news in Cincinnati Enquirer:

A jury in Judge Tracy's court returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $200 in the case of Bruce Anderson against the South Covington and Cincinnati Railway Company. Plaintiff sued for $5,700 damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained when a car struck his wag on on West Oak street, Ludlow, Ky., Sept. 8th, 1915. The same plaintiff had a prior suit against the street car company which was dismissed settled Feb. 23d, 1909, defendant paying the costs. In the former suit plaintiff asked for $10,900 for personal injuries alleged to have sustained on West Oak street, near Deveral street, Ludlow.

IN MEMORY.

Mrs. Margaret Jacob Brown, wife of James Brown, died at her home in Idlewild, Ky., Feb. 13th, 1916. She was the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob, of Falmouth, Ky. She was born Dec. 24, 1861, was married to Mr. James Brown, Nov. 22, 1878. There were three children born to this union, Lottie, who died in childhood; Lawson and Ernest, who, with their father, a sister, Mrs. Will Brown, and a brother, Mr. Sim Jacob, survive her. Many years ago she gave her life to the Lord and united with the Bullittsburg Baptist church, and to the end remained a consistent member, always willing and anxious to bear her part in the affairs of her church. She was a devoted wife and mother. Her greatest happiness seemed to be in bringing happiness to her loved ones, and in return received the willing service of not only her husband and sons, but of her two daughter-in-laws also, who, in months past, when she was overtaken by ill health, were untiring in their efforts to make life pleasant and relieve her of its burdens, bestowing upon her the effection due a mother. The funeral services were conducted at the house by Rev. Baker, of Belleview, Feb. 15. The church and community, with her family, will feel the loss of this good women, who has gone to her reward. May God comfort and sustain her loved ones.

Arranging for a Big Fair

The directors of the North Kentucky Fair met on the grounds at Florence, last Thursday, and disposed of considerable routine business, and fixed the date for holding a three days fair which will begin August 31st. A committee composed of W. P. Beemon, C. W. Myers and C. F. Blankenbeker was appointed to have all necessary repairs made on the amphitheater and other buildings which will necessitate an outlay of fifteen hundred or two thousand dollars. Some very good altcrations in the amphitheater are proposed, which if made, will add considerable to the convenience and comfort of the patrons of the fair. Hubert Conner, secretary of the fair was a caller at this office last Friday and stated that the certificates for the paid up stock are ready to be delivered and will be mailed to those entitled in the next few days. The directors of the fair have got busy in earnest and a good fair will be given this year.

THE PLAY.

Last Saturday evening we had in our little village the play "Dee strick Skule," when I arrived at Shelby Street Theater, the doorkeeper said 15 cents. I gave him 5 and 10. He smiled and said, "standing room only," to the surprise of the large audience that greeted the teacher and children of the "Deestrick Skule," who kept the large crowd in an uproarous laughter with their ludicrous recitations. Mcdames Surface, Grant and Fisk as skules gerls, created a good deal of merriment, which the large audience appreciated. Miss Florence Marquiss, as usual, with her fine acting and catchy songs, received several encores.

Overhaul Your Farm Machinery

Right now is a mighty good time to overhaul that farm machinery, and polish it, and oil it, and get it to running smoothly and without a hitch or break. The smoother and easier it works the more dividends it will earn during the summer's work.

Has not Furnished Much Good Weather

The month of February has not furnished much weather suitable for farm work. So far no plowing has been done for corn anywhere in the county. As a rule considerable corn land has been broken by this time.

County Court Business

In the county court last week W. B. Arnold qualified as administrator, with the will annexed, of the estate of Susie E. Walrath. H. D. Brady, Bernard Rogers C. E. McNeely were appointed to appraise the estate.

Eli Surface was appointed guardian of his son Joseph.

A Close Call

"Pat" Zimmerman, a regular employe of the Hamilton tobacco warehouse, had a close call one day this week. In less than a half minute after he had stepped from a window near where he works, a rifle ball crashed thru the glass and had Mr. Zimmerman been in his usual position it would have struck him in the head. It is not known from whence the stray shot came.—Ohio County News.

Voting Money for Roads

The Gallatin Fiscal Court at a special session last Tuesday voted $6,000 more for road improvements this year. Of this amount $4,658 is to apply to the road between Warsaw and Sparta and $1,342 to the road from here to Sugar Creek. Application was made to the State Good Roads Department for a sum of like amount—$6,000 according to the present arrangement between county and State by which the State will put up an amount of money equal to that raised by the county for road improvement, and if this appropriation is obtained, the amount used this year on those two roads will be $12,000. Of this amount $9,316 will be spent on the Warsaw and Sparta pike and $2,681 on the pike from here to Sugar Creek.—Independent.

Getting Busy in the Oil Fields

Unless all signs fail we will see some great doings in the oil business in this county within the next few months. It is said that a great lot of land has been leased already and the agents of several companies are working along leasing more land every day. As soon as the weather permits test wells will be started in different sections. This county was tested about nine years ago, when oil was found in several places, near Primrose and also on Contrary and Lower Stufflebean. The first test by ——— the Wallace Oil Company, of Beattyville, produced a fairly good showing of oil, but was afterward drowned by salt water, in the second well a tremendous flow of gas was struck. This well was plugged and even now the gas is escaping in sufficient quantities to burn when a lighted match is held near. Those wells range in depth from 850 to 1,000 feet. In the Estill field, where so much work has been done during the past few months, oil is found at a depth of about 150 feet. Of course, we are only guessing at what lies hidden, but judging from the experimens of the past it looks like a safe bet that oil may be found here. At any rate we have been informed that the work will keep up this time until it is known for certain whether or not oil abounds.—Beattyville Enterprise.

W. H. Weber, proprietor of the local express truck, has been notified that he will be awarded the contract for carrying the mail between Burlington and Erlanger, beginning July 1st.

SUNDAY NIGHT DISHES.

The Sunday night lunch or supper is a simple meal, as it is preceded by the late and heavy Sunday dinner. If one wishes something hot in the form of bread, a Sally Lunn is a most desirable one and not hard to prepare.

Sally Lunn.—Beat two eggs until light, without separating the whites from the yolks, stir into a half cupful of warm milk, three tablespoonfuls of melted butter, and a quarter of a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a tablespoonful of boiling water. Into this beat two cupfuls of flour, a teaspoonful of sugar and a half teaspoonful of salt. Dissolve half a yeast cake in a half cupful of water and stir into the batter. Beat hard until the batter is smooth, then turn into a greased mold to rise. If prepared at noon it will be light and ready to bake in time for supper. Bake for half an hour or until well browned. Serve hot.

Macaroon Custard.—Soak two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in half a cupful of water for half an hour. Make a light custard of a pint of milk, two eggs, the whites and yolks beaten separately, and two tablespoonfuls of sugar. When cooked take it from the fire and stir in the gelatin. As soon as it is dissolved and well mixed, set the custard aside to thicken, flavoring with vanilla. When firm, take the custard from the dish by spoonfuls, roll each in powdered macaroons and serve heaped on a dish. The macaroons should be dry enough to crumble without sticking together.

Savory Rice.—Fry until crisp a quarter of a pound of salt pork, put into the pan with a medium sized onion, chopped fine and brown. Add this to three cupfuls of boiled rice, two green peppers, chopped, and a cupful of tomato sauce. Season all to taste, turn into a buttered baking dish, cover with buttered crumbs and brown. This dish may be all prepared for the baking on Saturday.

Begue Liver.—Cut calf's liver in inch cubes, sprinkle with salt and pepper and cover with slices of lemon and parsley sprigs. Let stand a half hour. Fry in deep fat for one minute.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

Eggplant is not well enough appreciated. Its natural flavor is peculiar to itself and when it is nicely prepared is a most satisfactory dish.

Eggplant, Southern Style.—Cut a plant in slices, pare off and discard the skin; then cut the slices in cubes half an inch in size. Pour boiling water over the plant and cook for about twenty minutes or until tender. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, add two onions chopped fine, a half a green pepper chopped, stir and cook until the onions are softened and slightly yellow, add the eggplant drained, a cupful and a half of bread crumbs, salt, paprika and cupful and a half of tomato; stir until hot, turn into a buttered baking dish, cover with well-buttered crumbs and cook in the oven until the crumbs are brown.

Scalloped Chicken With Corn.—For each cupful of chicken meat, freed from bones, use a cupful of corn either fresh or canned, a cupful of white sauce and seasonings. Mix the chicken with the sauce put into a baking dish, cover with a layer of corn and when all is used cover with well-buttered crumbs. Bake until the crumbs are brown.

Pork Pot.—Trim 1½ pounds of loin of pork into neat pieces, fry them in a saucepan until brown. Line an earthenware dish with sliced potatoes and onions, using one onion to two potatoes, lay on the pork; then another layer of vegetables, salt, pepper and a pinch of herbs. Moisten with a pint of stock, cover with buttered paper and place in a hot oven two hours. Cook slowly and serve from the dish in which it was cooked. Sprinkle parsley over the top before sending to the table. A tablespoonful or two of cooked peas may be sprinkled over the top before adding the parsley.

Baked Beans.—Parboil beans after soaking them overnight, and when they are partly softened, prepare for baking. Add a tablespoonful of molasses, a little salt, a little dry mustard and a small onion for each pint of beans. Bake all day with a piece of scored pork on

THE STATE PRESS.

Carlisle—After being out for six hours and three times reporting that they could not agree, Judge Fryer, in the Nicholas Circuit Court, discharged the jury trying the case of John W. Strout, a farmer, charged with killing his brother.

Franklin—The growing wheat crop in Simpson county has made rapid improvement during the past three weeks and the impression prevails now that little trouble will be experienced from the Hessian fly, which proved so costly to the farmers last year.

Lexington—Mrs. Willie Sayre, Short, a wealthy and prominent society woman, of this city, is critically ill at the Good Samaritan Hospital as the result of accidentally taking a bichloride of mercury tablet by mistake for a sleeping potion. It is not believed she will recover.

Princeton.—Mrs. Bessie Pierce has filed suit against the Illinois Central railroad for $25,000, alleging negligence on the part of the company, causing the death of her husband, W. D. Pierce, who was killed in the south yards, 1 mile south of this place, Sunday, October 24, 1914, by a passenger train.

Paducah—Because the police are said to have made no arrests despite numerous reports of gambling and violation of the liquor laws of the State and city, Police Judge Crossland declared that he would conduct an investigation himself. Numerous witnesses have been subpoenaed by Crossland to appear before him.

Owensboro—The failure of fifty-three pupils of the county schools to pass examinations for diplomas admitting them to either the county or city schools was due, County Superintendent McFarland said to the fact that the examination was much harder than it has been in recent years. Those who failed will have another opportunity to get by in May.

Lexington—The Kentucky Sales Company concluded the trotting division of its horse auction with the disposal of nine head for $1,195, making 149 head sold for $26,990, an average of $193.50 during the three days. It is generally conceded to have been the best sale of trotters here in a number of years, inasmuch as the prices were exceptionally good for animals of quality.

Owensboro—The royal proclamation of Great Britain to the effect that all importation of tobacco would be prohibited after March 1st was read with interest by tobacco men of Owensboro. Whether the action of the British Government will have a tendency to send the weed to other parts of the world was discussed. It is pointed out that it is a good thing for the growers that the bulk of the Green River crop has been sold. Buyers who have orders on contracts will continue to be competing bidders on the loose leaf floors.

Paris—Dr. A. H. Keller, Health Officer of Paris, has directed that a number of bodies interred in the Paris colored cemetery be taken up and reinterred the proper depth required by law. Dr. Keller states that for some time it has been the custom to bury the dead in this cemetery with only a few inches of dirt covering the box in which the casket was contained. In a number of instances the scratching of dogs and the work of the elements had uncovered the boxes until they protrude from the grave. Dr. Keller directed the owner of the cemetery to see that all bodies in the future were buried at a proper depth.

A Test Whether Advertising Pays.

In talking recently with a man who has made a large success as an advertising salesman in another place, this question was asked him, "When a merchant says it does not pay to advertise, what do you tell him?"

"I just ask him this," was the reply, "What proportion of the population of this town has been inside your store during the past few months?"

Very few merchants ever claim they have had 10 per cent of the population. Most of the non-advertisers would be glad to get one per cent. A lot of them probably get a small fraction with any regularity.

"Then I say, how are the rest of the people going to know about your goods? How can they tell whether it would be for their advantage to patronize you or not? If you have good values, or special bargains, how do they know about it? A great many of them rarely ever pass your store. The great majority that pass give you only a glance. You are not getting their business, having done nothing to interest them."

"Then I go on," he continued "to say there are just three ways to get some of this trade now slipping past them. They can send around solicitors from door to door, distribute circulars or hand bills, or advertise in newspapers. The newspaper notice is read carefully, where a solicitor is summarily turned down, and besides the advertising is twenty times cheaper than canvassing. And hand bills are chucked into the waste baskets, while newspapers are read. If you don't care to use any of these methods, tell them most of the people of this town will continue to pass by without knowing anything about your store."

These remarks fit here as well as in the town where they were made. A merchant must tell the public about his goods in order to get trade.

EXTRA SESSION

To Pass Tax Measure. No Hope for a General Classification Bill at the Present Time.

Frankfort.—Despairing of passing a classification bill at this session of the Legislature the leading members of the House Committee on Revenue and Taxation have begun work on another measure which can be passed without affecting the laws authorized under the new constitutional amendment. This is a bill to make uniform the basis of assessment of real property thruout the State. The measure as contemplated is well within the power of the Legislature to pass, as it does not necessitate another constitutional amendment.

The men at work on this bill are William A. Perry, Louisville; William A. Price, Covington, and Reuben T. Hutchcraft, Jr., Paris. Perry is chairman of the committee and all are generally regarded as well informed on the tax question.

The bill contemplates an increase in the powers of the State Board of Equalization to enable it to enforce the manner of assessment determined by it to apply to the entire State. The report of the Tax Commission in 1911 showed that real estate in Kentucky was assessed at rates varying from 30 per cent of its true value in Green county to eighty per cent of its true value in Jackson county. Jefferson county real property is assessed at about 60 per cent of its value, according to this report, and the average of the State is about 52 per cent. The purpose of the act is to remove these inequalities.

A feature of the bill will be a rement for an annual conference of the 120 county assessors with the Board of Equalization. The conditions in the State will be gone into at these meetings and from this information it is likely that the State Board will fix the basis to be correct. The assessors will be expected to follow this plan, but if they deviate the board will have the power to enforce it.

About $4,000,000 of the State's taxes each year are from real property. If, as the Constitution provides, this property were assessed at full value it would bring the State almost 8,000,000 in taxes. The proposed law would have the board make its changes gradual. The probabilities are that a uniform plan of assessing at 60 per cent of the full value would be the aim. This would increase the annual revenue to the State by $320,000. This rate would reduce the taxes in a number of counties and would increase it in others, but would make it the same all over the State. A move in this direction is regarded as one of the biggest steps in securing quality of taxation in the State.

Another bill under consideration would require the naming of the actual consideration involved in property trasfer, in each deed. It is contended that the only reason for the phrase "$1 and other valuable consideration" in a deed is to enable the property to escape just taxation at the hands of the assessor. With the actual value of property stated in the deed, the task of the assessor in making out his property lists would be lightened each year.

The bill also includes new method of appealing from the county boards. The measure will be shown to Gov. A. O. Stanley when completed and if it meets with his approval will be pushed thru the Legislature.

An important innovation in the main measure is the provision for examination of assessors. This, it is hoped will eliminate incompetent county officials. The Board of Equalization will examine at a place convenient, any candidate for county assessor at least ninety days before the primary election is held. Failure to fail in his examination he cannot run for office. The assessor will not be permitted to accept any return unless it is sworn to. The assessor will be expected to have knowledge of the revenue and taxation laws and the general taxable values of his neighboring counties.

Raise Fruit Trees for Profit.

Fruit growing is one of the most pleasant occupations as well as profitable that man can be engaged in.

Many old fields can be turned in apple orchards and in a few years become paying investments. Orchards need not be planted upon the best land, but the soil must be cultivated and kept in a lively condition and the trees must be pruned and sprayed to make them grow in the right shape and be healthy. The climate and soil is well adapted for fruit growing in this county and state and there is no reason why the state should not supply all the peaches, apples, pears, cherries and other fruits needed.

Every farmer should put out at least one hundred trees of winter apples by the first of May and other fruit trees accordingly.—Owen County Democrat.

It's No Use.

Mark Twain once had a few words to say about prohibition:

"I am a friend of temperance, and want it to succeed, but I do not think prohibition is practicable. The Germans, you see prevent it. Look at them. They have just invented a method of making brandy out of saw dust. Now what chance will prohibition have when a man can take a paw and go out and get drunk with a fence rail? What is the good of prohibition if a man is able to make brandy mashes out of a shingle off of his roof, or if he can get the delerium tremens drinking the legs off the kitchen table?"

MAUD IS DEAD.

Her Owner Has Given Up Hope of Bryan's Becoming President.

Maud, aged 42, the famous mule owned by W. R. Berridge, of Petersburg, Ind., has been chloroformed by its owner. At the time Bryan made his first race for the presidency, Mr. Berridge was so confident that the Nebraskan would win that he prepared Maud for a long journey to Washington, where, after congratulating Mr. Bryan on his success, Mr. Berridge intended to present the animal to him. At that time Maud was 23 years old. Bryan was defeated, but Berridge was so confident in Bryan's ultimate success that he said he would keep the animal alive until Bryan became president of the U. S. Again in 1908 Maud was prepared for her trip to Washington. She was then 34 years of age, but hale and hearty. Not daunted by his second disappointment Berridge still had faith in his idol. When Bryan resigned from the cabinet, Maud began to fail rapidly. Everything possible was done for her but of no avail. Over her head now stands a market inscribed: "Here lies Maud. Gone, but not forgotten."—Harrodsburg Herald.

World-wide attention has been attracted to the assertion by Dr. Victor G. Heiser, former Director of Health in the Philippine Islands, that a cure at last has been found for leprosy. His report on the subject is in the current number of the N. Y., Medical Review.

Twenty-five lepers have been discharged as cured from the Philippine leper hospitals. Two hundred more, according to Dr. Heiser, are showing distinct signs of improvement. Five of the patients discharged as cured in 1913 have shown no signs of leprosy since then.

Dr. Heiser long has been recognized as an authority in the treatment of leprosy.

The visits of Charles Chaplin to a New York club in tow of Winfield Sheehan, a prominent member, and representative of William Fox ambitions, have set rumors flying thick and fast relative to new positions at fabulous terms made to him. One rumor is that Fox balked after offering Chaplin $1,000 a day, and another rumor is that Marcus Loew, a theatrical promoter, has offered him $500,000 a year, and will form a new company. These figures appear preposterous, but Essanay is credited with having made a profit of $1,250,000 out of Chaplin films, and are charged with holding so less than twenty Chaplin films ready for the opportune moment.

COMFORT IN NEGLIGEE

SOMETHING THAT EVERY WOMAN CAN APPRECIATE.

Design Given Here Can Be Used as a Morning Dress if So Desired—Looks Well With or Without Train.

Every woman knows the comfort of a well-made, attractive and yet loose and simple negligee. This design is one of the simplest possible for a negligee, which partakes of the nature of a morning dress, and can be worn as such no matter who unexpectedly calls. The top is a plain kimono top with loosely fitted sleeves, confined to the wrist by a very dainty cuff. The collar also takes away from the kimono idea and gives a dressy touch to the upper part of the garment. This negligee may be made with or without a short train, although a train on a short woman always gives her the appearance of greater height and grace. The best materials for making up this negligee are Japanese and Chinese cotton crepe, which are made as well in America as in the Orient. Printed challies and wash silks, and silk crepes are all admirable for making up simple negligees, because they all can be easily washed, without losing their color or shape.

The sash, which is worn with this pretty garment, can be passed through a strap at the back and not confined around the waist, except when one wishes to give the wrapper the appearance of a dress. Now that all dresses are wider than formerly, the writer would suggest adding an extra fold of the goods in the middle of the back when cutting out the pattern. This can be gathered to the upper portion, and in no way interfere with the general set of the design. A collar and cuff of plain color are attractive with net, or lingerie, or lace collar and cuff placed over the stationary one. This makes it possible to remove the white finishing touches and keep them always washed and fresh.

NEW BORDERS IN BLANKETS

Broad Floral Patterns Have Largely Taken the Place of Stripes—Silkoline Still Used.

The staple, cream-colored blanket with the broken stripe in pink or blue never loses its popularity. It wears well and cleans perfectly, is warm and fresh looking. This year sees a variation in this line of blankets. Broad floral borders are taking the place of the stripes. These borders are in various colors to suit the color scheme of the room.

If the blankets are beautiful the comfortables are exquisite. Lamb's wool is preferred to down as a filling. It is less expensive, too, while the weight and warmth are about the same. The most luxurious comfortables have coverings of richest brocades in dainty colorings with silk to match. The blues are extremely pretty, while the combination of tan and brown is most restful, and, of course, more practical than the daintier shades.

Sateen covers are so fine and soft that it is difficult to tell them from satin. Dainty allover designs on sateen, bordered with plain, are beautiful and very different from the old-time satoen comfortable.

Silkoline is still used for covers, usually one side plain, the other figured, the tufting of baby ribbon to match. These are cotton filled.

To bind the edges of a new comfortable with a strip of white lawn about four inches wide is a great protection.

Traveling Hint.

The small trunks devised for short motor trips have been taken up by others in addition to the motor woman and have led into the launching of a large variety of over-Sunday boxes, cleverly fitted up to take into small compass all one may need for the over-Sunday visit. Some of these have handles and at a pinch a man could carry one as hand baggage instead of checking it.

JUST ONE MINUTE LATE

By IZOLA FORRESTER.

All the way up the bay Gregory wondered if she was still alive. The wireless brief had reached him two days out from England and he had sent back word that he was already on the way. He had even half believed that very thing would serve to strengthen her, that he had started before she had sent for him. He had been four months in the prison camps before the exchange had been brought about. Probably she had believed he was dead. Nearly all the poor devils in his crowd had died sooner or later. And he had come out of it with a smashed arm that let him off for awhile from the game over yonder.

He wondered how Barbara had found out he was sailing on the Tavonia. He had only told Lester. Yet the message had been clear and potent: "Come before it is too late. Bab."

His arm pained him constantly, and through the long nights he lay in his berth trying to visualize Bab's face and find comfort from it. She had been such a tender little woman, after all her own personal trouble. The only kind thing Kenneth had ever done for her was to die. That had been four years ago, and he and Lester had looked after her interests since then. They had been partners before the war, and he was her brother.

The war had been a relief. At first they had gone over to serve in the Belgian commission. Lester had pulled himself together and got his grip back driving an ambulance there, and he himself had slipped into the Foreign Legion.

When the train pulled into the express station at Seventy-second street he almost stumbled from the car. Geo, but everything looked good after those months in Belgium. He crossed the street and went toward her home in the big apartment building on Central Park West. His fingers were a bit unsteady as he found the bell and pressed it. The door clicked and he went upstairs. And on his way a man passed him going down.

Gregory noticed him vaguely. He was short and stocky and looked prosperous. Even to a casual observer he appeared happy. And as he started past him the man stopped short, took another look at him and called: "Hello, there, Greg!"

It was Stephens, his lawyer, good old Steve who had stood back of him over and over again, about the only friend he had had left after the business had gone to the merry puppy dogs. Yet all he could do was grip his hand and ask if Bab were still alive.

"Still alive? What do you mean, old man? Of course, she's alive, but you're one minute too late. She's done it."

"Done what? Married again?"

"Lord, no. Go upstairs and find out. God bless you both. Wonderful woman, Greg. See you later."

Gregory climbed the last flight and she opened the door herself. Not a word did she speak, only held out her arms to him, and somehow he found that it was his head which lay on her shoulder and he was holding her to him in dumb joy.

"I met Stephens. He said I was too late," he said finally when they were in her library.

"You are. I signed the papers myself. Listen and don't scold me. Lester wrote when you got back to England and kept me posted, but he said he thought you'd go back to France if your arm was well enough, and I think you've done quite enough for them aircady. I need a little of you, you know. So I sent the wireless to head you off, and, anyway, we needed you terribly. You see, I found out after you had been captured all about Lester's trouble and why my balance was safe and yours had gone with him. It had been splendid of you to back him in all his queer ideas anyway, so I went out one day to Jersey and looked over the old factory just as you had left it. You know I studied chemistry with Lester before I was married and it all interested me so. So I just took out part of my money and started in a small way. I told Mr. Stephens what I wanted to do, and he helped me, but I said it was your money. Well, I won out, and began making copper cylinders just as you had intended. So, I—I—I just paid off the mortgage myself. Mr. Stephens has the check. I think I'm even with you now. It's all over there ready for you to go back to."

Gregory was holding her in his good arm, close to him, his face pressed to her hair.

"Oh, you women, you women who are the restorers!" he said.

To Make Metallic Magnesium.

A factory has been established at Niagara Falls for the manufacture of metallic magnesium, which is the lightest metal known, and is said to have many qualities superior to aluminum. The output of the factory has been contracted for by the French government, until the end of the war, the material to be made use of in the manufacture of aeroplane parts. After the demand for this purpose has ceased the company will engage in the manufacture of household utensils, and some interesting novelties will be brought out, it is said.

The Aspect.

"My family has a very high descept."

"Yes, I understand it took a big tumble."

RAISE TAX RATE

Urged by Bankers to Lift The State Out of Debt.

Bond Issue Approved As Best Solution to Put the State On a Cash Basis.

Stanley Hears that Kentuckians Are Becoming Tired of Long Wrangle Over Prohibition.

Lexington, Feb. 19.—The sentiment of a committee of ten prominent bankers who conferred with Governor A. O. Stanley, Lieutenant Governor James D. Black, Auditor Robert L. Greene and Treasurer Sherman Goodpaster, after a dinner at the Executive Mansion Thursday evening, was that Kentucky's floating indebtedness of approximately $3,000,000 should be bonded; an increase of approximately 5 per cent on the $100 be made in the tax rate to lift this debt and put the state on a cash basis, and a new taxation and revenue law enacted at a special session of the General Assembly called for that purpose solely.

These gentlemen also gave their indorsement to the plan, proposed in a bill drafted by Attorney-General M. M. Logan and Richard C. Stoll, and introduced in the Senate and House Wednesday, to refund the outstanding warrants which represent the deficit cumulative under the previous administration, but they suggested several amendments calculated to make the measure more effective and better understood.

The principal feature of the bill are the provision under which the state's Sinking Fund Commission fixes the date of maturity and arranges the rate of interest according to the price of money at the time of issue of the warrants, and the further specification that such warrants shall be negotiable instruments.

This law would serve to give the commonwealth temporary relief and aid in the maintenance of its integrity until a plan for eliminating the debt can be devised. It was the sense of the conference that the Court of Appeals should pass upon the measure as early as possible.

If the General Assembly so resolves, the question of a bond issue can be submitted at the next November election for the approval or disapproval of the people. The bankers were of the opinion the people would approve of it. John W. Barr, Louisville, a bright light in Kentucky's financial world proposed the bond issue as the most sensible and reasonable solution of the problem and ventured the opinion it would meet with no effective opposition from any quarter. Others, Democrats and Republicans, alike, were of the opinion the leaders of both parties would support such a proposal.

"Properly it is not a political question," said Mr. Barr. "It is a business question in which all of the people are concerned, and by which all of the people are affected. The question of responsibility for this debt should not enter into the discussion. The debt has been created by duly accredited representatives of the people, and therefore it is the people's debt irrespective of what their political affiliations may be, and it is up to the people to pay their debts in the manner best suiting their idea and the ideas of their creditors. A bond issue is the surest and easiest method."

Mr. W. T. Tandy, Hopkinsville, read statistics showing the bonded indebtedness and tax rates of several of the states, and by comparison Kentucky showed up in a very favorable light.

Mr. W. C. Montgomery, Elizabethtown, who, in addition to being a banker, is a member of the State Board of Election Commissioners and a strong friend of Senator J. C. W. Beckham, advised Governor Stanley that he should, from a political point of view especially, take action this year to wipe out the deficit. "That debt was not incurred during your administration," said he, "but unless you can make progress in the direction of its retirement it will become your debt."

Messrs. C. N. Manning and J. William Stoll, two of Lexington's keenest financiers, were in favor of the bond issue and expressed belief the people would approve the plan. Former Congressman James N. Kehoe, who is one of the leading bankers at Maysville, spoke at some length upon the advisability of making no attempt to put through a new general revenue and taxation law at the present session, which has only 20 days remaining.

Governor Stanley recounted to the bankers the many manifest efforts that had been made during the two thirds of the session already spent to obstruct remedial and constructive legislation; told of the injection of the state-wide prohibition question which had been put aside in both of the state conventions last year and approval of the county unit law written into the Democratic and Republican platforms; pictured the celerity with which the drys in the Senate and the House responded in fear and trembling at the crack of the whip of the master political prohibitionist and at the don't-you-dare-do otherwise looks and signals from preachers and women who had packed the galleries from day to day; expressed the belief that his statement of views had been deliberately distorted, especially as to the co-forcement of the law requiring saloons to close on Sunday and at other times and likewise to law prohibiting the sale of liquor in dry territory.

"I have said time upon time that I am so pronouncedly opposed to the violation of the law requiring saloons to close on Sunday that I would, were it in my power so to do, revoke the license of every offender and prevent his again engaging in the business," said the Governor. "I am so opposed to violation of the law against selling liquor in dry territory that I have refused to pardon a bootlegger who has been represented to me as about to die in jail."

The Governor asked the bankers if they believe the people of Kentucky are in favor of having the time of the General Assembly taken up with wrangles over the liquor question and its outcroppings such as the chambermaid incident, rather than see the body deliberate in an orderly manner upon matters which would make for better business and greater development of the state's vast resources and produce peace and happiness in the homes.

The bankers told the Governor that the solid, thinking business people of the Commonwealth are thoroughly disgusted at the proceedings of the General Assembly in this respect and that they would not be long in telling the members so. They advised Governor Stanley to go before the General Assembly and make an address in keeping with the thoughts he had just presented to them, and they guaranteed him he would have the business people of the state standing solidly to back him up.

During the conversation Mr. Montgomery said that in Hardin county the people were not expecting the question of state-wide prohibition to be brought up at this session of the Legislature and they were surprised when an effort was made to pass the submission bill through the Senate and more surprised when it was dragged out in the House after it had been defeated in the Senate.

The Governor's attitude with reference to the closing of the saloons in Covington, Newport and other cities on Sunday, he said, is not known to the people in his section. They have the opinion that the Governor is in favor of Sunday selling and drinking, regardless of the law.

The impression the writer got from what these men said and other men have said and are saying is that the political prohibitionists are going to find they have overplayed themselves, so to speak, and when some of the ambitious ones who have not had their ears to the ground attempt to go further along the pathway that leads to public preferment they will encounter the "nothing doing" sign.

Attorney General on Sunday Closing Bill.

"The extreme prohibitionists in the Legislature apparently are opposed to any legislation which will permit the Governor to see that the law is enforced against the saloon keepers who flagrantly violate the law by keeping open on Sunday, and I am persuaded that these members do not want any legislation that would enable the Governor to enforce the law, as it would prove the falsity of the statements which they have repeatedly made that the Governor was opposed to such legislation and incidentally would take from them their chief argument in favor of State-wide prohibition.

"I have always been identified with those who are known as 'drys,' and this bill was prepared by me without conference with any person except Dr. I. C. Hunt, of Covington, who represented the Ministerial Association and two or three members of the Legislature.

"There is no interference with local self-government, as the officers must fail to do their duty and the citizen must fail to do his duty before any appeal can be made to the Governor. The appeal to the Governor is the last resort under the provisions of this bill.

ATTY. GENERAL LOGAN."

Life In The Trenches.

The trench warfare in France has been responsible for some remarkable horrors. There have been plagues of bloated flies which are produced in millions by a few hours' sunshine. In some districts, too, there have been plagues of voles, due no doubt to the non-cultivation of the fields, which fall into the trenches by scores, are trampled under foot by the men and are then devoured by dreadful beetles. To these plagues has now succeeded one of giant rats, some having been measured as nearly two feet in length from tip of nose to end of tail and no agouti which is proportional. To combat these, ferrets are now being sent out in hundreds from England, with the result that the price of ferrets has considerably risen everywhere, while in some places they are not procurable at all. The men consider it great sport, and a bag of over 100 rats has been made in an afternoon. The cold in the trenches has not been so great this winter as that which was encountered last year, and if it should come later, the troops are probably better prepared to meet it; but the wet and mud have been terrible, the rain especially being heavy and constant.—Army and Navy Journal.

Hopkinsville—The Highland Chapel church bell is back. It was taken several days ago, in broad open daylight, by two well-dressed men driving in a buggy. It occurred in the darkest hours of the night, and no one, except one man who lives close by the church and claims to have heard a bell tap a few times at 2 o'clock in the morning, had any inkling of its return until they saw it after getting out of doors after sunup.

Fighting A La Bowie.

One of the developments of the trench warfare in Northern France has been the employment of dirks as weapons for offensive use at close quarters. In narrow traverses and parallels, where there is not room to swing a bayonet-tipped rifle, the tactics of our own Colonel Bowie have been found well adapted to the needs of the moment. There was at first much objection to the idea among British soldiers, who did not regard it as a "sporting" proposition and stigmatized it as "assassination," but this first feeling has since been overcome. The problem confronted by the French and British military authorities now is the procurement of an adequate supply of knives and dirks. Most of those on the market have proved too flimsy for the vicious usage demanded in trench fighting. It would seem as if the hunting knife, widely known in this country, would amply fill the requirements of the case. For a time the French tried a knife devised for a thrusting blow, held by a loop handle that passed around the knuckles; but a few experiments developed that a cutting edge and some length of blade were necessary as well as a sharp point. The dirks so far used seem to be from six inches to a foot in length. The idea is traceable to the Ghurkas, of the Indian Army Corps, whose kukris were employed with savage effect in the few chances the Indians had at the close order fighting they prefer. It is suggested that the dirks should be kept in leather sheaths slung under the soldier's armpits.—Army and Navy Journal.

Lexington—71 Berkshire hogs were sold under the hammer at Elmendorf yesterday afternoon for $3,500. The prices paid for the swine ranged from $25 to $187.50 a head.

NOTICE.

We, the undersigned, owners and tenants in charge of land bordering on the Ohio river at Rabbit Hash, Boone county, Kentucky, hereby give notice that all persons are forbidden to land or tie up any wreckage of any kind on or in front of our land without our consent.

We further give notice that all persons are forbidden to take anything out of any drift pile that may lodge on or in front of our land without our consent.

The courts have decided that the laws of Kentucky give us ownership to such drift piles, and as we have to clean them off of our land year after year, we desire the benefit of anything of value they may contain, and any person distributing them will be prosecuted:

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use are in each box of Barbo Compound. It gradually darken streaked, faded hair, and promotes a luxuriant growth. It is excellent for fadding hair and will keep the hair and scalp in a healthy condition. Sold by druggists, or sent by parcel post on receipt of price, 50c and $1.00 per box. Barbo Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.

The ordination of Rev. Rivolette F. DeMoisey to the ministry of the Baptist church last Tuesday at the Walton Baptist church was a very impressive affair and was largely attended by the many friends of Bro. DeMoisey. The services lasted all day and were greatly enjoyed. A fine dinner was spread at the noon hour and its excellency was fully tested by the appetites of the large number who partook of the viands, and yet as many more could have been fed.

Mrs. Anna Stapleton entertained with a delightful social party last Monday night at her hospitable home about two miles west of Walton in honor of her son Joseph's twenty-first birthday anniversary, and a large number of his many friends attended and enjoyed the festivities to their heart's content. His sister Miss Elizabeth Stapleton who is employed as a stenographer by the Heinz Coffee Co., Cincinnati, was in attendance. Dancing, music and nice refreshments were part of the enjoyable features.

Taking Gasoline Out of Gas

Out in Pennsylvania a company has erected a plant for the extraction of the gasoline from natural gas and has contracted for the gas from about 400 wells. The wells are small, the total production being less than a million cubic feet a day, but they have been producing for a long time and as the gas comes from a sand 100 ft. in thickness their life is said to be good for an indefinite time.

The gasoline company puts the gas through its compressers and then sells it to a large factory nearby, the taking out of the gasoline not injuring the gas in any way for fuel. The gas is put under 300 pounds pressure to the square inch, which forces out the gasoline, which is carried into the tanks and blended with naptha, rendering the gasoline safe to ship, as without this blending it would be as dangerous as nitrogly cerine owing to its high gravity.

The shipment of gasoline from the plant is running about 120,000 gallons a month and ten tank cars are required to care for the production. The same company also has put in a high-pressure compressor at the plant, which will be used in compressing the natural gas into steel tanks under 800 pounds pressure. It is planned to sell this compressed gas in the same manner as Blau gas or Pintsch gas is now sold.

Confederates Passing Away

The Confederate pension roll has been reduced by death in the past three years from a total of 3,479 to 2,984, notwithstanding 46 names, mostly of widows, added since the quarterly distribution in November. During the past three months the loss by death has been almost one a day. Since May, 1912, when the first application was filed, up to the first of the year 443 have died, 326 soldiers and 117 widows, more than 12 per cent and the majority have died in the last year. Fifty-two have been stricken from the roll for other reasons.

Capt. W. J. Stone, Pension Commissioner, said the work of the office shows no dimunition because of these constant changes occasioned by deaths or removals, and the applications of widows, but accessions do not make up for the inroads by death, and he believes the list will continue to grow smaller. The quarterly distribution was due Tuesday. Treasurer Goodpaster said the pensioners will be paid in cash. The total distribution will be more than $190,000 for the quarter, of which $82,720 goes to those on the roll before last November.

Mrs. J. H. Mason

Emma Grimsley Mason born in 1840 in Boone county, Ky., died February 20, 1916, in her 76th year at her home near Big Bone church.

She was the only daughter of John B. and Emma Grimsley. She had three brothers, Russell, Geo. and W. W. Grimsley, the latter only surviving her.

She married John H. Mason in 1889, and spent all her married life in the home where she died.

Her life was an open book in the community in which she lived for more than a quarter of a century and needs no comment.

The funeral services were conducted Tuesday at Big Bone church by Rev. Maddox, after which the remains were interred in the family lot in the church cemetery.

W. W. Grimsley, the surviving brother, is the only one of five out of seventy of the Confederate army, of Company F., Clook's regiment in Major's command.

Card of Thanks—I hereby extend my heartfelt thanks to my friends for their kindness and attention during the illness and following the death of my dearly beloved wife; also thank Rev. Maddox for his consoling discourse, and undertaker C. Scott Chambers for the manner in which he conducted the funeral.

J. H. MASON.

Educating Away From The Country.

On a recent visit to a typical rural school in one of our Georgia counties we inquired from the two scores of children present how many lived on the farm, and received the replay that over two-thirds of the children in this school came from farm homes. We then inquired how many wished to remain on the farm; not one single hand went up. The next inquiry directed to the children was, "Why do you not wish to remain on the farm when you grow up?" And the girls and boys were frank in their answers: "Too much work and too little money; too much work and too little play; we must go to town to do the big things; only the stupid children and those who cannot get away remain on the farm."

We then asked how many of the boys and girls owned chickens, pigs, calves, gardens, flowers, playhouses, books and other good things on the farm that one cannot get in the town. Only one or two hands responded to this inquiry. Around the school house there was mud and gullies, with no flowers, no walks, no improvements, no gardens. The teacher was pointing the children away from the land and the greatest opportunity which could come to American boys and girls.

Two questions for the school to consider are: What will become of the country if all the boys and girls go to town? Second, what will become of the country if all the best boys and girls go to town? And meantime what will become of the nation and the boys and girls themselves?—Wesleyan Advocate.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOL. XXXXI. Established 1875. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1916. $1.50 Per Year. NO. 23

Sold His Store

W. L. Kirkpatrick has sold his grocery and meat business to Lester Gully, who resides on the J. B. Rouse place out on the Florence pike. The invoice of the stock consisting of groceries, hard ware, home-cured meat and half a dozen soforths, began yesterday. Mr. Gully became the owner of the stock of goods and will rent the store building and large meat house. Mr. Kirkpatrick has built up a large trade, nogo of his stock being shopworn, and it will put the new owner in a fine shape to make nice money as he has for some time been covering a couple of country huckster routes that will add materially to his store's out put. Elmer Kirkpatrick, who has been in the employ of his brother ever since he began selling goods, has been employed by Mr. Gully as his assistant.

Mrs. Hiram Underhill Dead.

Elizabeth Beemon was born in Boone county, Ky., in the year 1840. Second child of 10 children born to Abel and Nancy Beemon; but two survive her, the others being called away at different ages.

She was married to Hiram C. Underhill in her Kentucky home in 1876. Came at once to Missouri and made her home on the farm where she died Feb. 23, 1916.

Mrs. Underhill united with Bethlehem Baptist church Feb. 14, 1879 during a meeting conducted by Rev. B. F. Hixson, pastor of the church at that time.

Funeral services will be held at Bethlehem church this morning at 11 o'clock, Rev. S. P. Gott officiating.—Monroe City, Mo., Democrat.

A Handsome Publication.

The handsomest publication that has come to the Recorder's desk in a long time is the annual edition of the Tampa, Florida, Tribune's Development Year Book. It contains 148 pages which treat by pen and splendid halftones of the numerous attractions and advantages of South Florida. It carries pictures of numerous splendid groves, handsomely equipped resorts as well as those of many of the States most prominent men. The Year Book is a great advertisement for the Tribune and South Florida.

A Good Sale

A large crowd attended the sale of Ben Hensley down on Woolper creek last Thursday and good prices prevailed. Following are some of the prices obtained:

Ewes and lambs $12.00.
Thirteen 100 pounds hogs $89.
Cows $43 to $60.
Chickens 16 cents pound.
Turkeys 24 cents pound.

Mr. Hensley gave the crowd a nice lunch and the people reciprocated by bidding freely.

Too Much Scrapping

The fight over the whisky question will necessitate the calling of a special session of the General Assembly to provide desired legislation in regard to the State's revenue system. An extra session of the legislature will cost the State not less than $100,000, and this because some of the members refused to abide by the platform of their party declaring in favor of the county unit.

Will Have a Public Sale

John W. Kelly, from down on Woolper creek, was in Burlington, Monday, to have advertised a sale of livestock, crop and farming implements for the 7th inst. The advertisement appears in another column. Mr. Kelly is a most excellent citizen and his return to his former home in Indiana, will be regretted by all who formed his acquaintance while a citizen of the county.

Bought Another Fine Hog

W. M. Balsley, of Francesville, received, recently, from the celebrated H. Fezenmyer, Claranda, Iowa, a big type gilt, "Iowa Maid," by "A Wonder," and "Big Joe" (Fez.). He has one of the advertised herds in the United States, breeding of Fezenmyer, Charters, Pfanders and Gitters. A male heads his heard that makes tracks like a steer.

A Valuable Brood Mare

Bert Sullivan sold to W. F. Bradford, who lives on the pike between Burlington and Florence, a pair of four and five year old mare mules for $350. From the mother of these mules Mr. Sullivan has in the past four years sold mules to the amount of $410 and has one left at home for which he has refused $175. This is doing pretty well, aint it?

They Want a Showing Made

The Republican county convention held at the court house last Saturday afternoon requested the proper authorities to have published statements showing how the money is disposed of that goes into the county school and the county road departments. This is information to which the taxpayers of the county are entitled.

Small Attendance at Convention

The Republican county convention held at the court house last Saturday afternoon was not largely attended, Walton and Big Bone precincts only having small delegations in attendance, the large number of those present residing in the Burlington precinct.

A Mysterious Drowning.

Clarence James, more familiarly known as "Humpy" James, was drowned in the Ohio river near Split Rock on Monday evening of last week, and from what information in regard to the drowning can be gathered surrounds it with mystery.

James was bringing Wood McGuire and one of his brothers from Aurora in a borrowed skiff. The parties left Aurora at four o'clock that afternoon and it took them until seven that evening to make the trip to the point where the McGuires wanted to land, when the distance should have been covered in about 35 minutes. Why it took four hours to make a 35 minute trip is one of the circumstances connected with the affair that has not been explained, and there are various reports circulating as to what the McGuires have told in regard to the drowning.

Webster Rogers, who lives near the river and happened to be on the river bank just before the skiff landed some distance below him says he heard a splash in the water at the skiff, and one of the McGuires was heard to ask:

"Can you touch bottom, Humpy?"

Humpy answered, "I can not."

Shortly after one of the McGuires again asked, "can you touch bottom, yet Humpy?"

The answer came back, "No, I am gone."

The skiff was landed some distance below where Mr Rogers heard the conversation, and not being tied it floated off and was caught below Patriot, Ind., the rope used for tying the skiff lying in a coil in the boat, showing there had been no effort made to secure it when the McGuires left it.

One or two parties above Split Rock report that the men in the skiff were quarreling when they heard them, one of the men on the shore calling to them to "cut that out."

Fifty dollars reward has been offered for the recovery of the body of James.

James at one time lived in the neighborhood of Belleview.

The Tide of Travel to Florida.

In the resorts of Florida on both the East Coast and the West Coast and in the interior of the State are gathered fully 80,000 visitors from other States of the Union and from Canada.

Railway and steamship companies report that the greatest number of tourists and other visitors to Florida that has ever been transported by them have been carried into Florida this winter.

The travel for the last two weeks has been especially heavy; many of the popular trains being run in four sections daily during that period, and it is thought that the travel from the North to Florida will continue very heavy up to March 15th.

All along the East Coast below St. Augustine the hotels have been unable to provide sleeping accommodations for the numerous persons applying, and hundreds of rooms in private dwellings have been utilized to accommodate those whom the hotels were compelled to turn away for the lack of space.

Floriday has never before enjoyed such business prosperity as is now witnessed throughout the State in every section of it.

Automobiles by the thousands from the States to the north of Peninsular are carrying their full capacity of tourists over the splendid roads which the State now possesses, while house-boats, cruisers and other motor boats are laden with passengers and are traversing every nook and corner of the State's beautiful and delightful waterways.

Real estate dealers report numerous sales of lands to actual settlers and the entire business atmosphere of the States is now that of the bustling busy North and West and East.

There is not a trace of the "mañana" of the Spaniards left now in Florida, and there is not a state in the Union that can show for this present decade such a large percentage of gain in population as can the State of Flowers, which Ponce de Leon made known to the world.

The stoppage of travel to Europe, Asia and Africa has concentrated in Florida the "birds of passage," and, combined with those who each winter seek a mild climate, the state is fairly swarming with visitors who are greatly enjoying the delights of the semi-tropical state. The majority of the industries of the state were never so active as now, and the productions of the state never so diversified as at this present time.

The soil of the greater part of the state has proved marvelously fertile, and the extensive and systematic drainage operations carried on for so many years have reached a stage that has proved their immense utility, and have redeemed and made valuable millions of acres of land useless for agricultural purposes even five years ago.

Florida is making such progress in agriculture, manufacturing and commerce that it is even exceeding in actual financial results the word painting and the imagery of the blue sky artists who 20 years ago were so active in its praises and so exuberant in their hopes

HARMFUL LITTLE PEST

Clover Louse Plays Havoc With Crops in the East.

Big, Green, Long-Legged Insect Has Ruined Millions of Dollars' Worth of Crops—Alfalfa Seems to Be Immune.

(By. J. W. FOLSOM, Illinois.)

The clover louse was, in all probability, introduced with clover and peas from Europe, where it is widely distributed and common. It is chiefly a pest on peas in the eastern part of the United States. In the middle and western states it is a pest on clover.

a b c

Ladybird Beetle—a, Larvae; b, Empty Pupal Skin; c, Beetle—One of the Most Efficient of the Insect Enemies of the Clover Louse.

The aphid has done immense damage to peas and clovers. It affects especially leguminous plants, but numbers also among its food plants many weeds. The more important of its food plants are red clover, crimson clover, field pea, sweet pea, vetches (known also as "tares"), beets, lettuce, shepherd's purse, and nettle and other weeds. Alfalfa seems to be immune from attack. Thirty sweeps of the net in red clover yielded 3,000 of the aphids, while the same number of similar sweeps in an adjoining field of alfalfa gave only 30. On soy beans growing next to heavily infested clover, not a single louse was found.

Where peas are grown the aphid winters in a field of clover or on weeds (as a wingless female or as an egg), and in spring is confined to these until the peas start to grow, and then it does not get to the early varieties, though it devastates the late-sown peas. The first aphids select the youngest leaves and shoots, but eventually the lice cover the entire plant and sap out its life, rendering it unfit even for fodder.

Several years ago, in Wisconsin, the louse was noticed in a 500-acre field of peas about July 20; in less than a week all the plants were dead and brown. In Maryland the louse destroyed peas valued at $3,000,000 in one year.

The most important enemy of this louse is a common fungus, Empusa aphidis. It is widespread in the United States and Canada, and affects a great variety of aphids. It does not appear in dry weather but is common after a rain or two at any time during the growing season, but is most abundant under the combined influences of moisture and warmth. Then it sweeps off myriads of aphids.

The clover louse is affected directly or indirectly by a large number of insects, about thirty-three in all. The most important of these appears to be the ladybird beetle. The larvae of this insect destroy immense numbers of these aphids.

TREATING WHEAT FOR SMUT

Grain Soaked for Twelve Hours in Solution of Copper Sulphate and Water Is Effective.

The copper sulphate or "blue vitriol" method of treating wheat for smut is to dissolve one pound of copper sulphate in each 25 gallons of water used in the treatment and soak the grain 12 hours in this solution, stirring it occasionally, after which it is immersed for a few minutes in lime water made by adding ten gallons of water to one pound of fresh slaked lime. This last treatment is given to avoid injuring the power of germination of the grain.

Care for Young Animals.

The colts and calves are worth good money. It is up to the owner to make them worth the best money possible. They should not stop growing. Good shelter and feed will bring good returns.

NOVELTY IN MILLINERY

One of the real novelties in millinery for this season is a combination "tam" and cap with a piquant visor reminding one very much of the military fatigue cap. The material use in the model is of black hatters' plush. The crown is full and gathered. Gray satin binding is used effectively as a trimming. A gray satin ribbon passing through a diamond-shaped steel cut buckle sets off the hat very effectively. The visor of the cap, coming well down over the eyes, is edged with gray satin binding. For motor wear this combination hat is unexcelled.

GOOD CRIB FOR THE BABY

Clothes Basket Inexpensive and Makes Ideal Sleeping Place for Small Ruler of the Household.

If you do not want to go to the expense of a bassinet that baby will soon outgrow it is a good idea to utilize an ordinary clothes basket, which may be turned over to its original use when baby is ready for a crib. It pays to get a good quality wicker, for if handles give away the contents will come to grief. Select a good size, too, large enough to accommodate an ordinary bed pillow snugly fitted in for a mattress. The sides should rise high enough above the pillow on the sides to keep Master Baby safely ensconced.

Line the basket with double layers of cotton wadding and after basting this in place cover it with pink, blue or white satin or cambric lining. The bottom of the basket should be put in last to cover the rough edges of the sides. Now the basket is ready for the third and last covering, which may be sheer muslin or point d'esprit or plain net shirred with a heading along the top to hide the top edge of the basket. It is a little troublesome to stitch this into place, but you soon learn to find the spaces in the woven wicker, and heavy thread and a carpet needle will do the rest.

The pillow should have its ordinary white linen or cotton slip, which can be removed every day when the pillow is lifted out to air. A rubber and quilted mat will protect the pillow, and all can be frequently lifted and removed. The advantage of such basket is that the baby is protected from draft, and yet the basket is easily carried from one room to another or to the porch if necessary. The outside of the basket is better left uncovered because it would soon get musty and dirty from usage, and the heavy willow is sufficiently ornamental in itself. If desired it can be painted white.

GARMENT WILL BE WELCOMED

New Long Coat One of the Latest Caprices of Fashion That Is Sure to "Catch On."

It is here and as a practical garment only those who have elected to wear the one-piece frock know the comfort of a coat that will entirely cover the frock beneath. With the new lines that enter into the fashions the long coat presents an alluring appeal. Cailiot shows a blue serge redingote that is trimmed with tan cloth. Revers that reach from chin to the bottom of the coat's skirt of the contrasting material and the manner in which the skirt is attached to the bodice of the coat are the newest features. The revers on one side shows buttons; the other, buttonholes. The bodice boasts a patent leather belt which runs under the revers and portions of the bodice to which is attached the skirt in pipelike plaits that extend away from the figure. The bodice is cut with a yoke portion; the sleeves are long and set in at the natural arm holes.

DICTATES OF FASHION

Checked woolens are used a good deal with plain velvets.

Revers of dark cloth cloaks are often lined with ivory white satin.

The latest thing is a round, full waist line marked by a piped cording.

Gilt slippers and gold toned stockings will be worn to winter dances.

Extremely full, short basques are seen on coats with tight fitting backs.

The most original model perhaps suited for evening is the Watteau coat, with a ruche of white ribbon at the neck and hem made very full at the edge.

PEGGY'S MR. HUSH

By JANE OSBORN.

There had been but one reason for Vera Malmstone's hesitation in accepting her sister's invitation to come and take care of the "incorrigible Peggy" while she and her husband went to the exposition.

"Of course, I know you have not wanted to visit us since your break with Jimmy next door," her sister had written. "You probably feel that he would think you were putting yourself in a position to make up. But three years has made a big difference. I know you have completely forgotten him and he is quite an old bachelor, and I am sure he won't be at home much of the time. So please do come. Little Peggy is not safe to be left alone with the nurse."

So Vera had packed her trunks and gone to take care of Peggy. It was hard, very hard, for her to revisit the scenes of her acquaintance with James Brown, and as she actually arrived on the scene she realized that she had not forgotten the episode so completely as she had hoped.

It was a week after her sister's departure and Vera had had little time for reverie. For she had discovered that the care of the charming child Peggy was enough to keep any grown woman's mind occupied during waking hours.

She was sitting in the library of the old city house, reading by the subdued light of the afternoon sun shaded by the soft silk hangings at the windows.

"Lend me a 'raser, Aunt Vera?" Peggy was sitting on the floor at her aunt's feet leaning over her pad.

Vera tossed a rubber-topped pencil down to the child.

"Muvver doesn't let me have 'rasers any more," Peggy said smiling. "That's cause I ate a needed rubber one day. You know about needed rubbers, Aunt Vera? I like to eat rubbers."

Vera read on without making any comment.

"I am drawing you a picture, Aunt Vera, a picture of Mr. Hush. That's what I call him because every time I spoke about the people next door muvver just said 'hush.' And he is the nicest man—nicer than anyone in the world but you, Aunt Vera. That's why I am drawing you a picture of him. He's just like any other man, so I'll have to make him like the picture I did of father for you. Except Mr. Hush hasn't any prickly brush on his lip that bites you when he kisses you like father. He kissed me today when I was there. I asked him for two kisses so I could bring one with the cookie to Aunt Vera, and he said that you wouldn't take the kiss. Aunt Vera, do you think I am a good drawer? What's the matter? Don't you like the picture?"

Vera was leaning back in the chair, the book closed and her eyes lowered. For a minute she didn't know whether to laugh or to cry, but with a bound the incorrigible Peggy was in her lap with the picture she had drawn.

Vera collected herself and looked severe.

"Peggy Jones, I thought your mother said you never went to see the people in the house next door. Does nurse take you? How do you get in?"

"Oh, no, Aunt Vera, nurse docsn't take me. She doesn't know I go. I just crawl through under the wall at the back of the garden. But I don't say anything about it to muvver, cause nurse might 'ketch it' if I did and, besides, whenever I ask her about those people she says 'hush.'

"Say, Aunt Vera, that man hasn't got any little girls like me and he hasn't any lady in his house like muvver or anything. He says he is dreadfully lonesome. He says there was a lady once who was going to come and stay with him and play on his piano and sing to him and—and everything, but she got mad at him, she did, and now he is going to live alone all his life in his house, and he's such a nice man and maybe if you are a good auntie to me I'll take you in to see him some time before muvver gets back."

Vera was holding the incorrigible Peggy close to her, but as she listened to her story she kept her face turned away from the child.

"Say, Aunt Vera, is it most six o'clock? 'Cause I forgot to tell you that nice Mr. Hush said he was coming to see us when he came home from down town tonight. He said it would be six o'clock, but if I stayed up I could see him. He said he wanted to come to see my Aunt Vera only he was afraid she wouldn't let him. But I said you would. Now, Aunt Vera, don't tell him I ate the cookie he sent you."

Versatile Canadian Statesman.

Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, Canada's picturesque and efficient minister of militia, the results of whose untiring efforts for years past have been so manifest since the war began, has been in turn a schoolteacher, country editor, politician and soldier. Years ago he was professor of English in the Collegiate Institute of Toronto. The militia has long been his hobby. During the Boer war he obtained a commission, though his offer of a regiment was rejected.

The DAIRY FACTS

URGE CLEANLINESS IN DAIRY

Mechanical Milker Admits No Dust or Dirt, but Must Be Kept Scrupulously Clean.

Much is said of the cleanliness of milk. Most people like to use a pail in milking that has as small an opening as it is convenient to milk into. The mechanical milker has no opening that can admit dust or dirt into the milk except where the milk is taken into the tubes. These can be packed with clean cotton if necessary, thus preventing the entrance of dirt or dust.

But the milk taken into the machines may be contaminated by the dirt left in the machine from the former milking. This makes it imperative that the milker be well cared for.

The milk separator should receive no more careful cleansing than the milker. After milking it is a good plan to dip the teat cups in cool water and allow the machine to pump water through the tubes. All parts should be scrubbed with a brush and washing soda and then rinsed. The metal parts may be well sterilized with steam and the rubber parts kept suspended in a solution of 11 pounds of salt and five ounces of chloride of lime in 10 gallons of water. The solution will have to be changed every week, and it is well to put in an extra ounce of chloride of lime every other day.

When proper care is taken, extremely clean milk can be gotten with the milkers, some dairymen producing certified milk with them, but on the other hand, if no care is taken to keep the machine clean it will prove to be a collector of dirt.

DAIRYING ON BUSINESS BASIS

Farmers Must Use Milk Scales, Tester and Record Book—Keep Account With Each Cow.

In order to put dairying upon a business basis every farmer needs to use the milk scales, the tester and the record book. Farmers must come to this proposition and do a little simple bookkeeping to know where they are. Every successful business man has a ledger to guide him in his transactions.

Every dairyman needs to enter a separate account with each of his cows so that he may have an indicator to tell him at the end of the year just how much feed each has consumed, the amount of milk produced and the percentage it tests.

Too many farmers of this country are still keeping scrub cows, feeding and milking them twice each day, fourteen times each week and sixty times each month.

Place for the Fall Calf.

A clean, well-bedded place, well lighted and well ventilated, is important for the fall calf. The calf pen preferably should be on the south side of the barn and in a part of the barn where the temperature does not vary much, and where there is no direct draft.

Avoid Dairy Drudgery.

Do not make dairying or any other farm work a drudgery. Milking cows in the early morning, and late at night, and doing a full day's work in between during the day will eventually drive the boys to the cities, and the hired man will lose interest.

DAIRY FACTS

GUERNSEY GAINING IN FAVOR

Deep and Prolonged Milking Qualities Make This Type of Dairy Cow Valuable Acquisition.

The average Guernsey cow will weigh about 1,000 pounds, with the bulls weighing 200 to 300 pounds heavier, says the Agriculturist. The head of the Guernsey cow is long, with a slender neck. The body is large and deep, showing ample capacity for disposing of roughage. The flanks are thin. The muzzle of the Guernsey cow is usually small, curved and wavy and may show yellow at the base. One of the distinguishing characteristics of the Guernsey is the large secretion of yellow coloring matter in the skin, showing particularly where the hair is white, as around the ears and eyes and on the udder and flanks.

The Guernsey has no pronounced weak points. The addition of Guernsey blood in crossing with cows of mixed breeding will result in a higher milk flow and in a richer milk. The deep and prolonged milking qualities of the pure-bred Guernsey, together with the adaptability to the conditions of the average farm, make this type of dairy cow a formidable competitor to the breeds which have a wider and greater distribution. The production of milk that tests 4 per cent, and even 5 per cent, and sometimes 6 per cent, means much when taken in connection with the fact that the Guernsey is an economical producer. High production, low cost, high test, adaptability to average farm conditions, together with no pronounced weak points—these are the factors which make the Guernsey increasingly popular.

BEST TIME FOR THE CALVES

Autumn Is Favored on Account of Slack Work Around Farm—Danger of Scouring Is Less.

Calves may be reared better and more economically when they come in the autumn rather than in the spring and yet this style of breeding which had something of a vogue 20 years ago is still lagging. In the winter season the boys have ample time to attend to the calves and can give every attention to the amount of each kind of food required to keep them humping along.

When calves are raised essentially on skim milk and adjuncts, the chief danger is that they may be more or less affected with indigestion. Now when the calves are on dry food such as is given to them in the winter season this trouble is reduced to a minimum. If skim milk is fed in large quantities and some flaxseed meal is fed at the same time when the calves are on succulent pastures, it is almost impossible to prevent them from scouring.

In winter when on dry foods this danger is much less imminent. The calves may be carried through the winter in good form and they are vigorous animals, if properly fed, when the pastures are ready in the spring.

REMOVING ODORS FROM MILK

Federal Investigators Have Discovered Method to Remove Unpleasant Smells and Tastes.

A method has been discovered by the federal investigators for removing disagreeable odors and flavors from milk. The taste caused by cows eating wild onions or garlic can be removed by blowing filtered and washed air through the milk for thirty to sixty minutes, according to the strength of the flavor to be removed.

It is necessary to heat the milk to a temperature of 145 degrees, as air blown through cold milk in a similar manner does not remove the disagreeable flavor. It also has a tendency to turn the fat into butter. It was found that the onion flavor is removed more quickly when milk is heated to 160 degrees, but this tends to produce a cooked taste and also reduces the cream line. In the case of cream with flavors of this kind, the same method can be used, except that it requires a slightly longer treatment. The loss in evaporation by using this method amounts to two or three per cent.

Benefits of Silage.

The silo makes it possible to raise more feed and to keep more cows on the same acreage and substitutes certainty for uncertainty in the management of the herd to an extent impossible in any other way.

THE THANKSGIVING DINNER.

Every homekeeper delights in serving some novelty of dish or decoration for her Thanksgiving table. Each year in the shops will be found new favors or old ones with a new dress. Turkeys of papiermache, or of cardboard, holding nuts or bonbons. Marshmallow gobblers, browned in crumbs, may be used as cake ornaments or as favors on candy boxes. Some original touch which has been thought out by the hostess herself will mean much, for original ideas are things which take thought. Anyone with a little money may buy pretty things, but she who works out of her own supply something fetching is fully appreciated by her friends.

A fruit centerpiece is always pretty and is usually easy to arrange.

A basket of yellow flowers, like the small chrysanthemum, grown in our gardens, may be taken up in a pot and kept for Thanksgiving. The Roman hyacinth is another flower that may be grown for Thanksgiving.

When the price of a turkey is too much for the family to afford, try some substitutes. They cannot take the place of the time-honored turkey which we all enjoy, but when expense must be considered these dishes will be most satisfactory:

Braised Beef Tongue.—Wash the tongue well and put it into a kettle of fresh cold water, bring the water to a boil and let it simmer until the tongue is tender. Remove the skin carefully and lay the tongue in a pan surrounded by chopped carrots, celery, an onion and the liquor in which the tongue was cooked. Cover closely and bake an hour. Take out the tongue and put on a hot platter. Rub the vegetables through a sieve and add to the gravy. Season with salt, Worcestershire sauce and pepper.

A leg of pork, stuffed with a highly seasoned sage dressing and roasted, makes a fine dish. Add a little cider to the meat while basting. Serve with tart, baked apples.

The whole world will honor the statesman who lifts from it the intolerable burden of war.—J. G. Whittier.

AUTUMN MEATS.

Our first turkeys cost only the powder and shot to bring them down, but each year has put an added value on the famous bird until now we hardly know what their cost will be, but we can be reasonably sure that they will be unreasonable in price, so it may be necessary to look elsewhere for the Thanksgiving meat.

Roast Guinea Fowl.—In many markets these fowl are reasonable in price and quantity and make a most appetizing dish as it is as full of flavor as the most delicate turkey. Use any preferred stuffing. Rub the bird with olive oil, and dust with pepper and salt, sprinkle with flour, turn in a little boiling water and bake in a hot oven for an hour and a half, basting frequently with butter, water and a little lemon juice. While the bird is cooking simmer the giblets in water to cover. Remove the fowl from the pan, add a little minced onion and parsley and a tablespoonful of flour. When brown, add the chopped giblets and the water in which they were cooked. Served with cranberry jelly.

Mock Possum.—The cheaper cuts of fresh pork may be used for this dish. Put three pounds of pork through a meat chopper, add a teaspoonful each of chopped parsley, onion, sage, a sprinkling of pepper and salt. Soften three cupfuls of bread crumbs by covering them with hot milk; then squeeze dry and mix with the rest, adding two well beaten eggs. Shape in a loaf and bake for an hour. Then arrange around the loaf, halves of unpeeled apples, around these halves of parboiled sweet potatoes. Bake, basting with the gravy for another hour. Serve with the apples and potatoes on the platter.

Corned Beef.—Wrap a good fat piece of corned brisket in a cloth, cover with cold water and bring to the simmering point, cooking 20 minutes to the pound. When tender, lay out the cloth flat, cover with a board and weight. The next day lay on a platter and garnish with parsley or water cress.

Covington Sunday Closing Law

Out of the mass of confused and contradictory statements which one reads with respect to the efforts being made at Frankfort to enact a law which will cure the Sunday saloon evil in Covington and Newport it is difficult to find the true reason for the delay in perfecting this badly needed legislation.

It is possible, of course, that the men who are most active in seeking this remedial legislation, in their zeal and indignation, are insisting upon features in the law which might hamper the courts in their endeavors to enforce the statute, and yet it is not likely that men of their intelligence would persist in stubborn resistance to reasonable provisions in the bill if advised by lawyers in whom they had confidence.

One thing appears plain, and that is the saloon men and their retained attorneys are not overly desirous of seeing any sort of a law passed. Evidently they prefer to see the existing statute remain unchanged.

The Leader does not contend that the saloon men of Covington and Newport and their lawyers want to make it still possible for the Sunday closing law to be violated with impunity, but if men may be judged by their actions one is almost forced to conclude that this is the case.

If everybody were willing to be sane and reasonable with respect to the Covington situation, and if there was a disposition there to obey the law and respect the decency of the community, there would be little difficulty in framing a statute which would be satisfactory.

It is a pity that men have to be driven to do the obviously just and wise thing, but this has ever been the case where greed and ignorance were deeply concerned and were supplied with means with which to employ brains to do their bidding.—Lexington Leader.

Acquitted of Charge.

Madisonville—The case of the Commonwealth against Murbray Ferguson, charged with dynamiting a negro cabin near Nortonville, which resulted in the death of two negroes, went to the jury and in fifteen minutes a verdict of not guilty was returned. Ferguson immediately left for his home in Nortonville.

Ferguson took the stand and denied any knowledge whatever of having stated that some negroes would be blown to hell. He confessed to having been beastly drunk earlier in the night of the explosion.

His son stated that he took his father home from Nortonville about 11 o'clock on this night and that his father was so intoxicated that he had to be partially carried the entire distance. This story was corroborated by J. N. Wilburn, who assisted the son in carrying the father home. Ferguson's daughter stated she slept in the same room with her father and was awake at the time of the explosion and that her father was sound asleep in an adjoining bed and was not awakened by the explosion.

Ferguson while on the stand told a straightforward story and was not confused on cross-examination.

The adult Bible class of Burlington Christian Sunday School is making an effort to have twenty five members present next Sunday. If you've not had a special invitation from some member of the committee don't think you have been slighted but come any way. An interesting Sunday school is promised. There will be special music. Everyone cordially invited. Sunday school at 2:30 p. m.

The News stands for the true type of temperance, and it endorses the bill recently passed limiting the shipment of liquor into dry territory to two quarts per month. The lower House of the General Assembly has been adhering to a cut-throat policy that has sidetracked needed legislation.

About now the efficiency of the water wagons which went into commission New Year's is under the supreme strain.

There are exceptions to the rule, but as a general thing a reformer is a man who has failed at everything else.

SESSION CLOSES ON MARCH 14TH

Rules Committees to Have Charge of Bills Before General Assembly

WILLIAMS IS OUSTED

House Impeachment Proceedings Passed Despite Fight of Meyers—Tax Revenue Bill Is Presented.

Frankfort, Ky.—(Special)—Governor Stanley and his administration backers will use every effort to have passed, during the closing days of the Legislature, those bills promised in the Democratic platform.

And, it is certain that these will be given preference with the Rules Committee of both Houses in charge of those to be voted upon.

The Rules Committee of the Senate have taken charge and will control all bills to be considered by the Senate until the close of the session, which is to be Tuesday, March 14. This committee will determine the order in which the measures are to be taken up and considered. Lieutenant Governor James D. Black is the ex-officio Chairman and the members who were appointed by him are Senators W. W. Booles, Thomas A. Combs, John F. Ford, W. A. Frost, Selden R. Glenn, H. J. Overstreet, Samuel L. Robertson and G. G. Speer. They are all Democrats and the majority of them are friendly to the administration in all things.

During the last ten days of the session, the Rules Committee of the House will have charge of all bills to be considered by the House. This committee is composed of Speaker H. C. Duffy, and Representatives Glover H. Cary, R. T. Crowe, W. E. Dowling, Odie Duncan, William Duffy, Frank C. Greene, R. B. Hutchcraft, Jr., C. W. Mathers, Harry J. Meyers, S. M. O'Brien, George L. Pickett, W. A. Price and Joseph D. Pumphrey. This committee also counts a goodly majority friendly to the administration.

Bills that have passed both Houses follow:

Senate Bill No. 17, the Strickletl Pickett anti-pass law, which was approved by the Governor February 10.

Senate Bill 103, the Knight bill to provide for the employment of State Inspector and Examiner Nat B. Sewell's office force.

House Bill 22, the Hobbs bill to permit cities of the second class to acquire and maintain law libraries.

House Bill No. 2, the Vance corrupt practices act.

House Bill No. 49, the Ryan act creating the office of matron of the Louisville police court.

Senator Rogers' bill No. 111 amending the adoption of school textbooks law.

House Bill No. 75 by Representative Asa B. Pieratt, changing the times for holding circuit court in the Twenty first judicial district.

Representatives of the farmers are insisting upon the enacting of a pure seed law, while Louisville seedmen appear to be opposing it with equal vigor.

The first general measure looking to reform Kentucky's revenue laws was introduced in the House by Representative Hutchcraft of Paris, has the support of the administration.

It provides that all taxpayers must swear to property lists before the Assessor or one of his deputies. A penalty is imposed on the Assessor who accepts a list not sworn to.

The measure provides for the examination of candidates for the office of Assessor by two or more members of the State Board of Equalization and Assessment and unless the candidate passes such an examination his name cannot go on the ballot for election.

The County Board of Supervisors will meet after the Assessor's work and certify to the State Board. The County Board are given greater powers to investigate the ownership of property.

The expense in connection with the State Board is increased from $6,000 to $15,000 under this bill. The backers of the bill are confident that the added revenue will justify this increase in administrative expenses.

J. E. Williams, the Republican County Judge of McCreary County was impeached by the House of high crimes and misdemeanors, by a vote of 48 to 45.

Democratic floor leader, Harry Meyers of Covington, made a most gallant fight in his endeavor to save Judge Williams from impeachment. He protested vigorously and pleaded for a square deal. He insisted that the Democratic party in Kentucky is "too big, too great, too generous to play that kind of politics."

"The worst thing he has been charged with," said Meyers, "is that he put six Democrats in jail for six hours. I confess I have been guilty of worse things than that. I have helped to put 43 Republicans in jail and to keep them until the election was over, and if it had been necessary, I was ready to put 53 Republicans in jail to help Governor Stanley."

Meyers defied the impeachment Committee to show any corrupt motive in any irregularity charged to Judge Williams. He declared a County Judge could not be perfect, and that the alleged irregularities imputed to Judge Williams were mistakes of the head and not the heart.

Upon motion, Sr. Mr. Duffy appointed a committee to present articles of impeachment to the Senate. If the impeachment is upheld, Judge Williams will be removed from office, and the Senate may bar him from holding any office of honor, trust or profit, under the Commonwealth. In addition, Judge Williams will be liable to indictment and punishment by the regular courts.

The Semi-monthly pay bill, introduced by Representative John T. Murphy, of Covington, passed the House by a vote of 57 to 32.

Representative Greene protested against having bills taken out of their regular order and placed ahead of his anti-screen bill. The House supported Representative Murphy and the bill was reported and passed.

Representative Murphy in his speech supporting the bill declared that 18,000 or 20,000 laboring men are united in favor of the measure.

The motion of Representative Lasley to take the anti-screen bill from the orders of the day and put on its passage was defeated 46 to 41.

The bill of Representative Perry of Louisville, prescribing the manner of electing Commissioners in Jefferson County to constitute the Fiscal Court, passed the House unanimously.

* * *

The House resolution, directing the Auditor to refund to saloon keepers who were forced out of business by dry legislation their portion of the unearned license paid the state, passed the Senate 30 to 0. The resolution was called from the orders of the day by Senator Booles of Spencer County.

* * *

Petitions are being received by Solons from various counties over the State urging the passage of the bill appropriating $20,000 a year for four years to the Kentucky Illiteracy Commission.

Providing for clerks and stenographers for the Department of Education, a bill passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 72 to 6.

The Court of Appeals recently decided Superintendent of Public Instruction V. O. Gilbert did not have authority to employ any of the clerks and stenographers in his office, and State Auditor Greene refused to issue warrants for the salaries of those who had been employed by Gilbert.

A grand total of $11,050 a year is provided for the employing of ten assistants which includes five clerks and five stenographers.

Representative Minor of Boyle County, succeeded in having passed his joint resolution requesting Kentucky's representatives in Congress to vote against a proposed amendment to the Federal reserve act undertaking to extend the authority of national banks so they may establish and operate branch institutions. He explained such an amendment is unfair to state banks. The resolution was adopted by a vive voce vote.

The Senate passed the bill of Senator Robertson of Louisville, to permit non-resident children to appear in stage performances by a vote of 26 to 1.

* * *

"Well, that's why I failed to get responses to so many of my letters," exclaimed a lad who had been defeated for a pageship upon reading in newspapers a statement attributed to Representative John T. Murphy, of Ludlow, to the effect that he had "found men in the lower house at Frankfort who cannot read or write."

The Senate passed the Knight Meyers workmen's compensation bill 31 to 2. Senators Sanders and Speer cast the dissenting votes.

A call for a Progressive State Convention, to be held in Louisville April 29, has been issued by the State Executive Committee. District mass meetings were called for April 22 to be held in the following cities, each representing a district in the order they are named: Princeton, Henderson, Bowling Green, Elizabethtown, Louisville, Covington, Lexington, Lancaster, Maysville, Pikeville and London.

In investigating the accounts of various county officers on file at the State House, assistants in the Attorney-General's office have uncovered a new form of graft. It is simple. A man is employed by the sheriff at $3 a day to go after a prisoner. He is gone ten days. That would indicate that his pay would be $30. But in a bill sent in to the state for payment the pay asked for was figured like this: Ten days of 24 hours make 240 hours; a working day is eight hours; 240 hours divided by eight hours makes 30 days; at $3 a day it would be $90. Sheriff's profit $60.

Republican Convention.

Pursuant to a call of the State, District and County Committees the Republicans of Boone County, Ky., met in mass convention at Burlington, Saturday, February 26th, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of selecting six delegates and six alternates to the State Convention to be held at Louisville, March 1st, and the same number of delegates and alternates to attend the District Convention at Covington, Feb. 29th, and also to select the County Executive Committee for Boone County for the ensuing four years.

The meeting was called to order by A. M. Edwards, Chairman of the County Committee, who stated the object of the meeting, and on motion D. B. Wallace was elected chairman of the meeting and A. R. Edwards, Secretary. On motion the following were appointed as a committee on resolutions: J. M. Baker, B. F. Zimmer and A. L. Nichols, who after some deliberation submitted the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

We, your committeed on resolutions, respectfully submit the following:

We reaffirm our allegiance to the time honored principles of the Republican party and heartily endorse the platform of the last Republican State Convention.

We believe in everything that adds to the prosperity and happiness of the people and feel that such conditions are always safeguarded by the success of the Republican party.

We urge harmony and co-operation among all the members of the Republican party, feeling that a united party means the election of a Republican President of the United States at the next election.

We recommend the re-election of the present Republican County Committee of Boone county for the ensuing 4 years as at present organized.

We respectfully request that the county authorities have published in the Boone County Recorder an itemized statement of the receipts and expenditures of the County Road Department and County School Department of Boone county, as we feel that the taxpayers of the county are entitled to this information in a published and authentic form.

We instruct our delegates to the State Convention to vote for Hons. R. P. Ernst, Edwin P. Morrow, and A. E. Wilson as delegates from the State-at-Large to the National Republican Convention.

We heartily endorse Hon. J. G. Tomlin as one of the District Delegates to the National Republican Convention.

We request that the proceedings of this convention together with resolutions be published in the Boone County Recorder and Cincinnati Enquirer.

On motion the following were appointed a committee to select delegates to the District and State Conventions: E. E. Kelly, Geo. Blyth and G. W. Sandford, and in due time reported the following names:

Delegates to District Convention—Harry Stephens, Petersburg; B. F. Zimmer, Constance; Colon Kelly, Rabbit Hash; John Smith, Belleview; John M. Botts, Petersburg; Claude Wayland, Walton. Alternates—J. M. Baker, Big Bone; G. G. Hughes, C. C. Hughes, G. W. Sandford and A. L. Nichols, Burlington; Sylvester Riggs, Constance.

Delegates to State Convention—J. G. Tomlin, D. B. Wallace, Walton; Elihue Alden, Petersburg; James Murray, Florence; J. Claud Hume, Verona; Dr. O. E. Senour, Union. Alternates—A. M. Edwards, A. R. Edwards, Walton; Geo. L. Miller, Big Bone; E. E. Kelly, Burlington; L. E. Thompson, Florence; J. Ed Botts, Belleview.

On motion, the present County Committee as organized, was elected for the ensuing four years and should there be any vacancies the County Committee was authorized to fill them according to its best judgment.

After a general discussion of the political situation along advisory lines, the meeting adjourned.

D. B. WALLACE, Chmn.
A. R. Edwards, Secty.

After Standing 720 Years.

An elm tree that was a sapling when Columbus discovered America and which for more than 720 years has stood near to the site of historic Fort Ticonderoga, has just been cut down by Thomas C. Luther, a prominent lumberman of North New York. Expert lumbermen estimate that 5,000 board feet of lumber will be gotten out of the tree.

The trunk of the tree measured sixty-eight feet to the limbs and is sixty inches in circumference at the base. The top measures twenty-seven inches. The tree was sound and without a blemish on its surface. Its age is indicated by its rings.

Owing to the fact that ordinary sawmills cannot manufacture it into commercial lumber, Mr. Luther is now making special arrangements for the handling of this tree.

AGRICULTURE AND POULTRY

Cause of Hot Time at Hog-Wallow Debating Society at Last Meeting.

At the weekly session of the H. W. D. S. held Wednesday of last week, the chairman of the committee of agriculture reported that it was the opinion of the committee as good way as any to plant onions is to drop the sets in a furrow and cover them with a hoe or rake.

With the report one of the members of the society took issue, and when requested to state his objection to the manner of planting as suggested by the committee, stated that onions planted as above would grow crooked and that a crooked onion never failed to make sick the person eating it.

A lively discussion followed and resulted in the matter being referred to the committee on agriculture with instructions to report again at the next session.

The poultry committee submitted the following resolution without an expression of opinion: "Resolved that poultry of all kinds and more especially turkies, should be provided with a round roost."

One member asked if the committee intended for the word poultry to embrace ducks and geese, and if so how could they be taught to occupy a roost of the ground.

A discussion ensued in which it was brought out that roosts other than round gave poultry crooked breasts. At one time during the discussion it looked like a knock down and dragout would result but the hour for adjournment having arrived the president declared the session adjourned.

At the next meeting an effort will be made to have a special committee appointed to consider the resolution.

That Bond Issue.

I do not see any change in the court's policy as to the bond issue. Do not blame a man for accepting a salary but blame those who will pass an unreasonable law that would grant an unreasonable salary. Boone is not so far behind as some would have you believe. Other counties have toll gates; other states have toll roads. Then why should one stick his ear up when he sees a toll gate in Boone? Some of our law makers of adjoining counties said to me a few months ago, "you have good pikes up here," Asking them if they had better under the free road system. "No, I would rather pay my toll two to one and have pikes like yours than to have free pikes like ours. Then their free pikes must be in a deplorable condition. It is strange you can buy well improved farms over the river along traction lines and so-called good pikes for about half what you would have to pay for one on a dirt road in Boone county. Not so strange either when you see a politician pulling at a man with enough money to make the first payment. Then he takes a bond for the balance. He fails to pay interest and a heavy tax that burdens his shoulders. Then he is sold out and kicked out and the trap is set again. If some one would give me a farm on a dirt road I would be glad to go on it. There is one thing I would miss the good old hospitality that there use to be which has been driven from the homes through flowery visions of progress by those who have set up the dollar as their idol. Some one has wisely said consider the bond issue, but consider it as you would the fly and you can read more about it with a keener eye.

UNITED NATION

Democrats and Republicans Fight Side By Side.

Speaker Clark and Republican Leader Mann fought side by side recently in the House for adequate national defense. With party lines obliterated most of the members followed their leaders and two navy measures passed without a dissenting vote. One, to provide for adding 300 midshipmen to the entering class at Annapolis next July, passed 173 to 0, and the other, to equip navy yards for construction of battleships. Nos. 43 and 44, passed with out a roll call.

Mr. Mann tried to put the anti-preparedness advocates on record by calling for a division on the naval academy bill, but there were no negative responses.

The appearance of Speaker Clark on the floor to champion preparedness measures aroused much interest. Rumors persisted that he would take active charge of the fight to increase the army and navy, Majority Leader Kitchin having joined the opposition.

Immediate improvement of the navy by designing new battleships along the lines of the best now in use, doubling the member ship of both Annapolis and West Point, creation of many additional regiments for the army and short-term enlistments to produce a reserve were among suggestions made by the speaker. He said he expected to discuss the subject of preparedness generally soon.

Mr. Mann reiterated his previous pleas for a larger army and navy and aided in maneuvering the bills to passage. "This is not the time for crimination and recrimination," he said. "It is not the time to find fault with that which has been. It is the time for all to join hands for that which may come."

The debate went far afield from the measures under consideration extending to the general subject of military preparedness. The unusual sight of the Speaker and the minority leader battling together for Administration measures while the majority sat silently in the back of the House attracted crowds to the galleries, and members rushed to the floor from their offices and committee rooms.

K. E. A. Meeting.

The Kentucky Educational Association will meet in Louisville the latter part of April. Some of the best talent of the country will be on the program.

Teachers and trustees can't afford to miss it. This meeting is a great stimulus to school interests, and affords an opportunity to visit and observe the best school system in the State at work. Do you want to see good teaching actually being done? If so, visit the Louisville school during K. E. A. week.

They will be open to teachers, trustees and school people.

Do you want to become progressive in school life, see the work being done by the schools of the State in manual training, domestic science, and agriculture, and visit the schools of the metropolis?

School legislation is in good shape and there seems to be no indication to do the public schools an injustice. The legislators see the inconsistence of decreasing the school fund, and it is believed that there will be no further attempt to shorten the school term or reduce the teachers salaries. It is gratifying to find that our Senator and Representative are standing by the public schools and using their influence to prevent inroads upon the school fund.—Owen County Democrat.

After Those Higher-Up.

The Scott County Grand Jury in its report, took a whack at the society women, "leaders in the churches," for the example they set in their various games and amusements. The report says in part:

"It seems rather inconsistent to us to investigate misconduct in negroes and white men and boys, while mature women in our community who are leaders in church and social circles, set the example by their games of chance for prizes and other valuable consideration. Why should ignorant negroes be prosecuted for the offense of gaming while the social and religious leaders of the town and country go unmolested when guilty of the same offense?

"The grand jury are unanimous in their opinion that the good women of the community should set the example for the walks of society, and should not set a bad example for those who have neith er the safeguards of character nor culture to enable them to resist the temptation of the dangerous spirit of gambling.

"As long as these good women are permitted to continue their gaming, it will be extremely difficult to enforce the law among other classes, who must wonder why they also cannot enjoy immunity from its penalties.

"The grand jury have not summoned any of the women citizens of Scott county who engage in different forms of gaming contrary to law, but would suggest to the court that the next grand jury be charged by the court to look into the matter and see if something cannot be done to have the evil suppressed."

Prof. R. H. Carter delivered a lecture on Agriculture at the court house last Friday night. The lecture was illustrated by numerous pictures and was highly interesting and instructive and was well received by the several farmers who were present. Prof. Carter is a valuable man to have in a community and is always ready to assist in the advancement of public interests.

Will Sink Without Warning.

Germany has instructed Count von Bernstorff to inform the United States Government that the assurances regarding the future conduct of submarine warfare, given in the Lusitania and Arabic cases, still are binding, but that they apply only to merchantmen of a peaceful character.

The German Government is understood to contend that armed merchantmen, without regard to the nature of their armament, have shown themselves not to be peaceful, and therefore, are subject to destruction without warning.

The instructions direct the German Ambassador particularly to tell Secretary Lansing that British merchantmen armed ostensibly only for defense have not assumed the character of peaceful traders, but that, on the contrary, they carry guns for the especial purpose of attacking German submarines.

To support this claim the Berlin Foreign Office has sent the Ambassador for presentation to the State Department, a list of at least twenty incidents where it is claimed British merchant ships have attacked submarines.

Confidential advices received from Berlin say German and Austrian submarine commanders already have been given their new orders and that from midnight Tuesday they will be authorized to sink without warning all armed merchant ships of the enemies of Germany. It was said also that many of the submarine commanders probably had left their bases on voyages, and that even should the United States request the postponing of the opening of the campaign it would be impossible to get word to many of the submarines.

Count von Bernstorff received his instructions in reply to a request from the United States for assurances regarding the conduct of submarine warfare in the future occasioned by the memorandum announcing the intention of Germany to sink armed ships without warning, which the administration considered to be inconsistent with the assurances previously given.

Regardless of the form in which the matter is presented to Secretary Lansing the German Ambassador will lay much stress upon the assurances regarding the arming or merchant ships which were given to the United States by Great Britain In a memorandum signed by Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador, on August 25, 1914. In this the British Ambassador wrote the following:

"I have been instructed at the same time by His Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to give the United States Government the fullest assurances that British merchant vessels will never be used for purposes of attack; that they are merely peaceful traders armed only for defense, and that they will never under any circumstances attack any vessel."

Germany claims that Great Britain has deliberately violated these assurances, and Secretary Lansing will be so informed.

Confidential advices from Berlin indicate that the German Government might be willing to treat as merchantmen ships with armament so light and so placed that it could not possibly be used offensively. For instance, it was intimated that Germany might, should the United States insist up on it, agree to grant immunity to vessels armed with a single one-pounder placed on the stern and so arranged that such a gun could swing not more than 35 or 40 degrees.

Wool Prices Soaring.

The customary $500,000 wool crop in the Blue Grass promises to attain a value of at least $700,000 this year, and if the present upward tendency in the market continues to affect the price, even greater returns may be expected, according to local dealer's estimates.

War conditions have been assigned as the cause of the strong tone to the business and a record price may be attained unless the European conflict should end or exports be cut down for any reason. The record price on the local market according to the statement last night of Jacob Speyer, an extensive buyer, is 40c, reached in the winter of 1878-79. It is not unlikely that this price may be offered before the boom has exhausted its force.

Present rates on wool are 34 and 35 cents over the local floors. Dealers are paying that price for all they can get and the state of the trade is healthy. Normally the prices paid to sheep raisers is about 25 cents, this represents the average of the past several years.

The Blue Grass section produces 50 per cent of the 4,000,000-pound annual output of Kentucky and much of this is handled through the Lexington market. Of the amount that comes thru this city, two-thirds approximately is shipped to Eastern manufacturing and reclaiming centers and the rest goes thru the Louisville trade channels.

According to the estimates of local experts the supply this year is approximately the same as was produced during the last four years. The number of sheep has remained practically constant for some time and no falling off in numbers has been noticed in the lo-

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH AT GRID-IRON CLUB.

Following is the speech delicered by President Wilson before the Grid-Iron Club in Washington a few evenings since:

"I have very little to say tonight except to express my warm appreciation of the invariable courtesy of this club and of the reception you have so generously accorded me I find that a am seldom tempted to say anything nowadays unless somebody starts something, and to-night nobody has started anything

"Your talk, Mr Toastmaster, has been a great deal about candidacy for the Presidency It is not a new feeling of my part, but one which I entertain with a greater intensity than formerly that a man who seeks the Presidency of the United States for anything that it will bring to him is an audacious fool The responsibilities of the office ought to sober a man even before he approaches it

"One of the difficulties of the office seldom appreciated, I dare say, is that it is very difficult to think while so many people are talking in a way that obsecures counsel, and is entirely off the point

"The point in national affairs, gentlemen, never lies along the lines of expediency It always rests in the field of principle The United States was not founded upon any principle of expediency; it was founded upon a profound principle of human liberty and of humanity, and whenever it bases its policy upon any other foundations than those, it builds on the sand and not upon solid rock

"It seems to me that the most enlightening thing a man can do is suggested by something which the Vice President said to-night He complained that he found men who, when their attention was called to the signs of spring, did not see the blue heaven, did not see the movement of the free clouds, did not think of the great spaces of the quiet continent, but thought only of some immediate and pressing piece of business It seems to me that if you do not think of the things that lie beyond and away from and disconnected from this scene in which we attempt to think and conclude, you will inevitably be led astray

"I would a great deal rather know what they are talking about around quiet firesides all over this country than what they are talking about in the cloakrooms of Congress. I would a great deal rather know what the men on the trains and by the wayside and shops and on the farms are thinking about and yearning for than hear any of the vociferous proclamations of policy which it is so easy to hear and so easy to read by picking up any scrap of printed paper There is only one way to hear these things, and that is constantly to go back to the fountains of American action These fountains are not to be found in any recently discovered sources

"Senator Harding was saying just now that we ought to try when we are a hundred million strong to act in the same simplicity of principle that our forefathers acted in when we were three million strong I heard somebody say—I do not know the exact statistics—that the present population of the United States is 103,000,000

"If there are 3,000,000 thinking the same things that that original 3,000,000 thought, the 100,000,000 will be saved for an illustrious future They are ready to stake everything for an idea, and that idea was not expediency, but justice And the infinite difficulty of public affairs, gentlemen, is not to discover the signs of the heaven and the directions of the wind, but to square the things you do by the not simple, but complicated, standards of justice Justice has nothing to do with any temporary standard whatever It is rooted and grounded in the fundamental instincts of humanity

"America ought to keep out of this war She ought to keep out of this war as the sacrifice of everything except this single thing upon which her character and history are founded, her sense of humanity and justice If she sacrifices that she has ceased to be America; she has ceased to entertain and to love the traditions which have made us proud to be Americans, and when we go about seeking safety at the expense of humanity, then I for one will believe that I have always been mistaken in what I have conceived to be the spirit of American history

"You never can tell your direction except by long measurements You cannot establish a line by two posts; you have got to have three at least to know whether they are straight with anything, and the longer your line the more certain your measurement There is only one way in which to determine how the future of the United States is going to be projected and that is by looking back and seeing which way the lines ran which led up to the present moment of power and of opportunity There is no doubt about that

"There is no question what the roll of honor in America is. The roll of honor consists of the names of men who have squared their conduct by ideals of duty There is no one else upon the roster; there is no one else whose name we care to remember when we are [illegible] upon a nation [illegible] And I wish that when ever an impulse of impatience comes upon us, whenever an impulse to sell a thing a some short way tempts us, we might close the door and take down some old stories of what American idealists and statesmen did in the past and not let any counsel in that does not sound in the authenic voice of American tradition Then we shall be certain what the lines of the future are because we shall know we are cause we shall know we are steering by the lines of the past

"We shall know that no temporary convenience, no temporary expediency, will lead us either to be rash or to be cowardly I would be just as much ashamed to be rash as I would to be a coward Valor is self-respecting Valor is circumspect Valor strikes only when it is right to strike Valor withholds itself from all small implications and entanglements and waits for the great opportunity when the sword will flash as if it carried the light of heaven upon its blade"

The Dentist as a Humorist.

A dentist writing to the Voice of the People complains that of all the professions for the relief of pain, dentistry is not only one of the most important but one of the most abused. Altho the dentist relieves us of disabled and aching teeth and many malignant germs, he is made the butt of the professional humorist. He is a martyr to our good health.

Unfortunately for the dentists, aversion to the dentists' chair seems innate in every breast. For the dentist makes us wonder why civilization was ever so laboriously built. In teeth apparently we have not advanced an inch. We still have them. That tense moment when the buzzing drill touches a nerve we are not nerved to suffer as we are in the case of a major operation. We know that the process is not final. It is not do or die. Next year will be another visit and another nerve. We cannot have a tooth out as we remove a troublesome appendix. We have to chew.

It is the conviction of recurrence that makes the dentist a job so frightful. The grit we have and we get over. It does not stay with us. But teeth do and we know that they grow progressively worse. But in that yearly visit to the dentist we have no sense of heroism. All the pretty defects of nature seem to obtrude themselves into our consciousness. The dentist's job is to remind us that we have teeth. He does not deal with life and death as the doctor does. He deals in comfort and discomfort. Nature aids the doctor. We grow together after being cut. But the dentist reminds us forcibly that man must return to dust, and that the fillings are more often more permanent than the teeth themselves.—Chicago Tribune.

Some Tree.

Ex-Commissioner Ed. Barker of Dover was a Tuesday visitor. He recently cut a cotton wood tree the only one on his farm, that measured four feet in diameter at the stump. From the trunk he cut three ten-foot logs and from the branches twelve others eight and ten feet in length. In addition the lumber there is left a winter's supply of wood for a small family.—Lawrenceburg Register.

Murder and Punishment.

The daily record of murders keeps well up to the average in our country. While the total seems to have jumped from a known 4,567 for 1913 to an estimated 7,600 for 1915, there may be some satisfaction for the present, and possibly some hope for the future, in the fact that this last total is more than 3,000 behind that remarkable one of 1896, almost 20 years ago, which was 10,662.

This difference between a time of a population of less than 70,000,000, a year of over 100,000,000 has never been explained. Possibly introduction of the electric chair in a third of the states may have had some effect. The efforts against strike murderers and professional gunmen have probably availed somewhat.

There are those opposed to capital punishment, or pretending to be for the sake of companionship in a fad, who argue that since murders are still of great frequency in states where hanging is nominally the penalty, and even in those in which the terrors of the electric chair are held out as a deterrent, we should do away with the death penalty; should give all convicted of murder a form of prison punishment with the chance for parole or of eventually proving innocence. They believe, or claim to believe, that not only is it wrong for the state to take a life for a life or for several lives, but that killings are not prevented by any state's threat of death. They do not seem to have yet reached the belief that the murderer's life is of more value to the community than his victim's at least they do not so proclaim.

Out of the maze of statistics and laws bearing upon murder and its punishment we find a few facts worth mentioning.

For the matter of population of cities let us take the last United States census, that of 1910 and with it the lastest obtainable figures as to killings of human beings in our country and the death penalties.

Boston, with a population of 670 585, had 25 murders in 1914, while St. Louis, with 687,029 reported 117 murders. Now, mark the facts, that while Massachusetts prescribes the penalty of the electric chair for first degree and life imprisonment for second degree murder, Missouri laws declare for death by hanging or merely life imprisonment for either crime.

Philadelphia, with 1,549,008 people, reported 76 murders. Pennsylvania law gives death in the chair for first degree murder.

Let us compare Milwaukee with Boston. Wisconsin has no death penalty for murder, but imprisonment for life for first degree; but, with a population slightly over one half that of Boston, Milwaukee had 22 murders to 25 for Boston.

We may conclude that while threat of gallows or chair may not prevent murders coming out of intense hatred suddenly aroused, paroxysms of rage or insanity, it may prevent some that would otherwise be deliberately planned and carried out.

In New York, said to be the most populous city of the world, there were only eighteen deaths in the chair to 186 murders last year. The murderous gunman of that city need greater warning than this showing. The latest development of their activities shows half a dozen or more attempts upon a life, finally successful, and a dozen in the plot actively or in collusion. More chair-warming in New York may do good.

Governors of states, judges, juries and all dealing with murderers may go too far under influence of misguided sentiment and sympathy. The other day a Governor approved 31 paroles, 5 of which were of men in penitentiary for murder or manslaughter.

Attention of Stockmen.

There are many problems with which the average stockman is at times confronted. In some cases it becomes a question how to sell to the best advantage, or how and where to secure just what is needed at the lowest cost, but disease is one of the most dreaded factors in undermining the livestock business.

Conditions surrounding the herd sometimes curtail the profit and propagate infection. The vitality of animals is reduced to a low stage of resistence by improper care, improper feeding and mismanagement, which affords an opportunity for the development of some contagious or infectious disease.

There is a cause for every loss. A large percentage of animal fatalities can be controlled by preventive measure. Hog cholera, black leg, forage poisoning, tuberculosis, sore mouth in pigs, stomatitis, parasitic infection, distemper, and catarrhal fever of horses are among the most common causes of animal death in Kentucky.

The losses from animal diseases can be controlled. Consult the local veterinarian, and if a veterinarian is not available, assistance can be had by communicating with the Veterinary Department of the State University and Experiment Station. There will be no charge for advice given. If it can not help you by letter it will arrange for the expert to pay the farmer a visit.

Mad Dogs and Mad Men.

In the average so-called mad-dog panic there is usually more madness in men than in dogs. Not one dog in a hundred suspected of rabies has rabies, and the man who runs amuck killing all dogs because of a brain storm born of the realization that there is such a thing as rabies, has a worse case of rabies than his victims.

"Like cures like" does not apply in the treatment of rabies. Mad men are not a cure for mad dogs. The real remedy is a strict muzzle law strictly enforced. Dr. William Osler, in emphasizing this point, cites the eradication of rabies in Great Britain, where, in 1887, there were 217 cases of rabies; 160 in 1888, and 312 in 1889. The increase created such alarm that muzzling was enforced, as a result of which there were only 129 cases of rabies in 1890, seventy-nine in 1891 and thirty-eight in 1892. But owing to the opposition to muzzling the enforcement of the ordinance was relaxed, as a consequence of which the cases increased to 93 the following year; to 248 in 1894, and 672 in 1895. The muzzling law then again was rigidly enforced, resulting at once in a decrease of cases to 438 in 1896; to 151 in 1897; to seventeen in 1898; to nine in 1899, and none in 1900.

There could be no better demonstration of the way not only to prevent, but to abolish rabies.—Courier-Journal.

FARM ANIMALS

TO ERADICATE CATTLE TICKS

Department of Agriculture Will Co-Operate With State or County Authorities in Battle.

"Ticks take as much as 200 pounds of blood a year from a 1-000-pound steer; cut the milk production of cows nearly 50 per cent; reduce the home price of meat animals from one-half to one cent a pound; prevent bankers from lending money to promote the live stock industry; keep down fertility and production of farms; and make the southern farmers pay $50,000 a year to supply the never-ceasing barbecue of blood." Thus Carl Vrooman, assistant secretary of agriculture of the United States, remarked in telling of the new tick campaign the government has started.

"Dip the tick" is the slogan which the department of agriculture has adopted for a special campaign against the cattle tick. Blazoned in big letters this legend will stand out in startling relief upon a two-colored poster which the department proposes to display in every post office in the tick-infested country.

"It costs less than 50 cents a head to dip the cattle of a county and free that county from quarantine," Mr. Vrooman said, "and enable its cattle to compete with free cattle at the stockyards. But before the ticks can be cleaned from a county the people in that county, by themselves or with the aid of the state, must build dipping vats which cost from $50 to $100 each, and must supply arsenic, which costs about five cents per head, to make the arsenical bath that kills the ticks. The people must then join in seeing that every steer or cow is dipped a sufficient number of times to kill all the ticks infesting the cattle, and prevent the seed ticks in the grass from finding a new boarding house."

The department will co-operate with a county that is ready to dip ticks by sending its expert field men to supervise the building of vats, to prepare the arsenical bath and to take charge of the dipping of cattle. The people of a county and state, however, have to provide the small amount of money necessary for the actual dipping.

PROPER SHELTER FOR SHEEP

Impossible to Keep Animal's Fleece Dry If Not Given Some Protection During the Winter.

It was formerly quite generally thought that the sheep's wool afforded it all the protection necessary during the winter. If the fleece could be kept dry it probably would retain enough body heat to keep the sheep warm, but this is impossible without shelter. When a fleece once becomes wet it takes a long time for it to dry out, especially if the weather is cold.

Much energy that would otherwise be used for growth or fattening must be used for evaporating this water. The wet fleece also gives rise to unhealthy conditions.

In Great Britain little housing is necessary, but in most places in America this would result in severe losses.

CORRECT FEEDING OF SWINE

One Scientist Gives Voluminous Figures, While Another Says Let Porkers Suit Themselves.

A well-known scientific research professor spent years in experimentation to ascertain the correct amounts of protein, carbo-hydrates and water to feed hogs of varying ages.

He formulated voluminous feeding tables for farmers to follow that would cause the average feeder to lie awake nights to decipher.

Now comes another investigator who produces better weights and better profits with hogs by simply allowing the porkers to feed and water themselves just as their tastes dictate.

THE PUBLISHER.

It Kills Live Towns.

Hans Garbus, a German farmer of Iowa, has discovered that the benefits which appear on the surface as attaching to the mail order plan sometimes spell disaster and has written a very interesting story of his views in a certain farm paper. Here is a part of his story:

"We farmers need awakening to the fact that we have unmistakably reached the period where we must think and plan. I am one of the slow German farmers that had to be shown, and I am now giving my experience that others may profit, for knowledge is more expensive now than ten years ago.

"Twenty-nine years ago I began my farm career. I had an old team and $50. Our furniture was mostly home-made—chairs, cupboard and lounge made from dry goods boxes, neatly covered with ten-cent cretonne by my girl wife. We rented eighty acres. Being a boy of good habits I got all needed machinery and groceries of our home merchants on creed it until fall crops were sold. The first year was a wet season and I did not make enough to pay my creditors. I went to each on date of promise and explained conditions, paying as much as possible, and they all carried the balance over another year. They continued to accommodate me until I was able to buy a 40-acre piece of my own.

"As soon as I owned these few acres the mail order houses began sending me catalogues, and gradually I began sending my loose letting my accounts stand in my home town where I had gotten my accommodation when I needed it.

"A farm near a live town soon doubles in value. I sold my 40 acres at a big advance and purchased an eighty, gradually adding to it until I had 200 acres of the best land in Iowa. I then felt no need of asking favors, and found it easy to patronize the mail order agents that came almost weekly to my door. I regret to say that I was the first in the county to make up a neighborhood bill and sent it to a mail order house. Though we got every once in a while, we got in the habit of sending away for stuff.

"Gradually our merchants lessened their stock of goods—for lack of patronage. Finally we began to realize that when we needed a bolt quickly for machinery, or clothing for sickness or death we had to wait and send away for it, which wasn't pleasant. One by one our merchants moved to places where they were appreciated, and men of less energy moved in. Gradually our town has gone down; our business houses are 'tacky' in appearance, a number are empty; our schools, churches and walks are going down, we have no band, no library nor ball team. There is no business done in the town and therefore no taxes to keep things up.

"Nine years ago my farm was worth $195 an acre; today I'd have a hard matter to sell it at $167 an acre. It is too far from a live town so every farmer has said that wants to buy. He wants a place near schools and churches, where his children can have advantages. I have awakened to the fact that in helping to pull the town down, it has cost me $5,600 in nine years."

The Fragrance of Content.

The most fortunate being on earth who has friends and wealth and quiet and a good digestion, can find plenty of sources of trouble if he hunts for them. In the words of the cynical French writer, "A man who has ten needs is not happy when nine of them are satisfied." That is perfectly true; and not every nine of them ever are satisfied. The secret is to learn to fix your thoughts on the satisfied ones, and not be forever brooding on the reluctant shadow of that unattainable tenth.

There is, indeed, a fatuous optimism that disgusts. People who are always laboriously turning up the little silver lining of big black clouds are wearisome, especially when the black clouds are not theirs but yours. Also, it may well be urged that discontent is the root of all great accomplishment. Persons who easily find good in everything and who seem to be always living in sunshine are not too likely to bestir themselves to better their own lot or that of others. Probably the ideal temperament would be that suggested by Charles Lamb, with his unusual whimsical charm: "Contented with little yet wishing for more."

The value of a quiet, contented spirit however, reaches far beyond itself. We live in an age of struggle and restlessness. Perhaps that is true of all ages, but it seems especially true of our hurrying, eager, ambitious unsettled American democracy. The many colored variety of life perpetually dangles before our eyes a thousand things we think we must have and really do not want. In the midst of all this hurry, barely to touch a peaceful heart, the mere contact with which makes us stop and question the hurry, is like turning out of the clatter of cities into green fields.—Youth's Companion.

W. C. T. U. NEWS.

(Furnished by Mrs. Belle Dickey.)

The Richwood-Beaver Lick W. C. T. U. met in regular monthly session February 8th at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Sleet. An excellent dinner was served and an interesting and helpful program was rendered.

"Intercessory Prayer" was subject of the Bible Reading.

The members responded to roll-call with items of interest to all workers for Prohibition.

Mrs. E. O. Hughes gave a thoughtful review of first chapter of the wonderful book, result of the latest scientific investigations "Alcohol and the Human Body," by Sir Victor Horsley.

It is expected that Rev. Geo. Prontiss will take up next two chapters at the next meeting, on March 7th at his residence. A large attendance of members and all interested is requested.

This Union has sent letters and petitions to both State and National Senators and Representatives requesting their attention to the Prohibition amendments. The U. S. National members of both Senate and House acknowledged receipt of same.

"The trend of sentiment of organized labor is towards prohibition," said Richard Jones, of Duluth, a member of the Minnesota state senate, speaking before the Scandinavian Socialist organization recently.

"Some trade union leaders claim that prohibition would make for non-employment. If this is so why have locomotive engineers to the number of 70,000 endorsed it? If prohibition is inimical to the interests of labor, why did the southern labor congress, composed of men from nine southern states refuse to ask for a repeal of the prohibition laws of the south when requested to do so by the United Brewery Workmen of America? Local labor leaders may insist that the saloon is a poor man's club, but the American Federation of Labor at its convention at Toronto condemned the use of that term.

"We are urged not to vote men out of employment, but if a group of men are employed in a business which is destructive to society I would vote those men out of that employment and into some thing valuable to themselves and their fellowmen. I would like to have a chance to vote about 5,000,000 men in Europe out of their present jobs. If this principle applies in one case why not in another? To advocate peace in Europe would throw thousands of workmen in America who are engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war out of their present employment, but thousands of trade unionists and socialists are today doing all in their power to spread anti-militaristic propaganda among their fellow workers."

The granting of full suffrage to the women of Manitoba by the provincial legislature on January 27, as noted in a recent Signal, was accomplished without a single adverse vote and amid scenes of unparalleled enthusiasm. Everything moved off with snap and dispatch.

The Manitoba Free Press tells the story in these words:

"When the third reading had been duly and formally given, the ladies who thronged the galleries, the men who were also wedged into the galleries and the members on the floor of the House stood up while the rich soprano hundreds of female throats sang 'O Canada,'

"After the singing of this anthem the ladies with much fervor, took up the rollicking strain of 'They're Jolly Good Fellows,' in compliment to the members of the House, who modestly sat down. But as soon as the last note had been sounded, the members sprang to their feet, and, not to be outdone in courtesy, sang in return, 'They're (meaning the ladies) Jolly Good Fellows.' The vocal harmony emitted by the members of the House was a revelation, and, if anything, they had an advantage over the women in the matter of verve and melody.

"No previous scene in the history of the House presents a parallel to that of yesterday. Hon. Valentine Winkler, Minister of Agriculture, who is the oldest acting member of the House says that never before was there anything like it. For the first time in the history of the House women were invited to a place on the floor of the chamber during a regular sitting."

Manitoba, with its area of 251,832 square miles is approximately equal to the two great states of Montana and Nevada, and by a curious coincidence its population of 455,614 is again about the same as the population of these two states. It is probable that the action of Manitoba will hasten a favorable vote on woman suffrage in the two states to the south of it, Minnesota and North Dakota, where the women have been working for many years for equal political rights.

The Manitoba Free Press says, editorially, that this victory is only the forerunner of others soon to be won in the western provinces of the Dominion.

"Progressive Manitoba will take deep and legitimate pride in the fact that their province is the first in Canada to enfranchise women," says the Free Press. "How ever, the preparations of the sister prairie provinces to lean closely upon Manitoba in this respect are already audible. Eastern Canada, like the eastern states, is still black upon the suffrage map—one more proof of the greater responsiveness of young communities to democratic ideas. In the ampler, freer air of the western prairies social veneers and outworn creeds cannot so easily take root and perpetuate themselves.

"The North government, in passing woman suffrage, has establish ed at least one title to enduring fame."

Prohibition Does Not Prohibit.

Cincinnati, Feb. 21, 1916.

Editor, Boone County Recorder:

Dear Sir:—

Please permit me to answer a few statements made in Mrs. Belle Dickey's column last February 17.

Have you ever paused to consider that when a saloon keeper is driven out of business, he will have to compete with the butcher, the baker and the grocer, making it considerably harder for them all? And did you ever reflect that if the 1,600,000 persons directly employed in the liquor industry lose their jobs, that they will go after the jobs of as many men and women in different trades? And many employees of the liquor business, the immense majority of whom are good sober citizens, not withstanding efforts of the Political Prohibitionists to blacken their reputations, have children of their own, who, after all, will be the innocent victims of the Anti-Saloon League.

Don't forget that national prohibition would mean the loss of $525,000,000 annually in revenue to the United States Government, or one third of its income, which sum the Prohibitionists would not make up.

We do not attempt to defend immoderate drinking—we are intensely opposed to it and always have been. Likewise we are opposed to over indulgence in food, or any other injurious excess.

The same applies to people who would forbid John Jones getting a glass of beer or a hot toddy are trying to keep him from smoking or chewing tobacco, and endeavoring to determine what moving pictures his family can see.

As to the employment question: There isn't one considerate, big business man in the whole United States of America who will "fire" an employee who is capable and doing good work, just because he happens to take an occasional drink. The employer himself may not indulge, but if he has the slightest regard for the personal rights of others he will not seek to dictate the way their lives must be lived.

The employer who says that his men shall not drink—even a drop—may go a step farther and deny him the right to enjoy a motion picture show or a puff at a pipe. He may even prescribe the manner in which a man may conduct himself at home. Since scientists agree that overeating is as bad as overdrinking, what is to prevent him from saying that his workers must not eat more than three ounces of meat or one plateful of baked beans?

In these near-prohibition days, may we not expect to find an extremely radical Boss ordering his employee not to kiss his (the employee's) wife, on the theory that osculation is unsanitary and tends to injure the worder's health and consequently his business efficiency?

Admitting that practically the entire Southland, excepting parts of Louisana, Florida and nearly all of Kentucky, is "dry" in the legal sense of the word, and "wet" in the lexicon of the "moonshiner" and "bootlegger," you might also note that Dixie today is poorer and more crime-infested than at any time in her historu. There is no argument against this. The United States census statistics prove it and prove also that moonshining and bootlegging are raging.

Of the Southern states, Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi and Tennessee, were voted dry by the Legislature and not the people. This is prima facie evidence that citizens of the South are not satisfied with prohibition.

As to Kansas: That state, held up by the Prohibitionists as their shining example, according to the Federal census statistics has more insane, more paupers, more divorces, less church members, more juveline delinquents, more murderers, more all-round criminals, less savings bank depositors, than all but a handful of "wet" states. Governor Capper has been quoted as saying that Topeka is a model Kansas city.

The Federal figures state that the population of Cincinnati, Ohio, a very "wet" city, was 363,591 in 1910, and Topeka, only 43,681, yet the arrests for drunkenness in Cincinnati were one for every 267 and in Topeka, one for every 64 residents.

Prohibition does not prohibit.

Thanking your for your courtesy I beg to remain,

Yours for the truth,

CLINTON WUNDER,
Publicity Manager.

Press Comment.

Still, you will have to admit that the Kentucky Legislature has done very well when you consider it has been in session thirty days with only one fist fight on the floor of the House.—Houston Post.

A tight pinch would just about fit the Kentucky Judge who is seeking to preside and impartially rule in the trial of about twenty men who are charged in a criminal complaint with having wagered money that he would be elected.—Lincoln, Neb., Star.

A Louisville preacher says if you don't like a man quit thinking about him. Nonsense. What fun would there be in disliking a man if he were never in your thoughts? The best and safest way is simply to quit talking about him.—Houston Post.

Dies Aged 115.

Margaret Drake, colored, said to be 115 years old and reputed to be the oldest woman in Kentucky, died Sunday at her home in Wood ford county, following a protracted illness. Up to a few months ago, when she was taken ill, she possessed a remarkable memory for one of her great longevity and could tell about occurrences that belonged to past generations. She was highly respected by both white and colored residents of that section.—Blue Grass Clipper.

A Bank that is going after business, and going in the right way.

HOW? By promptness in serving its customers.
By courteous attention to their banking needs.
By readiness in meeting their requirements, and, above all
By perfect security of the funds intrusted to its care, having over $100.000.00 to secure depositors.
We have the largest Capital and Surplus of any Bank in this county, and are amply able to accommodate our patrons, and are willing at all times to afford them every accommodation justified by the rules of good and safe banking, whether their accounts are large or small.

Man or Animal?

A dog snaps and snarls because it can't reason or express itself in any other way.

A mule kicks because it hasn't sufficient brains to use them instead of its heels in making a protest.

But you are a human being, elevated above these brutes because you have brains, intelligence and reason.

It is all right for the dog and the mule to act that way, because nature intended it so, and they can't help it.

But it is neither a pretty spectacle nor a very flattering compliment to the human race when you can't express your thoughts in any other way than by snapping, snarling and kicking.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, gray hair, and remove dandruff, stop itching scalp, prevent falling hair, and make it grow luxuriantly. If half the hair is gone, one application will prove it will do all we claim. Barbo Compound is sold by druggists everywhere.

Rev. and Mrs. Geo. D. Prentiss of Beaver Lick, were visitors to friends here Saturday. Mrs. Prentiss who has been quite ill for some time recently returned from a visit to her parents at Winchester, and her health is much improved.

The Royal moving picture show is giving some very fine pictures at the shows Tuesday and Saturday nights, and the enterprising manager Roy D. Stamler deserves praise and patronage for the splendid attractions he is offering the public at The Royal.

Word was received here Monday morning that Mrs. Holloway, mother of Dr. G. F. Holloway, died at her home at Cave City, Barren county that morning. She had been ill for several months and Dr. Holloway was at her bedside for two weeks previous to her demise.

Fred Miller who travels for the Minnawaka Mfg., Co. in the territory of Mississippi and Tennessee, spent Sunday here with his parents Mr. and Mrs. John C. Miller and returned to Paris, Tenn., Monday to resume his work. He reports his sales more than double of last year.

The Walton Social Club entertained last Friday night with a most enjoyable dance at the opera house and about 25 couples attended and had a most delightful time. There were many from a distance and the music by a Cincinnati saxaphone band was a very pleasing feature.

Geo. J. Grubbs was at Rising Sun, Ind., last week investigating the report that Mrs. Robt. W. Galbreath of that city was burned to death by the explosion of an acetylene light plant, and found that her death was caused by the explosion of a coil oil lamp which she was carrying in her hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. W. Miller of Anderson, Ind., spent Sunday here with his cousin J. C. Miller and family. Mr. Miller is the supt. of the Western Southern Life Insurance Co., at Anderson and was in Cincinnati last week attending the dedication of their new building at 4th and Broadway.

A. M. Edwards, A. Ralph Edwards, D. B. Wallace, B. E. McElroy and Claude Wayland attended the Republican convention at Burlington last Saturday. The oftener one visits Burlington the better they like the place and its people for they are among the best that can be found anywhere.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Franks entertained a number of friends and relatives last Sunday in honor of Mr. Franks birthday anniversary. Among the many guests were "Uncle Billie" Wolfe and sister Miss Sue and none enjoyed the festivities more than they. Everybody wishes Mr. Franks the return of many more such happy birthdays.

Rev. E. C. Lacy, pastor of the Walton Christian church spent part of last week at Lexington attending the interdenominational missionary meeting of Kentucky at which there were 1,005 registered delegates. It was a wonderful meeting in many respects and particularly in its earnestness toward the uplift of humanity.

The services at the Walton Christian church last Sunday were particularly enjoyable for the sexton by the pastor Rev. E. C. Lacy was a jewel in thought and delivery, and besides the excellent music by the choir, Misses Mary and Sue Ransler rendered a duet, "Holy Twilight Hour" in most pleasing manner that charmed the congregation. Rev. Lacy is doing a fine work with the congregation and the church is feeling the result of his invigorating touch. He will preach next Sunday morning, March 5th, the usual hour, but no services Sunday night.

The delivery of tobacco has been quite active the past two weeks though the market seems to be weak and on the decline and those who sold early seems to have acted wisely. The loose leaf market will close in the next month as it is now showing a lagging in quantity and bidding and then it is the country speculator or shipping to the "breaks."

Walton Lodge, No. 106, Knights of Pythias, had a most delightful session last Thursday night when quite a number of visitors were in attendance by invitation. Speeches were made by several members and visitors and a most enjoyable time was had by all. A nice lunch of oyster soup, &c., was served. The lodge is wide-awake in every respect and is in a flourishing condition.

The Walton Methodist church began a revival Monday night with Rev. F. H. Pollitt of Lancaster, Garrard county, filling the pulpit and giving the congregation wholesome theological truths for digestion. The song services are under the direction of Prof. Omer Jenkins of Wilmore, Jessamine county, and with the aid of the splendid local talent some excellent music is being given. The meeting will continue about two weeks.

Alex Picket, who was formerly a resident of Walton, was accidentally killed at Springfield, Ohio, at which place he was employed by a telephone company. While cutting some limbs in a tall tree he lost his balance and fell to the ground, sustaining injuries from which he died when taken to a hospital. He was a son of Mrs. Thomas Nelson, who resides on High street, and was about twenty-five years of and unmarried. The remains were taken to Williamstown last Thursday for interment.

James Bevarly, of Louisville, an engineer on the L. & N. Railroad, was painfully injured at Covington last Thursday. He had just arrived with his train and was walking through the railroad yards when a large timber fell from a car that was being unloaded and pinioned him to the ground, Mr. Bevarly was rescued from his painful position and hurried to the hospital where it was found he had suffered no broken bones but was badly bruised, and he will soon be able to resume his position. His brother, S. W. Bevarly, who is the L. & N. Agent at Walton, hurried to his bedside, but finding that he was not seriously injured returned home.

Mrs. Mary Adams, widow of the late Rev. Samuel M. Adams, who has been an inmate of the Lakeland Insane asylum for a number of years, committed suicide last Thursday morning by drowning herself in the lake at Lakeland. Mrs. Adams was in her 59th year and was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. T. Elliston, deceased, and was born at Glencoe. She was a woman of many lovable qualities and her sad fate is greatly deplored by a large circle of friends who extend to the bereaved relatives their heartfelt sympathy. Undertaker Scott Chambers brought the remains here Friday, being taken to the residence of her daughter Mrs. Julia Adams Rouse, and the funeral took place at the Big Bone Baptist church Saturday morning, the interment being in the cemetery there. Mrs. Adams leaves five grown children, viz: John G. Adams of Bracht Kirtley Adams of Latonia, Bedford Adams of Cincinnati, Presley of Detroit, Michigan, and Mrs. Julia A. Rouse of Walton.

Condemns Road Management.

A grand jury impaneled at Independence, Ky., last Wednesday made its report to Judge F. M. Tracy. Roadways in Kenton county are declared to be in bad condition and improperly maintained, the report says. A clause says: "The grand jury feels that there has been a woeful lack of competent management and an absence of any systematic plans of constructing or maintaining the thoroughfares of the county."

Extravagance is charged in the continuance of the present system. A patrol system is recommended whereby road supervisors or others in charge are required to make frequent reports to the County Commissioners relative to road conditions. With the adoption of scientific methods the report declares, the alleged intolerable condition of roads in Kenton County can be economically terminated.

The report contains no indictments and says that there is nothing in the Southern part of the county requiring investigation. Referring to the tragedy on Fleming's Hill, when the bodies of Edward Sagers and his wife, Emma Sagers, were found in their country home on the Independence pike, February 8, 1916, the grand jury says that no evidence had been presented upon which it could work, and referred the matter to the next grand jury.—Covington item in Friday's Enquirer.

In Kenton Circuit Court Monday Judge Frank M. Tracy handed down judgment and order of sale of property in case of Bank of Independence against Kenton county Agricultural Association. The order awards the bank a first lien against the property to satisfy judgment of $6300; the Erlanger Deposit Bank llen, to satisfy judgment for $1100, and the Grant Lumber Company a lien for $78.63. The property is the Erlanger Fair Grounds.

Our community has again been saddened by the entrance of death into our midst. The soul of Thos. W. Howard has been transplanted from this little world to rest eternally in the paradise of our Lord. "Tommy," as he was known by all, was born July 5th, 1896 and died February 28, 1916, being 19 years, 7 months and 23 days old. His death was the result of nearly two months' illness of typhoid fever. Although he was not a member of any church, during his illness he learned to love the Master and several times expressed a desire to become a member of the Baptist church when he recovered. Almost his last words, while on the brink of eternity, were, "I am going home," and with that the little barque of his life glided gently across the river of death. He was born and raised in this community and has a host of friends who, with his mother and brother, will deeply feel his loss. He was a kind, good boy and has done many an act of helpfulness for the writer. His family are heartbroken, but what a relief to know that he was taken in his youth before the hand of time had bowed his body or the springs of life dried up. The funeral was held at his mother's home, Rev. Carter having charge. After the discourse the remains were conveyed to the cemetery beneath a covering of beautiful flowers, there to await the judgment morn. The community in general tender heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved ones, yet, in this the hour of their supreme sorrow realizing of how little avail our efforts are to comfort, we direct them to Him, the great comforter, who has said, "Come unto me, all ye who sorrow and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." C. E. S.

Card of Thanks—

The interest which our many friends have shown in our deep sorrow, the loss of our dear son and brother, Thomas Howard, has lightened the burden, and we want to extend thanks for the many kind expressions and acts of sympathy received. We especially wish to extend our most grateful appreciation to the young men for the beautiful flowers; Rev. R. H. Carter; the undertaker, Mr. Stier and the members of the lodge for sitting up.

LETTER FROM ILLINOIS.

The Glory Trail—The Sawdust Trail.

Billy Sunday has earned the distinction of being the greatest living evangelist. Especially is this true as regards the great numbers won from sin. His great meeting in Philadeplia takes rank as the most wonderful religious ingathering of our times. Allowing a great shrinkage from the number reported to have "hit the sawdust trail," then perhaps much good was done. The question has been asked, "wherein lies the wonderful power of this man over the people?" Some say it is due to his earnestness. This is true, we would say, but only in part. The momentum of his greatness goes before and follows after. The fact that a man attains to distinction in any caling gives him power over men and women, and all else being equal this momentune increases. Sunday has been charged with using too much slang in his preaching. This may be true. If so this draws a certain element as regards the crowd, and many of these may be brought under the spell of the great evangelist and turn to a better life.

Another man who has stepped into prominence as an evangelist is Charles Reign Scoville. Among his recent great meetings is one in Jefferson City, Mo., where 4,000 hit the glory trail. His last meeting just closed in Emporia, Kansas in which something over 4,000 hit the glory trail.

In one or two respects Scoville is believed to out point Sunday. First, from the standpoint ability Scoville wins. In the next place Scoville preaches more of the Book than Sunday does, and rarely puts anything into his sermons that could be termed slang. There are eleven people in the Scoville company. Billy Sunday is a Presbyterian, Scoville is a minister in the Christian church or Disciples. The term "hitting the glory trail" applies to Scovile's converts.

A recent convert to Christ is Mrs. Bob Fitzsimmons, wife of the famous pugilist. She has identified herself with the Christian church in one of the prominent cities of Southern California. She has also taken the lecture platform.

The writer is in his 80th year and a few days ago preached the funeral here of an old friend and Christian woman in her eighty-fourth year.

My kind regards to the people in old Boone county, the birth place and boyhood days of your scribe.

Elder J. E. MASTERS.
Dorchester, Ill.

P. S.—The writer has heard both Scoville and Sunday.

FLORENCE.

A pleasant social event of the past week was the dance and supper given by the Crescendo school or Mother's Club at the Town Hall, Saturday evening. This was their first entertainment and was attended by an overflowing house. The hall was beautifully decorated in green and white, attending waiters and members wearing caps and aprons to correspond. The visiting guests had a round of pleasure, especially the younger children and mothers. Music was furnished by Metzgers Bros. string band, piano accompaniment by Miss Nell Rouse. The proceeds of the entertainment will go to Florence school for improvements.

About seventy guests assembled at the home of Dr. and Mrs. T. B. Castleman, Thursday evening, March 2, 1916, to a shower given by Fidelity Baptist S. S. Class in honor of H. Clay Castleman and wife, nee Blanche Kirtley. The presents, while too numerous to mention, were both beautiful and useful. The class presented them with quite a nice set of silver spoons, sugar shell and butter spreader. The evening was spent in games and music, both vocal and instrumental. After refreshments were served the guests departed, wishing Clay and wife many years of happiness. They in return wish to thank everyone who so nicely remembered them as it was an evening of cheer that will always be bright in their memory.

The only old fashioned man who carries a pair of saddle pockets in this part of the country, is Henry Clore, who lives three miles out on the East Bend road. He bought them at the sale of the personal estate of Jas. P. Kelly, deceased, 37 years ago. They were made by J. M. Riddell, who had a saddle and harness shop in Burlington many years ago, and, as Mr. Kelly used the saddle-pockets several years, no doubt they are nearly half a century old. They are well preserved.

COVER CROPS FOR ORCHARDS

Means Provided for Preventing Winter Soil Erosion, and to Hold Moisture in Spring.

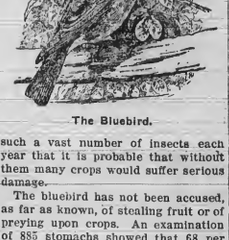
(By C. W. RAPP, Department of Horticulture, Oklahoma Agricultural College.)

Any orchardist who neglects cover crops is missing a good opportunity for improving his orchard. In fact, we might almost say that the cover crop is an essential. Its use offers a means of preventing winter soil erosion, adding humus and retarding fall growth of trees.

Cover crops are especially important in hillside orchards. If the soil in these orchards is left bare the heavy fall, winter and spring rains will wash off the top soil and reduce the land to a rough infertile condition. Cover crops will largely prevent this erosion and will also cause large amounts of water to be held in the soil during the winter and spring.

Oklahoma soils are generally deficient in humus and nitrogen. The summer cultivation which is recommended for orchards in this state prevents the growing of summer crops. Cover crops are, however, beneficial to the orchard, and when plowed up in the spring aid greatly in improving soil conditions.

Wet falls are especially trying to orchards. The wet weather causes the trees to take on new growth which is easily winter-killed. Cover crops will aid greatly in preventing this growth. They utilize the surplus moisture and the result is that late growth is largely prevented.



Wheat, barley and rye are especially adapted to Oklahoma conditions. These crops should be planted as soon as possible in order to get well established before cold weather. This early planting is especially important in case of wet weather conditions.

BID THE THRUSHES WELCOME

These Birds Do Farmer Little Harm and Much Good—Hard to Overestimate Their Value.

That the group of birds in which are included robins and bluebirds do a great deal of good and very little harm to agriculture, is the conclusion reached by investigators who have carefully studied the food habits of these birds. Altogether there are within the limits of the United States eleven species of thrushes, five of which are commonly known as robins and bluebirds. The other six include the Townsend solitaire, the wood, the veery, the gray-cheek, the olive-back and the hermit thrushes.

The robins and bluebirds nest close to houses, and even the shyest of the other species are content with the seclusion of an acre or two of woodland or swamp. For this eason these are among the best known and most carefully protected of native American birds, and at times their numbers become so great that it is feared they will do much harm to crops and fruit. Recent investigations, however, show that there is very little ground for this fear. On the other hand, they destroy such a vast number of insects each year that it is probable that without them many crops would suffer serious damage.

The bluebird has not been accused, as far as known, of stealing fruit or of preying upon crops. An examination of 855 stomachs showed that 68 per cent of the food consists of insects and their allies, while the other 32 per cent is made up of various vegetable substances, found mostly in stomachs taken in winter. Beetles constitute 21 per cent of the whole food, grasshoppers 22, caterpillars 10, and various other insects 9, while a number of spiders and myriapods, about six per cent, comprise the remainder of the animal diet. All these are more or less harmful, except a few predacious beetles, which amount to 9 per cent. In view of the large consumption of grasshoppers and caterpillars we may at least condone this offense, if such it may be called.

Arranging Protectors.

In putting the tree protectors around the tree, it is not advisable to wrap them tightly around it; it is better for the tree to have an air space between the protector and the bark. If the trouble is mainly due to rabbits, the tree protector would undoubtedly be better than the mounding method, the latter being more efficient in the control of mice.

Thinning Fruit.

Thin the fruit if it needs it. Thinning is better than props under limbs—better for your purse and for the trees.

Migratory Bird Law Continues In Force.

A misleading statement has recently become current in newspapers of the Mississippi Valley and elsewhere, to the effect that the Department of Agriculture has suspended the enforcement of the Federal regulations under the Migratory Bird Law and by this means has enabled sportsmen, under State law, to shoot wild fowl the coming spring

Under the Federal regulations as they now stand, the season on all migratory wild fowl is closed until next autumn throughout the United States Federal inspectors and wardens are required, and others interested in the protection of wild fowl are requested to report to the Department of Agriculture all cases of violations of the regulations, in order that proper action may be taken

The Department of Agriculture has no power to suspend the law or to pardon violations of the regulations Doubtless the erroneous impression on which the newspaper statements are based, has grown out of the pendency of litigation involving the constitutionality of the Act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, under which the regulations were promulgated The lower Federal courts disagreed as to the validity of the statute and the issue was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States The case was argued in the Supreme Court in October, 1915, but has not been decided Following the lower court decisions Congress appropriated money for the purpose of continuing the enforcement of the law The Department of Agriculture is bound to report to the Department of Justice violations of the regulations if the Supreme Court should declare the law constitutional All persons should, therefore, be warned of the danger they incur from failure to few days

Sees Forty-Cent Gasoline.

At the Automobile Club of America many members seem agreed that while the situation is so grave that it is likely to deal a crushing blow to the automobile industry this spring, yet there was nothing that could be done to combat the schedules put in effect by the Standard Oil Co

A prominent member, who requested that his name be withheld, said he had attended a conference of prominent automobile men a few days ago, when Percy Rockefeller met them and discussed the chances for a reduction in prices these men were endeavoring to make a blanket contract for gasoline with the Standard Oil Company, and were willing to obligate themselves for the purchase of many thousand barrels

"There is no use in talking contract or reduction" Mr. Rockefeller is said to have replied "There are three big factors which figure in the high cost of gasoline and until these difficulties are surmounted the price will continue to be increased You must not be surprised if you have to pay 40 cents for your gasoline before summer wanes

"In the first place, we could sell every gallon we refine to the allies at prices far in advance of those we are now receiving In fact, the allies would willingly pay 40 cents for our total output today Then, with the Panama Canal blocked, it costs us more to get the oil to Eastern points than it would otherwise

"Finally, the Mexican situation is such that hundreds of wells are idle and we are unable to get the crude oil These three obstacles are insurmountable at present"

The last bushel of hemp seed to be had in Clark county, and perhaps in this section, as Clark is in the center of the hemp-growing section of the State, was sold last week at $2 per bushel, the highest price ever known Thousands of acres of tobacco land will be sown in hemp, and dealers are offering as high as $8 50 per hundred for the 1916 crop David S. Gay, of Winchester, one of the largest hemp dealers of the nation, has purchased several hundred acres of the 1916 crop at this figure —Danville Messenger

D B. Moore dropped into the Times office last Monday and related the following story about a sow he owns Now, we have never seen the sow nor the pigs, but we do know Mr Moore, and can therefore print the story with a clear conscience: He says that he has a sow that has been the mother of four litters of pigs, amounting to a total of fifty-four, and that he saved fifty-two of them In the first litter were thirteen, and she raised twelve of them; in the next two litters were twelve each, with all the pigs saved; in the last litter were seventeen, with sixteen saved This record can hardly be beaten by any sow in the county —Allen County Times.

In the Springtime

The nineteenth line of "Locksley Hall" tells us in the potent and poetic language of Tennyson that "in the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love"

An afternoon in the parks shows how true this sentiment is Not only do the thoughts of man turn to the theme of love, but the birds and the beasts seem to feel the inspiration of the season

Pigeons coo and the doves in their soft sweet notes of sympathy seem planning for the future It is the mating season. It is the season when one feels that they must respond to the call of Nature, that they must mate and multiply

Love takes up the harp of life in the spring time and touches responsive notes The ring of the hammer, in a mechanical sense, is heard It is the note of home-building Go into any section of the city and there will be found evidence of the productive season The world seems to re-awaken The trees blush with the heat of the rising sap Young twigs begin to swell The very earth gives out a breath of promise

The wonders of expectation are realized in spring The silent succession of days at this season suggest nothing but necessity To most men only the cessation of the miracle would be miraculous

Birds chant their love song The nights are soft The moon of spring seems to be doubly blessed with light The smile of the stars bring inspiration It is a time when we feel that the edict of the Almighty should be fulfilled that men should marry and multiply

That we are to have an early spring seems expressed in all of the plant life of the woods and fields

Spring is already hanging her infant blossoms on the trees and shrubs The willow and the hazel are showing the green of the early year The grass is taking on a sheen of recovered life The rough and stormy sire of the season is dead Grim winter is gone. We may have a touch of chill winds and an echo of the north may be heard, but we are passing through the door of the season of sunshine and roses, that inexpressibly sweet season of serenity—Exchange

Convict Road Builders.

Warden Wells' plan for giving convicts expert instruction in road building should be productive of two results, aside from the very obvious one of improving the quality of work that will be done under the new convict labor law. It can scarcely fail to effect the morals of the working force by virtue of the stimulation of self-respect that follows inevitably the doing of consciously expert work. But a more practical consideration is the benefit that will come from adequate supervision, a department of road-building in which deficiency is notorious and costly.

It is the plan at the Frankfort Reformatory to carry the instruction sufficiently far to provide for real and generous aid for the supervising engineers on the part of the convicts themselves. This is aiming at the heart of the matter. In every programme of road improvement launched in the State in recent years, the real aims of the enthusiasts have been in danger of defeat because of inadequacy or inefficiency in the supervisory work. It is not to be supposed that an untrained convict can be converted into an expert supervising engineer by a few weeks' training. But no very real reason appears why a certain number of the men should not be given the kind of instruction that will enable them to serve as valuable lieutenants. Something of this sort is needed to repair as far as may be the discrepancy existing between the elaborate programme for improvement and the limited number of supervising engineers provided.

As for the effect upon the morale of the men, evidence is too plentiful in other States and in other kinds of work in this State, to permit of any doubt of beneficial results. The "pride of a man in the work of his hands" as a factor in stimulating respect for himself and his work, is a commonplace, in psychology. On the whole, there is every reason for both road enthusiasts and prison reformers to find number of this is gratifying in the convict labor programme that lies just ahead.—Courier-Journal.

DAIRY FACTS

LOCATION OF MILK IN A COW

Secretory Glands Take Raw Materials From the Blood and Manufacture Them Into Product.

In the system of the dairy cow there are two kinds of glands: excretory glands and secretory glands. A good example of the excretory gland is the kidney. An excretory gland does not manufacture, but simply serves as a vehicle for transferring waste from the body.

The secretory glands are manufacturers. They take the raw materials from the blood and manufacture them into a special product. The mammary gland, located in the upper part of the udder of the cow, is a secretory gland. It takes the raw materials from the blood and manufactures milk.

The large veins seen under the abdomen of the cow do not contain milk, as a great many people suppose. They contain impure blood. This blood is returning to the heart. It has passed through the mammary gland of the cow, deposited the food material and absorbed the waste.

As fast as the milk is manufactured from the blood, it is stored in the udder of the cow. The milk is being manufactured all the time that the cow is fed and cared for. She works day and night. So far as known milk is not manufactured any faster during milking than it is any other time, but the process of milk manufacture continues, and is in proportion to the size and quality of the mammary gland, amount of blood and raw material supplied by the cow.

DEHORNING CHUTE IS USEFUL

end with loose pin which can be removed quickly and animal driven out in front if desired. After the animal is fastened in the stanchion a rope run around its neck and nose is fastened to the windiass and drawn through.

WATER OF MUCH IMPORTANCE

Cows Giving Milk Require Great Quantities of Water—As Essential as Feed in Winter.

Water is fully as important to the dairy cows as feed during the winter. They must have access to it so that they can drink all they want, whether they have it in automatic water basins, or in the yard tanks.

Cows giving milk need great quantities of water. Careful experiments have proved that it requires more than five pounds of water for every pound of milk produced by the cow.

DAIRY NOTES

The milk crop is one which comes in every day.

• • •

When possible, test the cow's milk before buying her.

• • •

Never buy a cow whose milk tests below three per cent.

• • •

Stanchions are a thing of the past. Cow ties are now in order.

• • •

After the good cow is born there is lots of work in her making.

• • •

The sooner dairy tools are washed after using the more easily they will be cleansed.

• • •

Why not settle on dairy farming as a business? Then breed and feed and work for a better breed.

• • •

Don't use the milk pail for carrying feed to the pigs if you desire to be classed as a good dairyman.

• • •

The grade bull calf will not pay for the cost of rasing if the dairyman can dispose of his products otherwise.

• • •

There's as much in the man behind the cow as in the cow herself. Brains count everywhere in dairying.

• • •

As a rule milk should not be used within 15 days before calving or during the first five days after calving.

• • •

You don't know much about your cows until you weigh their milk and test it with a Babcock tester. Keep records.

FARM STOCK

KEEP HORSES IN GOOD ORDER

Slim Economy to Permit Animals to Fall Off in Flesh—Oats and Corn Are Best Grains.

It is poor economy to let the horses fall off in flesh by reducing the grain. Horses cannot be kept in good order on straw and a poor quality of hay. They need a little grain, even if they are idle. To have the horses strong for spring plowing, harrowing and other heavy and exhaustive work, they must be kept thrifty and in good flesh all through the winter. Oats and corn and bran are the best grains. If there is no steady work, take off the shoes and give them daily exercise in the yard every suitable day.

A grass pasture adjoining the stables is a great convenience. The stock may be turned in when the sod is dry and the weather suitable; they will get the exercise they need and will keep warm by grazing. Most stockmen provide winter as well as summer pasture for their stock.

The driving horses, if used on icy roads, should have shoes sharpened. It is dangerous to drive a smooth horse when the road is icy. The wear and tear of the nervous strain takes too much out of a horse, if nothing more serious happens.

Chain overshoes can be had at the agricultural stores. Keep a pair on hand to use in case of a sudden freeze.

Give the horses judicious feed, daily exercise and good grooming. When this is done the horse's usefulness may be extended for a number of years.

TREATING SHEEP FOR WORMS

Pests May Be Combatted by Pasture Rotation, Combined With Drugs Injurious to Insects.

The stomach worm is the worst pest affecting sheep. Lambs are more susceptible than older sheep, probably because the older sheep are accustomed to the presence of the worm. In the spring, soon after lambing, the old sheep should each receive a dose of one or two ounces of gasoline, followed by a small dose of epsom salts. After a day or two they should be placed in a worm-free pasture, if possible.

In July treat the whole herd, including the lambs, with gasoline, and turn them into new pasture, and repeat the process in November. Pasture rotation, combined with drugs that are injurious to the worm, is a practical method of successfully combating this worm.

ERADICATE LICE ON CATTLE

Frequently Serious Pest on Stock in Winter—Any of Various Dips Are Quite Effective.

Lice on cattle and young stock are frequently a serious pest in winter. Any of the various dips advertised or sold for this purpose are effective. They can be put on with a sponge or brush and worked in thoroughly to the skin, but it is not always safe to wet an animal all over in cold weather.

Kerosene and lard rubbed in from horns to the tail is a safe and sure remedy. An even better one is to use powdered sulphur. Rub it in well with the hand and repeat in two weeks. There is no danger from using this.

Fill Up Mud Holes.

Do away with all the mud holes. Nothing thrives in them, not even the hog.

A constant struggle, a ceaseless battle to wring success from inhospitable surroundings is the price of all great achievements.—Success.

EGGLESS DISHES.

When eggs are high a few recipes in which they are absent will be welcomed at this season.

Black Cake.—Take a cupful of brown sugar, four tablespoonfuls of butter, a half cupful of cocoa, dissolved in a little hot water in the cup, and fill up the cup with milk. Add 1½ cupfuls of flour and a teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in a tablespoonful of water. Bake in a sheet. Cut in small squares after icing.

Ginger Cookies.—One cupful each of brown sugar and lard, 1¼ cupfuls of molasses, a third of a cupful of vinegar, one teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in the vinegar, a teaspoonful of cinnamon, a teaspoonful of salt and a tablespoonful of ginger. Mix with flour to roll.

Molasses Cookies.—Heat in a saucepan a cupful of shortening, a cupful of molasses and a cupful of sugar, add spices and flour enough to handle. Roll thin and cut, handling quickly.

Lunch Cake.—Take 1½ cupfuls of sugar, add a half cupful of softened butter, a cupful of milk, three cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful each of cloves and cinnamon, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one cupful of chopped raisins, well floured. Bake in a loaf.

Apple Sauce.—Take a cupful of brown sugar or corn sirup, one-half cupful of butter or lard, one cupful of unsweetened apple sauce, made from sour cooking apples, one cupful of chopped raisins, two teaspoonfuls of cocoa, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, half a teaspoonful of cloves and the same of nutmeg, two cupfuls of flour, sifted, with one teaspoonful of baking powder. Bake in a shallow pan.

Chocolate Wafers.—Take a cupful each of brown sugar and molasses, a half-cupful of butter, the same amount of lard, a half-cupful of chocolate, grated, a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a fourth of a cupful of boiling water, a teaspoonful of vanilla and flour enough to make a stiff dough. Form in balls the size of a hickory nut, slightly flatten, and place on a baking sheet an inch apart. Bake in a moderate oven.

NOURISHING SOUPS.

There is no dish which so touches the spot when one is tired as a hot, satisfying soup. To serve a well-seasoned soup, attention must be paid to its preparation and the combination of seasonings. Just a pinch or a grain of some seasoning makes or mars the dish. Follow directions when you find the kind your family enjoys, use care in measurements, and always taste the food many times to make sure that the seasoning is enough.

Emergency Soup.—Take a can of salmon, drain off the oil and rub the fish through a sieve. Add one and a half teaspoonfuls of salt to a quart of scalding hot milk, stir in the fish and four tablespoonfuls of flour that has been blended with two tablespoonfuls of the oil from the can; cook until smooth, and serve with a dash of red pepper and a sprinkling of minced parsley on the top of each cup. Serve with toasted crackers.

Corn Chowder.—Fry a half pound of diced salt pork in a big saucepan until brown; add one sliced onion and cook until light brown; then add four sliced potatoes that have been parboiled ten minutes, a can of corn and a pint of boiling water; cook until the vegetable are tender, then add a quart of rich milk, pepper, salt and a half dozen crackers which have been soaked in a little milk. Serve with a cracker on each dish of soup. Codfish may be used in this dish in place of corn and is a most satisfying chowder. Add the salt, fish, shredded and soaked, with the milk at the last.

Scotch Broth.—Soak two pounds of lean mutton from the neck in two quarts of water for an hour. Simmer for an hour and a half, adding water to keep the bulk to about three pints. Now add a carrot, an onion and a turnip, chopped fine, and a tablespoonful of barley, salt and pepper to taste. Cook three hours at the simmer point. Serve with chopped parsley and small sour pickles.

GASOLINE GOING UP

The Supply Is Inadequate For the Needs of the Trade.

Gasoline has gone up another cent a gallon wholesale. Garages and other large retailers in New York now pay 24 cents a gallon in bulk and the price to consumers is 26 cents a gallon in drums. This makes the advance 13 cents a gallon since last summer. In spite of the protests and assertions of certain newspapers, the American public is being favored by the refiners. These New York City prices compare with 33½ to 38 cents a gallon for motor gasoline by drums for export by the shipload or less in the port of New York, and the refiners are not filling all the export orders that come to them.

Gasoline is dear because the consumption has increased enormously in the last year, while the supply of high-grade crude oil that yields a large percentage of it, has decreased, and the price of crude has almost doubled. Last January 16,918,574 gallons of gasoline were exported, as compared with 13,168,852 gallons in January, 1915; and for the seven months ending January 31, last, the exports were 156,973,271 gallons, as compared with 120,424,877 gallons in the corresponding months of the previous year. Exports of lubricating, residuum and fuel oils have also increased, but illuminating oil has not been moving quite so freely to foreign countries.

It is a clear case of supply and demand with the supply inadequate for the needs of the trade. Where it will end none can tell because the consumption of motor gasoline is increasing every day with every automobile, aeroplane and motor boat that is made and sold. A fortune awaits the man who can invent a motor for automobiles that will consume illuminating or heavier oils of which the supply is excessive, or who can make a competitive substitute. Alcohol and benzol are possible substitutes that would be available at a price.—New York Commercial.

MESSAGE FROM BRYAN

Asks Congress to Refuse Passports on Belligerent Ships.

Telegrams to Congressmen from William Jennings Bryan, supporting the movement for warning Americans off armed ships began arriving in Washington Friday Representative Bailey, of Pennsylvania, after a conference with Majority Leader Kitchin, made public a telegram reading:

"I honestly hope that Congress will speedily announce legislation refusing passports to Americans traveling on belligerent ships, or, still better, refusing clearance to belligerent ships carrying American passengers No owner of belligerent ships will claim that he has the right to safeguard a contraband cargo with American lines and no citizen should be permitted to endanger the peace of the Nation at a time like this If Congress has the right to declare war it certainly has the right to promote peace by restraining citizens from taking unnecessary risks. A mayor keeps the people of his city out of the danger zone during a riot. Can our Government afford to do less when the world is in riot?"

"That is right," Representative Bailey quoted Mr. Kitchin as saying, when he read the telegram.

February, the birth month of lambs, was unusually favorable to farmers who are raising sheep, as the open weather was decidedly favorable for the advent of the lambkins. Most of the lambs have been saved which made their advent last month and bid fair to be in a prime condition for the markets in July and August. The market this year will probably be as good, if not better than in 1915.—Elizabethtown Mirror.

When Edward Morrow was suggested for the Vice-Presidency the cuckoo fell dead.

Kentucky Republicans instructed their delegates for Fairbanks, of Indiana, for President.

Winston-Salem, N. C., now manufactures more tobacco products than any other city in the world.

There will be no protests, diplomatic or otherwise, against any one submarining his own bad habits.

Money talks, but all of Carnegie's millions can't coax the scrappers over there to stop and listen.

Not the negro in the woodpile but the negro in the convention gave the Republicans at Louisville a scare last week.

It has been announced in Washington that Col. Bryan will support Woodrow Wilson for a renomination. The unexpected happens often.

The session of the legislature has widened the breach in the Democratic party if it has done nothing else. You know what that means at the election this fall.

The legislature will adjourn next Monday without having accomplished any constructive legislation, but be it said to its credit it made very few unnecessary appropriations.

There are enough Bull Moose at large in this country to give the G. O. P. considerable trouble if they become angried at the elephant's action in the matter of choosing a candidate for the presidency.

President Wilson, who has had a laborious time keeping the Ship of State off of the breakers the past three years, will have no opposition for a renomination. When crossing a stream is a very perilous time in which to change horses.

Olga Check Fergnson, of Logan county, won the grand prize for the championship of girls' canning clubs in Kentucky. On one-tenth of an acre of land she raised 5,944 pounds of tomatoes, which she put into 1,076 cans, of which she sold 800 cans at a profit of $42.47.

From all indications Falmouth will be the proud possessor of a new postoffice building in the near future. Congressman A. B. Rouse had introduced a bill appropriating $50,000 for that purpose, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.—Pendleton ian.

There is no considerable element in this country who want a war that they may send their sons to the front to be butchered. The war element consists of those who expect the sons of others to undergo the hardships at the front while they and their friends remain at home and amass wealth through the medium of fat government contracts. The poor devils are those who would have to meet the enemy as targets.

The voters of Boone county have about two months in which to make up their minds as to how to vote on the proposed road bond issue. This seems to be the status of the proposition just now: Those living on turnpikes are opposed to it because they do not want the proceeds of the bonds used solely for the construction and maintaining pikes, while those on dirt roads are opposed to the bond issue because they fear the proceeds will be used to purchase and free turnpikes. Thus it is seen that the question resolves itself into this: One class is afraid that the other class will receive the greater benefit from the bonds if they are voted.

Another thing that is having its weight in the matter, seemingly, is a lack of confidence in the fiscal court dealing fairly with all sections of the county in the construction of roads. With the two factions fighting eachother and both opposing the bond issue for reasons above stated it looks like the proposition has rough sailing before it. The fact that what helps one section of the country helps all sections has been lost sight of entirely in this matter, and direct and immediate personal interest is uppermost in the minds of the greater number of voters.

ANOTHER CONVENTION

May Be Called By Negroes to Select Four Delegates.

Lexington, March 2—The negroes, who were reduced to one half a vote on the delegation to the Republican National Convention, which is to meet in Chicago June 7th, are so dissatisfied at the action of the state convention in Louisville yesterday that a second convention may be called by the Republican Pacific and Political League

This is an organization of negroes, of which Geo W. Gentry, Stanford, is President; D E. Underwood, Frankfort, Vice President, and J E. Wood, Danville, Secretary. Ed. Chenault, a member of the organization, upon his return to Lexington today from Louisville said:

"We hope the white delegates will attend this convention, which probably will be called within 30 days. The convention then will choose four delegates, one of whom will be a negro, and we believe these delegates elected in proper form will be entitled to seats in the Chicago convention

FRANKFORT, Ky. (Special).—With the Rules Committee in charge of all bills in both houses of the Kentucky Legislature, the closing hours of the 1916 session is marked by long hours of service on the part of the Solons.

Administration pledges of the Democratic party are being given preference and it appears that most of those promised the people in the campaign of last fall will be passed.

In convention in Louisville, Kentucky Republicans reduced the representation of its negro element to one half vote, and instructed its delegation from the State-at-large to the national convention at Chicago, June 7th, to "vote for Charles Warren Fairbanks, of Indiana, as long as his name is before that convention."

The lone negro on the delegation is Phish. Brown, of Hopkinsville, and the white delegates are Edwin P. Morrow, of Somerset; Congressman John W. Langley, of Pikeville; former Governor A. E. Willson, of Louisville; Colonel Richard P. Ernst, of Covington; Judge E. C. O'Rear, of Frankfort; Congressman Caleb Powers, of Barboursville, and William Marshall Bullitt, of Louisville.

Morrow offered to surrender his place in order to avoid a split in the Log Cabin party, and Caleb Powers also announced his willingness to yield for harmony's sake, but the delegates held both intact.

Judge McKenzie Moss, of Bowling Green, was permanent Chairman of the State convention.

There was no opposition to the re-election of E. T. Franks, Owensboro for Chairman of the State Central Committee, nor was there anybody offering for the place of Alvis S. Bennett, of Louisville, who was re-elected Secretary.

The election of John W. McCulloch, of Owensboro, as National Committeeman from Kentucky, which occurred before daylight early in the morning, at a meeting of a faction which was represented by 13½ of the 26 representatives, has created a big stir among Kentucky Republicans, and threats of a contest are being made

The negroes are also dissatisfied with only a one-half of vote representation and may make a contest also, it is stated.

Senator Stricklett presented a resolution fixing March 20th as the date for convening the Senate to try the articles of impeachment against J. E Williams, Judge of McCreary County which have been filed. This date did not meet with the approval of many of the Senators, some of they saying that urgent business called them home at the close of the session. Others argued that the time intervening between the adjournment of the Legislature and March 20th would not give Judge Williams and his attorneys sufficient time to prepare their case. The Senate finally fixed Monday, April 10th, as the time for the trial.

The Rules Committee of the Senate is authorized to prepare rules of procedure and practice for the government of the Senate while sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

Judge Williams is charged in the petition asking for impeachment with issuing warrants in felony cases without affidavit; being delinquent in paying money into the State Treasury; exceeding his authority in suspending sentences imposed by his court and being intoxicated when on duty.

The Overstreet bill, to reduce the appropriation of the Kentucky Children's Home Society of Louisville from $50,000 to $25,000 annually, and to provide for the payment of all expenses incident to the running of the home by the State Sinking Fund Commissioners, was killed by the Senate by a vote of 23 to 9.

The Mathers bill, to license and regulate roving horse traders, passed by a vote of 46 to 25. The purpose of the bill is to regulate the movements of roving bands of gypsies. The bill fixes a license of $10.

* * *

Representative Minor's bill, to prohibit banks from declaring a dividend until their surplus amounts to 10 per cent of the capital, was passed 46 to 27.

Senator Hunaker's bill providing for the working of convicts on the public roads, and a companion bill to prohibit interference with convicts employed outside of the prison walls, was passed in the Senate with little opposition.

The bill provides that the Board of Prison Commissioners of Public Roads shall assign such prisoners as are not prohibited from being worked outside of the prison walls to be used in the manufacturing, quarrying, mining and preparation of road and bridge material to be used by the State Department in the construction of roads and bridges. The Commissioners will pay for the services of these convicts from the State road fund at the rate of $1 a day for each convict hired.

The Commissioner of Public Roads, with the approval of the Governor, is empowered to purchase the necessary machinery and equipment for the construction of roads and bridges. The sum to be expended is limited to 10 per cent of the State aid fund. It is estimated that $70,000 will be available for the purchase of machinery and equipment.

The Senate, by a vote of 23 to 11, passed the substitute for the bill of Senator Stricklett to rearrange the 38 senatorial districts of Kentucky, the substitute having been prepared by Senator Stricklett.

The rearrangement gives the Republicans more power in some sections and works likewise for the Democrats in other parts of the State. It was an administration measure and will likely pass the House.

The bill of Senator Evans to recodify the militia laws passed 26 to 0, after having several amendments tacked on. It limits the amount to be spent for salaries to one-half of the appropriation known as the State militiary fund.

* * *

Senator Montgomery's bill to prohibit pandering passed 22 to 0, with an amendment fixing the punishment for violation from one to five years instead of two to ten years.

* * *

By a vote of 27 to 1, the Senate passed the bill of Senator Lewis to permit counties to vote tax for roads and bridges. Under the provisions of the bill an additional levy of 20 cents may be voted for building roads and bridges. The bill does not in any way affect the provisions of the present law as to bond issues.

* * *

Although defeated two weeks ago, the bill of Senator Speer to require consideration to be named in deeds passed 21 to 5. The bill met no opposition on the floor of the Senate when called up for passage by the Rules Committee.

* * *

The House passed unanimously Senator Comb's bill to permit telephone companies to consolidate. This measure, which passed the Senate some time ago to the Enrolling Clerk. There was no discussion when it passed the House. Being a constitutional amendment, it needed sixty votes in the House. It received 86 Since the Governor has no power to disapprove constitutional amendment bills, this amendment, having passed both Houses, will be submitted to the voters at the next general election.

* * *

The House concurred in the Senate amendments to the Vance-Speer corrupt practices act which will now be come a law.

* * *

Fraternal benefit societies are placed under the supervision of the State Insurance Commission by a bill introduced by Representative Greene which passed unanimously. The purpose of this bill, called an act to regulate fraternal benefit societies, is to protect the public from "wildcat" orders.

* * *

Representative E. D. Smith introduced a bill proposing to increase the State license on saloons to $750.

* * *

Governor Stanley has signed the administration text-book bill. It provides that not more than three text-books may be changed at any text-book adoption. The bill was introduced by Senator Rogers.

* * *

Representative Hutchcraft's bill requiring concerns engaged in the trading stamp business to pay a license of $1,000 passed the House by a vote of 51 to 23.

* * *

The bill imposing a jail sentence in addition to a fine on operators of hand-books was called from the orders of the day in the House by Representative Murphy and passed, 75 to 8.

* * *

The House passed the bill of Representative Hutchcraft providing for the assessment and collection of inheritance taxes. He claimed the bill will bring in revenue to the State between $500,000 and $800,000 annually. The vote was 74 to 6.

* * *

The bill of Representative Weed providing for State depositories and regulating them was passed unanimously.

* * *

The Woman Suffrage amendment appears to be doomed. An effort was made in the House to bring it from the order of the day over the head of the Rules Committee, but this failed the necessary two-third vote by only two votes. Another effort may be made to bring it out during the closing hours of the session.

* * *

The bill of Representative Nichols changing the name of the State University to the University of Kentucky passes unanimously.

* * *

There was no opposition to the bill of Representative Hobbs making the desertion of a child under 16 years of age by either parent a felony.

Shipping by Parcel Post

A South Dakota county agent has developed a trade in apples by parcel post in his community, which has resulted in material advantage to the producer. He found that bushel crates of apples could be delivered thruout the second zone at a cost of 61 cents, including postage, packing, and other necessary expenses. The apples were sold to the consumer at $1.64 a box, $1 being paid for the fruit at the point of shipment. Apples had been selling at 65 cents a box before the plan was put in operation. The project will be continued another year and plans for a fruit-growers' co-operative association are being made, so that there will be a system of grading and packing, and reasonable prices may be maintained.

Where Shall the Negro Go?

The black is to go No longer is he the dearly-beloved brother of the Kentucky white Republicans So speaks the State Convention of the party assembled at Phoenix Hill, and, in so speaking, it drowns the voice of Edwin P Morrow, crying in the wilderness of white faces for another half vote at Chicago for the negro

They are killing the black man, politically, "half a nigger at a time," to quote the graphic utterance of the colored preacher, Dean of Meade county He was a whole nigger at the convention of 1912; a half nigger at the convention of 1916, and perhaps at the convention of 1920 he will be no nigger at all

Democrats are interested in the meaning of this action The negroes have been regularly contributing from 40,000 to 80,000 votes to the Republican party in this State Mr. Morrow himself told the convention of their loyalty to the party standard and declared he could not stand idly by and see them deprived of half their pottage. Yet the convention has deprived them, and Mr Morrow acquiesced in it

If the aim is to drive the negro from the Republican ranks wherein lies the gain ? The loss is evident The Bull Moose served notice on the dusky brother at its very birth that it did not propose to recognize his race, politically The Democrats ask him only to vote for their nominees thru conviction, but promise no racial recognition

The negro voter has but one place to go if he would vote for his welfare and that of his race He should go into politics for himself He should not belong as a pawn in a game, to either of the political parties

The Republican party, a half century after emancipation, asserts a claim to the negro vote It asserts that claim effectively The "party of freedom" demands that the negroes regard themselves as a part of its political belongings Emancipated from body bondage, the negroes are told that they must not think for themselves or vote for themselves Their political bondage is in the Republican view of their case, upon a basis of permanency

As long as the negro vote remains fairly "solid," and is a Republican asset, the negro must remain in the words of the late Booker Washington, the inspired leader of the negroes, "the football of politics" Nobody—no political party—will feel under any obligation toward a racial element which votes in obedience to command A few Federal offices doled out to a few silk-hat.ed, white-spatted, pork-farted colored gentlemen who use their race as a horse block from which to mount the palfrey of petty preferment never can mean anything to the moiling and drudging mass of negroes,

Whenever the negro ceases to be the Republican party's "nigger" and becomes his own man, he will get recognition that now is denied to him The Democratic party does not want the negro vote as a unit, to be bought with offices, or promises of office, and it never will make a bid for it upon such terms But no political party desires to turn votes away Whenever the negro votes as if the franchise belonged to him, and not as if he belonged to the party which tells him it gave him the franchise—with a string to it—he will be entirely out of slavery Until he does he will remain "the football of politics" getting next to nothing from the Republicans and worse than nothing from the Democrats —Courier-Journal

John Miller, living four miles east of Mayfield, on four acres of ground produced 5,538 pounds of tobacco He sold it at $7.50 for the leaf and $2 for the lugs, receiving $357 94. This is an excellent production for four acres and the Mayfield poet is anxious to know if there is anyone else in Graves county who can beat this record —Mayfield Messenger.

Farm for Sale

I will sell at public auction at the Court House door in Burlington, Ky., at 1 o'clock p. m.,

Monday, April 3rd, 1916,

the Thomas S. Whitaker farm of 300 acres, situated in the north end of Boone County, on the Ohio River, and on the waters of Garrison Creek. This farm is improved with two barns in fair condition and with a good dwelling house.

SPLENDID STOCK FARM.

The farm is specially adapted for stock raising as it is well watered and borders on the Ohio River for a considerable distance, insuring ample water for stock all seasons of the year.

GOOD, FERTILE SOIL.

The soil is fertile and capable of producing splendid crops of corn, all kinds of grain, tobacco and alfalfa. The produce on the farm for the year 1915 amounted to nearly $2,000.

TERMS OF SALE.

This farm will be sold to the highest bidder, either for cash or on a credit of six and twelve months, at the option of the purchaser. If sold on a credit the purchaser will be required to execute notes for the purchase money, secured to the satisfaction of the undersigned, said notes to bear interest at the rate of six per cent per annum until paid.

Possession of the farm will be given as soon as the purchaser complies with the terms of the sale. For further particulars communicate with or call on

JOEL C. CLORE,
Agent for the owner, 403 Bell Block, Cincinnati, Ohio.
Phone---Canal 2029.

Howard Kelly has assembled material for the construction of a residence on the land he bought several months ago from James Slayback out on the Belleview pike. It will be a story and a half building, four rooms on the first and two on the second floor.

The telephone lines that use the Waterloo switch-board have decided to incorporate. These lines carry 275 or 400 boxes. A trunk line will be built to Hebron and via Laughery Island to Aurora. The Cincinnati business will be done through Aurora.

Mrs. Geo. Kreylich and Mrs. Mary V. Gaines went to Chattanooga, Tenn., last Saturday, to which place they were called on account of the critical illness of the former's brother, Hon. A. W. Gaines, one of the most prominent citizens of that city, and who has a host of relatives and friends in this, his native county, who are very anxious about him.

Boone county farmers are a long ways behind with their work when compared with the progress they had made at this time last year. Very little if any land has been broken for corn while the preparation for tobacco plant beds has not begun. In fact the weather has been such that farm work of all kinds has been suspended for many months.

Jno. P. Duncan, of Donerail, came down last Friday to spend a few days with his brother, Dr. E. W. Duncan and wife. He was returning from a big horse sale in New York to which he and Harry Burgoyne, superintendent of Walnut Hall Stock Farm, took 65 animals which sold at from sixty dollars to fifty-six hundred dollars. The yearlings they sold averaged $400.

Rev. R. H. Carter has been giving some very interesting and instructive lectures on livestock and farming, the views with which the lectures are illustrated are furnished by the government, and he requested the Recorder to announce that these lectures will be delivered free in any community in the county that desires. All you are required to do is to notify him of your desire.

Snows have been Numerous this Winter

Snows have been too numerous to mention this winter, but only on a few occasions have they been so deep as to be very annoying and in no instance have they drifted sufficiently to interfere with travel.

Appealing to the Courts

There is talk of a suit being brought in the Kenton county circuit court to compell the C. N. & C. Street Railway Co., to comply with a special contract by the extension of its Ft. Mitchell line to Erlanger as provided in its charter it obtained from State.

Been a Subscriber for 30 Year

In repewing his subscription to the Recorder C. L. Hensley, of Lexington, says: "This is the 30th year I have been taking your paper. It is like a letter from home." Mr. Hensley was raised on Ashby Fork this county, and has been a loyal supporter of the Recorder. He has a host of friends and relatives in Petersburg and vicinity.

Cooking in Jail

One or more members of the family of Jailer Sammie Adams have been sick for several months, and when a colored man and his wife were lodged in jail several weeks ago Mr. Adams placed a coal oil cook stove in the prison and the supplies on which the prisoners were to subsist, and required the woman to do the cooking, which has saved considerable annoyance for the jailer.

Aylor will Carry the Ludlow-Hebron Mail Beginning July 1, 1916.

Lester Aylor has been notified from Washington that he will be awarded the contract for carrying the mail on the Hebron and Ludlow route the next four years beginning July 1, 1916. He is considering the advisability of putting on an automobile as his conveyance, the price to which gasoline will go being about the principal factor for solution.

Can Solemnize Matrimony Now

E. O. Rouse and Rev. Royer, the new pastor of the Boone County Charge, were callers at the Recorder office last Wednesday afternoon while the edition was being printed. They had called at the County Clerk's office where Rev. Royer was granted a license to solemnize matrimony in this Commonwealth. Mr. Rouse has been a subscriber to the Recorder for 30 years and last Wednesday was the first time he ever saw it in process of printing.

A Light Eater but a Heavy Weight

The young man who operates the typesetting machine for the Recorder is an example of the futility of eating three meals a day. For nearly 20 years he has sidestepped breakfast, eating only dinner and supper each day, and in the matter of avoirdupois he tips the beam around 230 year in and year out. Following his example will in a measure reduce the cost of highliving and at the same time bring to a minimum labor in the culinary department of the home.

A Chain of Realestate Deals

A chain of realestate sales have been the principal business feature in Idlewild neighborhood the past two weeks, and several persons will occupy new homes in the future. Thomas Masters has sold his farm on Ashby Fork to O. C. Rector and bought a farm of W. Lee Cropper; W. L. Cropper bought R. C. Gaines' farm, and Luther Scothorn bought of Courtney and Hubert Walton 50 acres including the residence and barn of the late N. S. Walton farm. The Recorder has no information as to the consideration in either deal, but to finance as large a transaction in realestate would require a large amount of money.

Madstone Would Not Stick

Dorothy Lee, the little five year old girl of Mr. and Mrs. John McCune, of Petersburg, was bitten, Tuesday afternoon of last week, by a dog belonging to Capt. Elihu Alden. The dog was killed and its head taken off and sent to a scientist in Cincinnati, who examined it and reported the animal had hydrophobia. This report caused considerable excitement in Petersburg, and quite a number of dogs said to have been bitten by the dog pronounced rabid, were killed. The little girl was brought to Burlington last Thursday by her father, who was accompanied by Hubert Walton and Lacy Cropper, and Kirb Tanner applied the "Tanner madstone" and it failed to adhere to the wounds which consisted of three slight abrasions of the skin, one in the edge of her hair, one on her nose and one on her right wrist. When the stone refused to "stick," Mr. Tanner suggested to Mr. McCune that he bring the little girl back some time the first of next week.

The "Tanner Madstone" has been resorted to by many persons who have been bitten by dogs, some of which were known to have hydrophobia, and in numerous instances it has adhered to the wound repeatedly, but in no instance has a person who had the "Tanner Madstone" applied developed hydrophobia. This stone has been in the Tanner family for many years and has been called on by people from far and near who have heard of its success as a preventive of hydrophobia. It is valued very highly by the parties to whom it belongs.

Seeding Oats

Oats usually follow a cultivated crop, such as corn or potatoes, hence it is not generally necessary to plow the land before sowing. Oats do well on fall-plowed land; but if the land has not been plowed in the fall, better yields are usually produced from sowing in a seed bed made by disking and harrowing than in one made by spring plowing. Early seeding for oats is very desirable. As a good seed bed can be made much more quickly with the disk harrow than with the plow on land that was in a cultivated crop last year, the saving in time is an advantage. Two diskings and one harrowing with the spike-toothed harrow will put clean land in good shape for sowing with the drill.

Oats grow best in a seed bed that has two or three inches of loose surface soil, but which is firm below that depht. This is another reason why disking is to be preferred to spring plowing, for there is not time for plowed land to settle before the seed is sown. Still another reason why the disk is better is that a field can be disked much more cheaply than it can be plowed, and the cheaper of doing a job should always be chosen if it gives just as good results as the more expensive way.

If the local supply of seed oats is of poor quality, care should be used in letting a new stock for sowing. It is better to get this supply from points to the east or west than from points north or south, as the varieties are more likely to be those which will do well locally. Varieties which may be best two or three hundred miles to the north or south may not be at all suitable. If new seed is wanted, ask the county agent or the State experiment station where to get it and what varieties to buy.

If you have been growing a variety which does well in your locality it is better to sow well-cleaned seed of that variety grown on your own farm or in your county than to get seed from a distance. It takes oats a year or two to get used to the soil and climate in any locality, and they will not do their best until they become adapted to local conditions. If the oats grown locally were injured more or less last summer by rains after harvest, make a germination test and prove that tthey will not grow before you decide to send away for seed. If your oats are light and chaffy take out about two-thirds of the lightest of them with the fanning mill and use the other third for seed.

The idea that oats run out and that it is necessary to get new seed every few years is quite common, but it is not justified by the facts. There is no reason why a good variety of oats should not be just as good twenty years from now as it is now, if care is taken to keep it pure.

The seed should be cleaned and graded each year, taking out the weed seeds and the small kernels. It should also be treated for smut at least once in two or three years. If the seed is of good quality it will not pay to run it thru the fanning mill more than once to take out the small kernels and weed seeds. If the seed is poor or very weedy, running it thru a second time and taking out two-thirds or more of the grain is well worth while.

The reason it is best to take out the small kernels is that they do not make as strong plants as the large ones. The weak plants from these small kernels usually produce little grain. If the kernels that are sown are all of about the same size the plants will be uniform, the crop will all ripen at the same time, and the yield will be better.

The best way to sow oats is with the grain drill. Drilling gives a more even stand than broad cast seeding, for all the seed is covered to about the same depth. In sowing broadcast, some of the seed may not be covered at all and some may be covered too deeply. Germination is better from drilled seed and the growth is more uniform thruout the season. In numerous tests at the experiment stations drilled oats have outyielded oats sown broadcast by several bushels to the acre. Better stands of grass and clover can also be obtained in drilled than in broadcast oats.

The best depth to sow oats varies with the soil and the season. In any case they should be covered with half an inch to an inch of moist soil. They should be sown deeper in sandy soils than in loams or clays. Deeper seeding is also necessary when the ground is dry than when it is moist. On the average the best depth is from 1 to 1½ inches.

Oats should be sown as early in the spring as it is possible to make a good seed bed. The exact date of course varies with the season and with the locality. This does not mean that the preparation of the land should be neglected in order to sow early. Better yields will be produced from seed sown in a good seed bed than from that sown a few days earlier in ground too cold and wet for the seed to germinate.

In a good seed bed the best rate of seeding in the corn belt is about 2½ bushels to the acre. If the seed is sown broadcast, more is necessary. More seed is required in a poor seed bed than in a good one, as fewer seeds are likely to grow. A lower rate of seeding may be used for small-kerneled varieties than for large-kerneled ones, for there are many more of the former in a bushel.

In another column is printed a timely article on the sowing of oats. It is sent out in a government agricultural bulletin.

Dr. Cowen's 'Possum Dinner.

On Thursday, the directors of the Deposit Bank held their regular monthly meeting in which the regular business of the bank was disposed of in the usual way—then a surprise was handed out by the president, Dr. Cowen, in the way of an invitation to them and the officials of the bank to a possum dinner. There was no hesitancy on the part of any in accepting the kindness of the Doctor.

A dinner would not be a dinner unless the juicy, sweet and tender possum was not on the table at the Cowen home. Mrs. Cowen is an expert in preparing this esculant favorite "wild beast of the forest," and is also an unchallenged artist in the general cuisine, and those who did not take to possum were not neglected and their appetites were amply satisfied. The humor of the board was at the limit. Possibly another dividend will be declared or a reduction in the rate of interest be made.—Rising Sun Recorder.

Do You Take Your County Fair

Boo[illegible] Per Hundred Acre Farm.

Worthy Members of the Circuit Court of Boone County:

Gentlemen—I have written four letters through our county paper which I suppose you have seen commending the employment of a County Farm Agent, and asked why one that was opposed to the movement, if any, to give their reasons why. Through the same medium there has been no objection as yet. Some indorsements have come thru our county paper and has been indorsed by the Boone County High School News, the educational journal published in the interest of the Burlington High School. My object is through cooperation to adopt improved methods of farming by improving our lands and make them more productive. To interest the school children along this line. And in order to do so I thought of instituting a prize contest to interest the children. So I suggested to twelve of our most prominent men and ten of them responded with $130 in cash and prizes, to be given under the supervision of a County Farm Agent. We farmers depend too much on our individual selves. We need to get together more and Dano practice our State motto: nited We Stand, Divided we [illegible]. We cannot expect to be [illegible] among the progressive far [illegible] without a Farm Agent. Our neighbor, Kenton county, employed a County Agent last summer and it has aroused a great interest in improved methods of farming. He organized a number of farm clubs and they offered a few premiums not to exceed about $8.00 on farm products and fruits, held a three days institute with one night session in October, when the prizes were awarded. (I was present from start to finish), and it was a surprise to see the fine display and the great interest the people manifested in the institute. The crowd which was composed of about one-third [illegible] increased from day to day [illegible] the night session the court [illegible] opened crowded with standing [illegible]room. Thru their County [illegible] Fiscal Court has agreed [illegible] horses a farm on which the State [illegible] start an experience farm [illegible] Southern Railroad Company has offered to deliver one car load of ground limestone to each of its stations in Kenton county; each car not to be used by less than sixty farmers, at fifty cents per ton (about one-half the cost of grinding). One car of ground limestone was used at Verona which cost $2.85 per ton. Figure the difference on three fifty-ton cars and you will have $382.50 which is about one-half the amount it would cost our county per year for an agent. The National Government realizes our need for a Farm Agent and offers to pay one-half of his salary. There is quite a bureau of valuable information in our National and State department of agriculture. By studying progressive farming on farms our National Agricultural Agents who combine science with practice in farming, his business is to search out object lessons in all manner of farming. He studies farm conditions on the farm. Anyone gets more information from farms than he can get from reading or experience. This is passed on to the County Agents, hence our county how valuable information is gathered through our agricultural departments and through our Farm Agent and passed on to us farmers who need it.

We should have one day designated as "farmers' day" in October of each year and offer prizes on all kinds of farm products and hold an institute and award the prizes on that day or days by [illegible] our State Agricultural [illegible] in advance. They would [illegible] set the time and write [illegible] own program and furnish us their best lecturers. I think [illegible] would be a success the first year, much better the second and the third the court house would not hold the people. This needs to be encouraged and the best encouragement that can be given it is for each to help organize and help carry out the splendid work, which though still in its infancy promises to be the greatest work in our state. I believe if a county agent would [illegible] a demonstration with [illegible] limestone on the main [illegible] we grow, in each precinct the [illegible] county it would be [illegible] many times his saalry and one [illegible] the Doubting Thomas all forget they ever was opposed to the movement. What [illegible] a Farm Agent cost per [illegible] in Boone county? I have [illegible] informed that our worthy [illegible] Court regarded the employ [illegible] of a Farm Agent as an excellent measure and turned it down. As you are a good, conservative body of men and our [illegible] to transact our business, will ask you to help me figure the expense per farm. There are approximately 150,000 acres of land in Boone county. Count the [illegible] farm 100 acres; that makes [illegible] farms in Boone county. One-[illegible] the agent's salary at $600 [illegible] be just forty cents per [illegible] but 12½ per cent of the [illegible] Boone county is paid by [illegible] banks and other corporation [illegible] town lots, which will [illegible] amount to thirty-five [illegible] farm. In value less [illegible] bushel of wheat, [illegible] pounds of pork, two [illegible] or a two-pound fry. [illegible] I insist on the [illegible] bers of the Fiscal [illegible] this proposition serious [illegible] and passing on [illegible] meeting. If the [illegible] of Boone county [illegible] contest for prizes [illegible] test should be [illegible] ting seed and

Yours,
J. GRIFFITH.

County Agent in Crittenden Co.

Dear Mr. Editor—I want to say something about what our County Farm agent has done for our section of the country.

Mr. Bird came to Crittenden, January, 1915, and has certainly worked wonders for this county with the farmers. Everyone lokes him for he is s perfect gentleman, always in a good humor and ready and willing at all times to help you and is busy every moment. He has visited about 1,200 farmers, talked with them anout their farm and helped them. He has attended about 200 farmers' meetings, has traveled on horseback 5,000 miles and has vaccinated about 1,200 cattle, about 200 hogs and saved 92 per cent of the hogs.

The farmers through him, have used 225 tons 16 per cent acid phosphate at a saving of $6.50 per ton on their fertilizer bills. There has been used under Mr. Bird's directions between 200 and 300 ton of ground limestone, with wonderful results.

He has a boys' pig club and had a pig show which could not be beat on earth. Some of these pigs were taken to Louisville and won premiums. He has held a county fair with all kinds of stock, poultry and garden stuff. There were thousands of people at these shows These things were all worked out by Mr. Bird. This saving for the farmers is a big item and I think can only be done by cooperation which every farmer ought to take pride in and which Mr. Bird has brought them togeither in. When our farmers go to improving their land they will have better crops, better stock and co-operate in buying their fertilizers, etc., and everything they can not raise on their farms. Then they can make and save more money.

Mr. Bird has been worth thousands of dollars to Crittenden county this year. I am sure all the county agents are fine men, but they don't make any better than Mr. Bird is. He is forever on the go and takes a delight in telling any and every one how to farm and how to make it pay.—G. W. S. in Kentucky Farming.

Editor of Kentucky Farming: Hats off to Mr. Merriman! Our County Agent surely stands solid with the farmers in this county, especially in my section. I think his greatest work has been combating hog cholera. The first of September this disease showed itself in my hogs, and Mr. Merriman came and vaccinated eighty-one hogs for me. Ten or twelve of them were very sick with fever up to 104 and 106, and Mr. Merriman did not want to vaccinate them, but I told him I was willing to stand the expense, and I did not lose a single hog. The sick ones all got well. Two weeks ago he treated 25 hogs after another outbreak, and not a single hog was lost. I consider his careful method of handling the serum, and his knowledge of the work, is responsible for my not having a single hog with an abcess. I have been with him a great deal in my neighborhood, among my neighbors and helped him inoculate other hogs, because wherever he goes he saves the hogs.

Recently he treated a good-sized lot of hogs for John Rothenburger, weighing about 60 to 70 pounds, five of them being very sick and could not get up. Again Mr. Merriman did not want to try to save the sick hogs, but I persuaded Mr. Rothenburger to stand the expense, and he said, "Go ahead." Every hog got well, including the sick ones.

He treated eleven pigs for A. Haunz, one was very sick, but all have done splendidly. I was with him again when he treated W. Rotenberfer's hogs, and many other herds in the neighborhood.

He treated forty-one hogs for H. D. Murphy, a big feeder, and never lost one of them.

I am an optimist as a farmer, but I realize that we need help in many ways, and Mr. Merriman has been of great assistance to us in our neighborhood in treating hogs, helping us in our crops and in aiding us in selling. I think a good county agent is absolutely necessary in every county. We would not do without Mr. Merriman for anything in the world.—H. Simcoe, in Kentucky Farming.

Ohio county farmers are discouraged on account of so much rain and high water. It has been a bad winter and stock has not done well. There is a surplus of horses and mules on the farms.

Dropping a pint bottle of whisky from his pocket on the floor of the County Judge's office, Saturday afternoon cost J. D. Wyatt, a ten dollar bill, besides the cost of the liquor. Judge Gilbert was out at the time, but when he returned the odor of the liquor was so obnoxious that he had the offender brought before him and entered the fine.—Shelby News.

Dee Thompson has the most peculiar lamb on record. It is now three weeks old, thrifty and growing, in spite of the fact that it has a tail at both ends. The front one is a well developed appendage four inches long on top of its head, which hangs down behind its ear. The lamb can be seen by any one, frisking about on the Thompson farm.—Harrodsburg Herald.

A few days ago W. C. Montgomery, the well-known farmer, while plowing a field ran into a snake nest. He turned up two and after going a short distance dislodged a nest of seven interwoven into a ball. They were easily killed, as the sun's rays are not yet balmy enough to bring them from their winter hibernation. Mr. Montgomery tells us that the snakes while small were of the poisonous variety and a good riddance.—Harrodsburg Herald.

MATERIAL FOR SPRING

JERSEY CLOTH BIDS FAIR TO BE ACCEPTABLE.

Seems to Be the Required Thing as a Substitute for Serge—Shades of Brown Likely to Be Returned to Favor.

There is no doubt that women will like the new weaves of jersey cloth, for they are anxiously looking for a substitute for serge in spring suits. Taffeta and ribbed silk have been offered over and over as substitutes for the woolen fabric, but the Anglo-Saxon woman, whether she be in England or America, feels more content with a thread of worsted in her street suit until hot weather comes and makes it unbearable. Even through the dog days she likes to feel that such a coat and skirt are hanging in her wardrobe, ready for an emergency.

The new jersey cloth has something of the feeling of the sweater, and while the larger part of its use may be confined to life in the country and in small towns, there is good reason to prophesy that it will find its way in the streets of the great centers.

Brown is one of the colors that the dyers of the new jersey cloth evidently like, for some very smart suits of it have appeared. Brown has not been among the fashionable shades for several seasons. We have quite ignored it, although we have given a warm slice of our affections to its pale sister, beige. Probably the welcome accorded the leather tones has suggested to the dyers the introduction of real brown. The reason, however, is a negligible factor in the condition. The fact remains that brown as well as gray are colors to be reckoned with from now on.

There was so much distate on the part of the fastidious ones for fur by the time the new year arrived, because of its lavish use in women's apparel during the last six months, that everyone thought its day was done; and yet, here it reappears in a variety of capricious ways. For instance, one of the Palm Beach hats of striped blue and white linen lawn is edged with fur, and Poiret's idea of combing skunk out to make it look like fringe and using it for trimming has started an entirely new development in use of peltry.

Smart Little Sailor of Black Straw With Black Patent Leather Quill.

He first brought this out on a Brittany gown of purple and white striped silk and velvet, and then the milliners took it up for the new straw hats.

If you want to employ some of your leisure time at home in arranging fur instead of embroidering, you might try your luck at achieving a Poiretesque result with an old piece of fur and a thick comb.

NOVELTIES IN SWEET ODORS

Smelling Salts Put Up in a Variety of Ways That Will Appeal to a Woman.

The woman who likes sweet odors almost always likes smelling salts.

The newer ones are packed into bottles of charming shape. Some of them have very elaborate stoppers—as, indeed, all the perfume bottles do, too. Wide fan-shaped stoppers are one of the novelties.

Geranium, colored rose, is one of the popular smelling salts odors at the moment.

There are also very attractive sachets covered with chiffon or very fine net, containing an interesting combination of flower odors. The foundation for this is sweet lavender, and there are rose and violet leaves, and spices and oils, so that the combination is something on the order of potpourri. And of course all this sweetness is visible through the very sheer covering.

Silk and Wool Poplins Are Plaid.

Wonderful plaid and striped silk and wool poplins are to be seen in advance tentative showings in some of the shops. The texture of this fabric is delightfully soft and the wool it contains gives it just that quality of warmth necessary to the first spring garments.

Frilly Petticoats.

The frilly petticoat has come into its own again, flesh pink being a favorite choice for the foundation for an evening underskirt completed by flounces of white or cream toned lace. Ribbons and knots of roses are sometimes introduced to enhance the decorative effect.

LEATHER-TRIMMED COAT

A coat, made of plain cloth, is very cleverly cut. It is shaped on simple and graceful lines and finished with leather, matching the cloth in color. The leather appears in the divided belt, at back and front, and in bands on collar and cuffs.

WORD ABOUT SPRING HATS

That Styles Are to Be Extensively Varied is Pretty Certain—Many Novelties Are Promised.

For between-season wear satin and straw combinations are fashionable. In the best models only a very small quantity of straw is used, and that is of a rich color. From all indications styles in shapes will be very varied. Very high effects will continue in new forms, accomplished mostly by judicious arrangement of trimmings.

Straws of high luster or glazed effects will be very pronounced and in rich dark colors. In contrast to the richly colored glazed straws will appear fine hemps and felts in light pastel shades. Something new is the use of knitted silk or cotton such as is used in making sweaters. These fabrics are used both in plain colors and in blazer stripes.

Bangkok sailors and fine milan effects are smart, and there is a host of styles in leather, knitted silk, novelty woolens and the new serge and silk combinations. Trimmings for this type of hat are very simple but rich, including novelty ribbon bands, chenille or silk embroidered flowers, fruits, birds, small unique feather tufts or novelty jeweled buckles or ornaments. Some sailor shapes have rippled and drooping brims. There are also high-crown sailors with miniature brims turned sharply at the side, as well as new variations of the tricorne and high-back turban.

Among ribbon trimmings for hats are colored velvets, narrow failes and wide taffetas. Among distinctive trimmings are richly colored straw flowers and fruits which can be appliqued flatly on the hat. Dull beaded flowers in new colors and designs are also much used. Soft dull rose shades are especially handsome. Glazed fruits in black mounted on slender silk braid stems, and black apples with beaded blossoms are especially effective. Novelty pins and buckles in jet and pearl are used. Malines and metal and hair laces will be used for high trimmings. In ostrich feathers the small richly colored tip and ostrich bands will be worn.

BAG OF BLACK TAFFETA

The wide beruffled and crinoline skirts have brought into fashion ruffled and flared effects in bags. This one is of black taffeta with taffeta quillings.

Little Girl's Dress.

Make the little girl's school dress in two pieces, the skirt plaited and the waist in the pretty straight coatlike fashion reaching a little below the hips. The waist should have no sleeves and be out under the arms like a suspender dress. With this she can wear different underwaists of silk and linen, which will make variety combined with economy, the skirt buttoning on to the underwaist.

POSTMARKED BOSTON

By ANNETTE DEARING.

"Why, my goodness, Dell, he hasn't even noticed us since the season opened." Marion stared down at the strip of crescent beach perplexed and frankly indignant. The new life saver stood as usual, leaning back against the tall piling near the life line.

Ever since the beach had opened he had been on duty there, stranger to all of the regular bathers and sufficiently good looking to arouse curiosity among the girls.

"I think he's a college boy earning money for his course, don't you?" Dell chewed on some grass speculatively. "His name is Taylor Crosby. I found out that much, anyway. I asked the girl at the post office, and he gets a letter every day postmarked Boston, and mails one back every day, directed to Miss Pauline Holmes."

"How perfectly delicious!" Marion exclaimed.

"Fat ones," Dell added happily.

"Still he looks anxious; so he can't be really engaged yet. Don't you see how anxious he looks?"

He surely did. Even gloomy.

"We might get dad to invite him up to the cottage. Tell him we've heard he's a hero, don't you know? I'll coax dad now."

The major listened to his youngest non-committingly, and sized up the life saver at a distance.

"Seems a decent sort of a fellow, Marion," he said. "I'll ask Captain Briggs about him. If he reports O. K. you can have him up when you like."

The report was O. K. So Mr. Crosby found himself invited to dinner at Major Farley's cottage. Not only did he come up that first night, but afterward, often. It was enough that he was a Crosby of Boston.

"Dad," Dell whispered, one night, perching on the arm of his chair, "I think Marion's falling in love, don't you?"

"Probably, God bless them both," returned the major genially.

But Marion never forgot the daily letters coming and going from Boston. Not that she would ask him, but she wondered.

They had gone down to meet the afternoon boat one Sunday. Taylor had been telling her of his home, and suddenly she saw him stop, alert and keen-eyed, and stare at somebody getting off the boat.

"There she is," he said excitedly. "By Jove, I never thought she'd come."

It was Pauline Holmes. She knew it. Something seemed to tell her even before she was aware that Taylor, brimful of pride and happiness, was introducing them.

"Miss Farley, I do want you to meet Miss Holmes. I've been trying for six weeks to coax her down to the beach to take the leading part in the new moving-picture play I'm putting over The major agrees with me that she's the finest person I could get to play Jess, but it took some patience and perseverance to win her over."

Miss Holmes laughed as she clasped Marion's hand in hers.

"I'm afraid I haven't Mr. Crosby's endurance. You know he wrote me that he'd actually been a life saver here all summer just to get next to the detail and actual facts. I think he's a wonder. Hardly any one even knew where he had run away to. I think I'll go straight on up to my hotel if you don't mind. There's so much to be done tomorrow."

After she had gone, Taylor strolled along beside Marion down the walk to the deserted bathing beach. He talked fast enough now. She heard all about his aims and plans.

"I knew you wouldn't mind if I had —well, not told you all about myself. And I can swim quite decently, you know. It wasn't putting anything over that was wrong. I hope you don't mind."

Marion looked out over the old harbor at the fishing fleet just coming leisurely in, the old weather-stained sails outlined against the amber and jade-colored sky.

"I don't mind," she said. "She's very lovely."

"Do you know," he exclaimed suddenly, "I used almost to wish that you'd break down some day when you were out yonder swimming so that I could save you?"

She did not answer.

"Marion, do you hear me? Didn't you ever wish anything at all?"

Somehow his arm was around her waist, and Marion forgot to look back over her shoulder to be sure that Dell was out of sight. It was wonderfully quiet down there along the beach, with just the gulls flying low and a reed bird calling now and then over the sandhills in the marshes.

"Nothing," she said softly, hanging her head, "only that you wouldn't get so many letters postmarked Boston."

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

What Could He Do?

"I hate to be contradicted," she said.

"Then I won't contradict you," he returned.

"You don't love me," she asserted.

"I don't," he admitted.

"You are a hateful old thing!" she cried.

"I am," he replied.

"I believe you are trying to tease me," she said.

"I am," he conceded.

"And you do not love me."

"I don't."

"Well," she said at last. "I do hate a man who's weak enough to be led by a woman."—Houston Post.

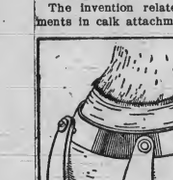
HORSES PIGS and CATTLE

STRAW SHED FOR LIVE STOCK

Satisfactory and Inexpensive Method of Securing Ample Protection for Farm Animals.

A stable that will protect from cold weather and storms may be constructed with little expense when straw is plentiful. Each cow, if to be tied, needs about fifty square feet of floor space to allow for manger, feed alley, place for her to stand and room to get behind her for milking, cleaning, etc. Young stock will need about half as much space. A barn 16x90 feet or one 32x45 will furnish room enough for twenty cows and ten head of young stock.

A straw shed for cattle should be seven or eight feet high. The construction of such buildings is very simple. Posts are usually set in the ground eight to twelve feet apart, and strong timbers put on top of these with poles close enough together to carry the straw on top of the timbers. Walls are constructed by making two walls two or more feet apart and packing with straw. These walls may be made of poles, boards or woven wire, as desired.



Hogs will require from ten to fifteen square feet of floor space each in a straw shed. Fifty hogs will require a shed about 20x30 feet in size. It is better to keep the hogs in a separate building from the cattle. The shed for hogs need not be more than four or five feet high. It is advisable to make the walls tight, using woven wire, or something equally good, so the hogs will not work out through the wall.

GOOD CALK FOR HORSESHOES

Device Shown in Illustration Is Simple in Construction and Can Be Easily Applied.

The Scientific American in illustrating and describing a toe calk for horseshoes, invented by W. Gordon of Philadelphia, says:

The invention relates to improvements in calk attachments for horseshoes and has for an object to provide a simple construction which can be easily applied to and removed from the horse's hoof, and will, when in place, be securely held against displacement in any direction and will embody means which will aid in the adjustment of the attachment to hoofs of different size and shape.

GUARD AGAINST MUSTY OATS

When Fed Continuously There Is Likelihood That Severe Intestinal Troubles May Result.

Many state experiment stations are warning the farmers to beware of feeding their stock, especially the horses, musty oats during the coming winter. When fed continuously there is great likelihood that severe intestinal trouble and probably blind staggers may result.

Blind staggers is a disease caused by mold which thrives on dented corn, damp barley, oats and spoiled feeds of all kind. When it is necessary to feed grain in this condition a little common salt should be given with the grain at all feedings.

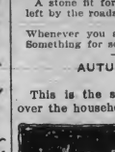
Wherever the animals show any tendency towards constipation, administer one-half ounce of fluid extract of aloes or one-half pound of Epsom salts as a drench. Clean hay and fresh water and salt are excellent in easing the effects from such grain.

LIGHT HEIFERS FOR FEEDING

Buyers Estimate Doubling of Weight by Next July or August as Result of Long Rest.

The tendency to feed heifers still prevails with many cattle feeders. Extravagantly high prices, seemingly, are being paid for light heifers to go into the pastures and stalk fields to be roughed through the winter and then corn fed on grass next summer for the fat cattle market.

A doubling of weight by next July or August is about the estimate these buyers are figuring on as a ten months' result of growth and gain. In case any prove to be bred, they are no special disappointment, as the calf with the mother present a good money investment for the market of next summer.



THE KITCHEN CABINET

A stone fit for the wall will not be left by the roadside.—Persian Proverb.

Whenever you are feeling blue,
Something for someone else go do.

AUTUMN HINTS.

This is the season when we look over the household furnishings, wearing apparel and bric-a-brac to see what may be disposed of and what must be reserved. We find clothing which is out of style but good, playthings and ornaments which our household has outgrown, which will be appreciated in some other home and will lessen the burden of things to care for in our own homes.

The modern home of the efficient housekeeper today is simple, because she cares more for the things worth while than to spend her time in dusting useless ornaments and complicated furniture. Woodwork in the home should be plain, so that there is no place for dust to lodge. This need not sacrifice beauty, for the lines may be just as beautiful if simple.

When making new comforters the wool batting is much warmer and lighter and makes an altogether more satisfactory comforter than the cotton batting. The cost is an item to be considered, of course, as an ordinary comforter takes two pounds of the wool and costs 85 or 90 cents a pound. The wool batting should be covered with a thin cheesecloth which keeps the wool from pushing through the cover and also protects it as the outside may then be removed and washed or a new cover put on.

Light, washable draperies for bedrooms, small rugs and floors so finished that an oil mop will keep them clean and dustless, are the sensible and practical as well as the most economical furnishings.

Furs and underwear should be brought out, well brushed and aired before wearing; even if moth balls are not objectionable to you, "there are others." The odor of moth balls in a crowded car or heated room, is something too sickening to mention; no wonder any self-respecting moth would refuse to occupy the same quarters. Clothing that is aired often and worn occasionally is not apt to become a harbor for moths. Furs wrapped in ordinary newspaper, using care to cover securely, is one of the best ways of keeping furs from moths.

Don't idly dream! There is no time for dreaming.
No time to drone and loiter on the way,
With opportunity each day is teeming,
That, till you deign to waken, will not stay.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

Good cooking will make almost any meat tender and bad cooking will toughen the best of meats. Lean meat is made up of bundles of hollow fibers, filled with juices like the white of an egg. If meat lies in cold water the juices are dissolved, if cooked at too high a temperature the fibers are toughened and become hard. The object of cooking meat is to make it both palatable and more digestible. If meat is put into boiling water or a hot oven to sear it over, then the heat reduced to simmer it until tender, the meat will be juicy, tender and of good flavor.

Venison will soon be in season and when carefully cooked is a most tasty dish. Wipe the meat with a damp cloth. Place on a meat board and pound to make an even roast, use strips of fat pork on top, pound them in. Place in a deep dish and cover with this marinade to season and make the meat tender. One cupful of olive oil, two cupfuls of vinegar, three sliced onions, two sliced carrots, two stalks of celery chopped, a few sprigs of parsley and two bay leaves, a little pepper and thyme. Turn the meat several times so that every portion is seasoned. When ready to roast, tie up in compact shape, removing all the shreds of vegetables that cling to the meat. Put a few thin slices of salt pork into the roasting pan and lay in the meat, well dredged with salt, pepper and flour. Set into a hot oven and baste every ten minutes for the first half hour. When the roast is nicely browned all over, reduce the heat and cook slowly, allowing ten minutes to the pound after it is browned. A little currant jelly added to the basting gravy adds to the flavor. Serve rare, accompanied with spiced grape jelly.

Creole Soup.—Take a pint of stewed tomatoes, and one green pepper, sliced thin, a pint of well-seasoned stock, with seasoning of celery, pepper and salt to taste. Simmer for fifteen minutes, then bind with two tablespoonfuls each of flour and butter cooked together. Strain and serve piping hot.

GET BEST PRICE FOR BUTTER

Important to Have Flavor Pleasing to Senses of Smell and Taste—Put In Neat Package.

In order to secure the best price for butter it must have a flavor which is so pleasant to the sense of smell and so sweet to the taste that it will create a desire for more. The texture, grain and closeness should be waxy and firm, and not salvy, greasy or crumbly. It should be close in body, not spongy, and contain not too much, nor too little, moisture.

The color should be uniform and according to the requirements of the market. Salting according to the demand of the market for which the butter is intended is an important feature. Too much salt destroys the sweet taste, and too little salt makes the butter insipid and tasteless.

The package in which the butter is marketed demands careful consideration. The appearence of the package when the butter goes to market is one of the things that helps to sell that butter. The package ought to be neat, clean and attractive. The one-pound brick print is the style most used and is superior to the plan of putting the butter up in rolls or otherwise, for it can be handled at less cost and with less waste.

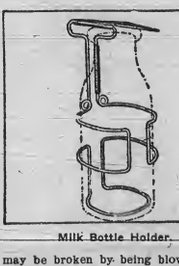
The butter, of course, should be wrapped in parchment or butter paper, which should be of good quality, of proper size and dipped in cold water before being used. It pays well to have some special brand printed on the wrapper in fancy letters with the name of the maker or the name of the farm. The prints ought to weigh not less than 16½ ounces each, the extra weight being for shrinkage before reaching the consumer. The time of marketing depends on local conditions.

VALUE OF BEET PULP RATION

Results Given of Five Weeks' Test Made at Massachusetts Station—Gain Made In Weight.

In a test for five weeks conducted by the Massachusetts station, six cows were fed by the reversal method on a ration of hay, bran and cottonseed meal to which was added 4.3 pounds of either cornmeal or of beet pulp daily. The herd lost in live weight 33 pounds on the cornmeal ration and gained 37 pounds on the beet pulp ration.

There was no substantial variation in the yield or average composition of the milk. It required for the cornmeal ration 112 pounds of dry matter to produce 100 pounds of milk and 20.51 pounds to produce one pound of milk fat, for the beet pulp ration 110.72 pounds and 20.54 pounds respectively. In a similar experiment to the above, molasses, beet pulp and corn meal were compared.



The amounts of digestible nutrients in each ration were approximately the sama. The herd gains were similar. There was no wide variation in milk yields and only a slight advantage in the production of milk-fat with the corn meal ration.

It required for the corn meal ration 104.4 pounds of milk, and 18.72 pounds to produce one pound of fat; for the molasses beet pulp ration 108.1 and 19.87 pounds, respectively.

HANDY MILK BOTTLE HOLDER

Milk Bottle Holder.

may be broken by being blown off a window ledge by the wind. By means of this holder, recently patented by a Palouse (Wash.) man, the milk bottle is securely held in place. A metallic plate is securely hinged onto the upper end of the holder to cover the cap and hold it securely in place. This, besides keeping the dog or cats from clawing the cap out to get to the milk, prevents dirt from settling on the cap to cause annoyance and keeping it from falling into the bottle and its contents when opened. A continuous piece of wire is used in making the main portion of the holder. This wire is so welded together smoothly that there are no rough edges to catch and tear the hand or clothing. The wire makes a loop beneath the bottom of the bottle so that it may act as a sort of cushion to prevent breaking in case of being set down hard. The double band about the center of the bottle prevents it being struck against the cement curb or stone when set down by the carrier.

How They Voted.

After some most excellent speeches, considerable trading in votes, much grandiloquent language in regard to the "support of the administration," "loyalty to the party platform," and much explaining of votes, the Statewide Prohibition Amendment Bill, by far the most important question before the General Assembly at this session, has been "laid aside" for another two years.

The people of the State have been denied the right to decide this question although 106 out of 120 counties have declared the liquor traffic doomed; the people, however, will continue to demand this right until they obtain it.

No arguments were made against the bill. The plea of the opposition was simply on the grounds that the platform of both political parties had endorsed "County Unit" and that a vote for any other measure would be a disloyal vote.

In the House we had to encounter a committee made up almost entirely of "administration" men. The chairman, Mr. Elliston, and the members of this Committee on Constitutional Amendments were very courteous. A respectful hearing was given the Equal Suffrage representatives and the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Beuchamp appeared before this committee and made a most able plea. Mrs. Beauchamp said in part: There is no question before the American people today that enlists such intense interest as the question of prohibition. The well-being of society depends on what we are to do with the liquor traffic. Nineteen States have outlawed it and enacted state-wide prohibition laws 71 per cent of the people of our country previous to Jan. 1, 1916, were living under prohibitory laws of their own enactment. In our own State, and if you are truly democratic, you will weigh this. 106 out of 120 counties have said the liquor traffic should not exist. In our own State it has been said by the liquor people themselves that once this question gets to the people it will carry by not less than 10,000 majority. I appeal to you as American citizens to do something to better conditions in Kentucky, to give the people a chance to say whether liquor shall be sold and manufactured in the State.

The liquor traffic has not one good thing to say for itself. It has taken a stand behind its last intrenchment and that is the question of Revenue. Will you put your boy in the balance against Revenue? Carroll D. Wright, U. S. Labor Commissioner, has said that for every dollar the liquor puts into the treasury, municipal, State or National, it takes $21.00 to take care of the product of the liquor traffic.

There is not a State in the Union that has had prohibition that is not ready to testify that it brings prosperity.

The worse feature of the liquor traffic is not the wreckage of homes, not the making of drunkards, not the breaking of hearts—its worst feature is its debauchery of citizenship. This government depends on the integrity of its voters. The corrupting power of the liquor traffic is today the greatest foe of our nation. I do not ask you to give prohibition to Kentucky; I ask you to do that most democratic thing—give the people a chance to say whether this iniquity shall go on in the State."

Preparedness.

The country is deeply stirred on the question of preparedness. Congress is spending hours and days discussing the question; shipbuilders and munition manufacturers are bringing tremendous influence to bear by drawing gruesome pictures of our defenseless condition as a Nation. Meanwhile thousands of good men and true are declaring for a greater preparedness. Even our great and good President is touring the country, responding to the pleas that the people are ready to throw themselves and their sons into war for real or fancied grievances when, in reality, there is no nation in the world that would throw itself into a conflict with the United States.

Meanwhile there is in our midst a real foe, a vampire, lulling us to a fancied security while it is sucking the life blood of the nation to the siren song of Revenue.

Let us look at facts and see if there is not a real peril facing the United States. The Captain of the United States Marine Corps stationed at New York City, makes a detailed statement of the recruiting for the United States Marine to date, 1915. The summary shows that there were 41,168 applicants for examination. Of these only 3,833 were accepted for enlistment, which is a little more than 9 7-12 per cent, or one man accepted to nearly 10 rejected! Rejected—because they are unfit to be shot at, but they are fit to make fathers of the future generations. Why this awful degeneracy? Scientists are ready with the answer. It is liquor, Tobacco and Licentiousness—and the greatest of these is Liquor. Not only is this awful harvest the result of drink by the young men themselves, but sadder, more serious still, many of these young men came into the world, half made up, because of the drink heredity, and still more potent of evil is the fact that these pro fit rejected men will pass on to the future American citizen an accumulated evil heredity. If the unfit outnumbered the fit ten to one now, in a few more generations what will the harvest be? Write to your Congressman, your Senator asked them as patriots to protect the citizen of tomorrow by submitting a Prohibition Amendment to the States and give the future American citizen a chance.

We will spend more to prepare for war than all the distilleries and breweries in America would cost, and at the same time thru the liquor traffic we are rendering the soldier unfit for war or peace. Would it not be wiser to prepare the man? Give us strong, clean, true men and we can, with our present resources, defend ourselves against the world. All lend a hand for this greater, surer Preparedness.

Makes Cheap Gasoline.

Morton de Waltoff, the young son of Dr. Dayve de Waltoff, of 452 Forty-seventh street, Brooklyn, announced last night that he had discovered a new way of making gasoline at a cost of only a half cent a gallon. De Waltoff said he had made the discovery accidentally when experimenting to produce carbolic acid at a price below that to which the European war had driven the market figures for the acid. The gasoline was a by-product of this successful experiment, he said, and by-products of great value. He would not name these.

As a result de Waltoff declared, he could now make carbolic acid at a price much below the market, and also produce his other, and also produce his line. The material from which these products was obtained, said, existed in unexhaustible ities, in this country, now generally regarded as value.

De Waltoff said he had made public his discovery, did not want the lands for's his basic product was found bought up by speculators. He he hoped to interest capitalists to organize a company the purchase of these lands the manufacture of all his ducts, though especially gas —New York Times.

Mrs. Anna C. Gaines entertained a number of friends with a delightful dinner, last Tuesday.

Mrs. Jesse Morris, of Rushville, Indiana, spent the past week with her mother, Mrs. Bettie Clore.

A. H. Norman spent from Wednesday until Saturday of the past week with Ben S. Houston.

Mrs. George Kreylich and Mrs. Mary V. Gaines are in Chattanoogs, with Mrs. Kreylich's brother, Mr. Allie Gaines, who is very ill.

A number of friends and relatives enjoyed the magnificent dinner at Mrs. Bettie Clore's, Monday, in celebration of her 75th birthday.

W. Lee Cropper sold two farms the past week, one to Rev. J. W. Campbell and one to T. E. Masters. He then bought the R. C. Gaines farm and will move to his new home this fall.

Miss Mary Thompson is improving.

Next Thursday is St. Patrick's day.

Next Sunday is the first Sunday in Lent.

The ground would soon settle if it was given an opportunity. It may be that the continued rains will pack it until it will be hard to break and make plowing a hard task.

At this distance it looks like President Wilson made a mistake when he selected Landeis for Judge, and he would do the proper and handsome thing by withdrawing his name and substituting that of ex-President William Howard Taft.

Joe W. Cleek, of Beaver, and Mrs. Emma Marshall, of Union, obtained a marriage license in Covington, Tuesday. The bride and groom are very popular in their respective neighborhoods and have many friends who wish them health and happiness.

Edgar Riley and R. H. Carter were struck by the storm last Monday night as they were coming up the Willow Run hill in Mr. Riley's machine, and the lights on the machine went out but they continued on their way by the assistance of the illumination furnished by the flashes of lightning that followed each other in rapid succession.

A heavy electric, wind, hail and rain storm swept this part of the country between seven and eight o'clock last Monday night. Some feared a repetition of the last July storm when the wind began to get very strong. Tuesday was bright until about 4 p. m., when a storm came up almost without warning and rain fell and the wind capered around in a boisterous manner.

Rev. and Mrs. Edgar C. Riley entertained, Monday and Monday night, Mr. Hensey, who was a schoolmate of Rev. Riley's. Mr. Hensey has been in charge of a school in Africa for several years and is here on a furlough, having came over on the Lustania the last trip preceding her being torpedoed by a German submarine. Mr. Hensey delivered a lecture Monday night which was illustrated by pictures of scenes in Africa, Japan, China and other countries. The lecture was highly entertaining and instructive, and was attended by a good sized crowd.

DON'T WANT DIXIE HIGHWAY

But A Fair Distribution and Good Roads.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

As your paper seems to be a medium for the expressing of opinions in regard to matters in which the public is interested, I ask you to publish a statement of the cost of purchasing and reconstructing the Burlington and Florence turnpike.

In the edition of February 24th, 1916, the article entitled, "why it was Done," is alright, but it did not state amount to be expended on that pike.

The "State Aid" to which the county was entitled last year for work on county seat roads was in excess of $9,500, according to the State man who spoke in Burlington about the time the free pike issue was up. The county is supposed to put in a like amount. If that be true the Fiscal Court had $19,000 of road funds. If it took that amount to buy and reconstruct five miles of pike what will it take to pike the county? $380,000 will not get the pikes out of Burlington.

I do not mistrust that BROAD-MINDED, NOBLE SET OF DEMOCRATS, but I think they could help the Union and Burlington road people out of the creek.

One of these broad minded officials tells us we will have to put up dollar for dollar to move that road.

The Hathaway people would be glad to have a road on some of their hills. Some time since they asked for the removal of one of their roads but their request was not granted.

I do not want a Dixie Highway, just a road so children can get to and from school.

I am for a fair distribution and good roads.

ED F. CLEGG.

The purchase and reconstuction of the Burlington and Florence pike will cost between $19,000 and $20,000 the Recorder is creditably informed.

Explosion—Coal Oil not Acetylene.

It was reported an explosion caused by Acetylene gas resulted in several deaths at Rising Sun, Ind.

G. J. Grubbs, of Walton, who is employed by the Oxweld Acetylene Company, Chicago, Ill., wishing to know the details went to Rising Sun to investigate and found the following facts:

Mr. Robt. W. Galbreath had purchased an Acetylene generator some time ago and when their first supply of carbide gave out, not being familiar with Acetylene gas and having instructions not to recharge the generator by a lighted flame, decided to use coal oil lamps for the evening, which resulted fatally.

Mrs. Galbreath arose from the evening meal, starting to her bedroom carrying a lighted lamp. She felnted and fell. The lamp exploded, oil covering her person, igniting from the flames causing her death.—Adv.

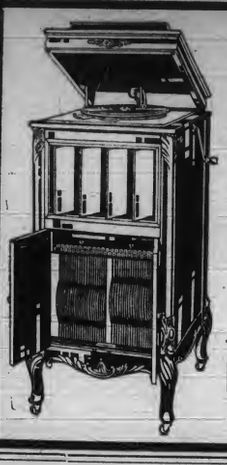
Special Notice.



The Farmers' Mutual Telephone Directory says, I handle any kind of rubber tire; and that I have the exclusive agency of the Republic Rubber Tires. That contract just cost me $200 of which of some of my customers will attest. I guaranteed those tires and I filled same to the letter. Now, right here I do most solemnly promise and swear that I will never again change the old and tried for any new thing whatsoever. Furthermore, that I will not use any Rubber Tire except Kelly's Springfield—the first rubber tire ever made and the best. I ought to know for surely I paid last year to find out. It is just like a boy changing the old girl for the new or a man leaving his old and tried wife for a new one. Now, isn't it a fact that they always go back to the old and tried love, is it not so boys? That's what I have done with Kelly's Springfield Rubber Tire—gone back to my old love. While they cost me more money they will cost my customers $12.00 per set or $3.00 per tire; these tires I give a guarantee on for being as represented. They will not stuff out nor will they peel, but will wear smooth like a good tire should.

Now, in regards to repainting: I have tried to get a quick system and do good work, but I find it a failure so I give it up and must stick to the old system. All my work I guarantee to be as represented. I do anything in the carriage line. Bring me your work if you want it done right. I solicit your trade.

Jerusha A. Shoemaker Dolph

Jerusha A. Shoemaker Dolph was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, August 31, 1834, died in East Bend, Ky., Feb. 29th, 1916, aged 81 years, 5 months and twenty-nine days.

At the tender age of three years she, being left an orphan, was given a home by Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Hewitt, of Rising Sun, Ind., with whom she made her home until her marriage, Sept. 17. 1850, to Andrew J. Dolph of that place.

To this union ten children were born of whom five survive: Jesse H. Dolph, of Wisner, Louisiana; Mrs. Fred C. Benson, of Jacksonville, Illinois; Mrs. John E. Hodges and Mrs. Charles Bodie, Jr., of East Bend, and Chas. Dolph, of Grant, Ky.

Besides the children she leaves nine grandchildren, four great-grand children and other relatives and many friends to mourn her departure.

In early life she united with the Methodist Episcopal church, of Rising Sun, Ind., but later in life, after making her home in Kentucky, she removed her membership to the East Bend Methodist Episcopal church of which she remained a faithful and consistent member till death.

She had been a great sufferer during her life, being a little weak frail woman, and during her last illness of three months she was never heard to utter one word of complaint, always patient and pleasant.

She was a faithful wife and devoted mother, thinking no tasks too hard or burden too heavy to bear for her family.

As a neighbor and friend she was a woman who encouraged the right, abhorred the wrong, and one whom it was a pleasure to know and an honor to be called her friend.

In her death the community has lost one of those truly good women who are truly mothers in Israel.

The funeral services were held Thursday in the Methodist church at Rising Sun, Indiana, conducted by Bro. McDowell, the pastor, after which the remains were interred in Cedar Hedge cemetery beside those of the husband who had preceded her only 17 months.

It is with sad, sad hearts we say good-bye, darling mother, but it is not forever. We hope to meet again where heart aches and partings are never known.

Card of Thanks—We desire to thank the friends who were so loyal, true and kind to us in every way during the illness and death of our dear mother, Mrs. A. J. Dolph. The Children.

SNYDER & CRAWFORD

The announcement Wednesday morning of the tragic death of C. C. Clore, was a shock to Burlington where he was well known and liked.

The Cason boys who reside down on Middle creek, and are expert anglers say the creek contains more bass than they ever observed in previous years.

Tomorrow is St. Patrick's day, when wearing of the green will be in order.

A SAD ACCIDENT

C. C. Clore, a Prominent Citizen and Farmer Found in The Field Dead by His Son.

Chas. C. Clore, son of the late Churchwill Clore, and a well to do farmer who resided about three miles out on the East Bend road, was found dead where he went to feed some stock Wednesday morning. When he left the house he told his son, Elbert, to hitch the mules to the sled and come on and they would haul a load of fodder. When the son went down into the field he found his father dead, having been shot in the head with a shot gun he had with him. It is supposed that Mr. Clore slipped in some manner and discharged the gun with fatal effect. Mr. Clore was in his sixties, was an excellent neighbor and splendid gentleman. He is survived by a wife and one son.

RABBIES EPIDEMIC IN JEFFERSON COUNTY.

Nine Persons Bitten and More Than 200 Dogs Killed in Effort to Stamp Out Scourage.

Practically all of Jefferson county outside of Louisville, as well as quite a bit of territory included in the corporate limits of the city, is in the throes of the most serious epidemic of rabies, or hydrophobia, which has ever been known in that section and which is perhaps unprecedented with but few exceptions in the annals of the United States. That universally dreaded malady first put in an appearance on November 10 last, and since that time has been flourishing despite the strenuous efforts of city and county health officers to stamp it out of existence. The officials are at a loss to authoritively state just where the disease originated, but it is thought that it is the aftermath of the epidemic which was experienced in Bullitt county, particularly in the Salt River district, late last summer and early in the fall.

This is perhaps the most authentic theory of the origin of the epidemic at present gripping Jefferson county, as the first case reported was from a point on the Preston street road, near the Bullitt county line, while about the same time a dog owned by a resident of Jacob Addition became rabid and chewed up three young dogs before it was dispatched.

A REAL BONANZA?

Urbanites as well as ruralists are vitally interested in the price of pork products, and consequently, in the conservation of the health of the animal which provides those products. The mortality rate in the pig pen is a matter that intimately concerns every housekeeper. If Dr. Charles W. Duval, of Louisiana, has, as he believes, discovered a genuine specific for the prevention of hog cholera, practically at cost free and trouble free, and fool proof, he has discovered the great American bonanza.

A great deal has been written upon the subject of the serum treatment to immunize the hogs against the most devastating of the diseases that attack them. Much of the advocacy of the treatment; much advice to farmers who would be progressive, and abuse of farmers who have not taken advantage of their opportunities, has been based upon the mistaken idea that there has existed for some time a means of prevention that may be applied at small expense, with little effort and with certainty of results. A good deal is heard about the millions that could be saved on the farm if farmers would avail themselves of the existing means of warding off cholera. But the fact seems to be that the serum treatment is expensive, must be applied by an expert, is not of lasting effect, and if carelessly handled may kill the animals upon which it is tried. If these are the circumstances existing it is unreasonable to blame farmers for "conservatism" in this particular.

The Country Gentleman, expressing the hope that the discovery of Dr. Duval is all that it is declared by the discoverer to be, says, "it is not easy for the imagination to conceive what the far reaching effect would be if a simple discovery could wipe out one of the greatest scourges of the American stock raiser."

That a dime will buy a farmer's supply of the anti-cholera vaccine is the statement of Dr. Duval, who is, by the way, Director of the Bureau of Pathology and Bacteriology in Tulane University. The United States Department of Agriculture, thru the Bureau of Animal Industry, is preparing to make extensive tests of the discovery this spring. The formula is made public.

"There is enough in a small vial to immunize a half million hogs for life," according to Dr. Duval, "and enough in my laboratory to immunize every hog in America." And "anyone who can sit on a hog's back and hold him can apply it."

The housekeeper who buys breakfast bacon, as well as the farmer who raises hogs, will hope that such optimism is warranted by the actual potency of the remedy.

How They Figure.

A half truth is often a gross falsehood. "Figures will not lie," but it is evident that sometimes liars will figure. When a man or a set of men have repeatedly deceived you, they forfeit their claim on your confidence for the future.

We cannot hope to run down all the misrepresentations of the liquor people, for one man can make more false statements in an hour than ten men can secure the data and prove to be false in a week. That our people may know something of the methods by which the liquor people get their so-called "figures and facts" we are giving first the result of our investigation of a few of their misrepresentations and distorted statements.

The figures they are giving out comparing the divorce record of Kansas with that of other states are all garbled and misleading. In that of Kansas they give the number of divorces per capita for the married population, but in other states they give the number of divorces per capita for the entire population, married and single, which is two and one-half or three times that of the married population. The fact is, Kansas has decidedly fewer divorces per capita than the states with which she is unfavorably compared by the liquor people.

Several years ago the liquor interests made the statement that Kansas, a prohibition state, had more prisoners per capita in her prisons than Illinois, a license state. In giving the number of Kansas prisoners they included the 696 prisoners at that time in the United States military prison at Ft. Leavenworth, Kan., the 752 U. S. Civil Prisoners at Leavenworth, Kansas, also 517 Oklahoma prisoners which were at that time kept in rented Kansas prison room. Oklahoma then had no state prison, and Kansas, because of her population, had a surplus of prison room.

Yet the liquor people in their figures included all of these, a total of 2747 prisoners in the number of Kansas prisoners, and made the comparison with Illinois on this basis. The facts of the case are that there were only 780 inmates in Kansas State prisons and 281 of these were residents of adjoining liquor states who had come into Kansas and were convicted and sentenced to prison for crimes committed in Kansas, leaving only 499 resident Kansas prisoners. In their new "Anti-Prohibition Manual" the liquor people make a similar misrepresentation of the number of Kansas prisoners using the carryall term "prisoners of all kinds" and then make the comparison with other states from that false basis.

Prohibition Secure in Tennessee

They have quoted the President's "Shannon letter" extensively in which he recommended local option for New Jersey, which was then an advanced position in that state, at a time when there was no local option even for the precinct, but they have attempted to suppress his "Grogan Texas letter," in which he speaks most favorably of Prohibition for Texas because of the advanced condition there. In this letter the President says: "I believe that for some states, state-wide prohibition is possible and desirable, because of their relative homogeneity.

In their appeal as to their benefit to the state as taxpayers they say that $31,387,000 is the capitalization of Kentucky distilleries and breweries. Yet the books of the assessors of the counties of Kentucky, in which distilleries, breweries and rectifying plants are situated show that the assessed value of all real estate, personal property and cash on hand of these interests is only $8,564,433; thus by the juggling of figures they would lead the people to believe that they pay tax on nearly four times as much property as they actually do, and by so doing they bring inadvertently to light the fact that they list their property for taxation at only about one-fourth the amount of its capitalized value. One of the greatest surprises to the progress of Prohibition is the readiness with which many of the temperance people accept the misrepresentations of the liquor people and the liquor politicians. They forget that it is the statement of the liquor interests in their own behalf—of criminals on trial for their lives, and that the guilty defendants must deceive the jury the people, or be pronounced guilty and receive the death penalty.

When Governor Rye of Tennessee was asked as to the truth of the story being circulated by the liquor interests that Tennessee is facing a huge deficit because of its prohibition law, he promptly replied, "there is absolutely no truth in the statement." The state's expenditures or appropriations for schools and confederate pensions have been largely increased in the past few years, and quite a large debt was owing before or at the time the law went into effect. The governor says there has been no financial loss to the state on account of prohibition and that the state is in a more prosperous condition than ever before.

Investigation by Federal Grand Jury.

The federal grand jury in session at Pittsburgh, Pa., is investigating the silent partnership between the liquor and politics which has gone on undisturbed the nation over for so many years. Warring political factions in Pennsylvania made charges against each other which led up to the present investigations. Liquor men who have been subpoenaed so far to appear in court are the president, secretary and treasurer in each case of the United States Brewers' Association, Pennsylvania Brewers' Association, and the Westmoreland County Brewers' Association. Secretary Fox of the United States Brewers' Association, who presented in court records purporting to be copies of original records of the company, was threatened with imprisonment if the original records were not at once produced. In connection with the grand jury investigation a startling disclosure was made before Judge W. H. S. Thomson in the United States District court recently by Attorney A. M. Neeper, representing the Independent Brewing Company of Pittsburgh, of which "Jim" Mulvihill is vice-president. Mr. Neeper admitted that this company has contributed $73,495.20 to four brewery associations.

One matter of inquiry of particular interest is the connection of the liquor interests with the suffrage campaigns of last fall in New Jersey, New York, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, and whether the constant recurrence of the same items in records of brewery associations means that rum forces financed the anti-suffrage campaigns.

The Folly of It.

The mayor of New York City is evidently closely related to the traditional character who sought to prevent the advent of dawn by wringing the neck of the crowing cock which was heralding its approach. Learning that the city board of health had published and was putting in circulation a most interesting and unique series of anti-alcohol leaflets, he is reported to have ordered their distribution stopped and to have destroyed all of which he could get possession. If by this medieval method of dealing with a great health reform he expects to check a movement to enlighten the people concerning the dangers of alcohol, we fear he will be disappointed. His high-handed suppression of this educational literature cannot fail to arouse curiosity as to the political influence which prompted the act and a suspicion that the men who make their fortunes out of the beverages to which the board of health objects, had something to do with it. And where lives there an American citizen so lacking in spirit as to be willing to be dictated to by liquor politicians in any matter that relates to the health of himself, his family and his city. Quite unintentionally the mayor has started a piece of publicity which will promote the very cause he would injure, and will make the people eager to know the facts he is trying to keep from them. Meanwhile other educational agencies will continue with unabated energy to give to the people the truth and the whole truth concerning the Great Destroyer of health—the liquor evil.

REPLY TO WUNDER.

To the Recorder:

I don't wish to get into any controversy, but, if you will permit, I would like to say a few things in regard to that "Wunder" full article in your issue of March 2d, which proposes to answer some things that were said in the W. C. T. U. news of Feb. 17th.

First of all, from the signature of the writer of the article under the caption, "Prohibition does not prohibit," I judge he is a paid official writer for the whisky cause. He signs after his name "Publicity Manager."

Take everything you hear from one of these men with caution. You may count on their arguments being full of flaws. They are not logical, in fact, not intended to be logical. All they care for is to carry their point, truth or no truth, and cause some weak minded people to think that "moderate" and "immoderate" drinkers, saloon - keepers, brewers and distillers are all martyrs to the cause of "personal liberty." They don't hesitate to misrepresent facts, and, in many instances, where they have not the slightest semblance of argument to disprove statements that are made by Temperance workers, they simply deny what is said and "go about their business." A simple denial is not sufficient to disprove any statement. The reason for all this is very evident. The liquor business is doomed to die. These men who are interested know it, and since their business is dishonest anyway, they are willing to sacrifice anything else in order to make it live a little longer. It is only the struggling of a dying criminal. He is simply dying hard. He knows he must go. So he will fight as hard as he can.

Now as to the contents of the article itself. I don't know that there are 1,600,000 men directly employed in the liquor business. That may or may not be so. I haven't the reliable statistics available at present. But we will grant that they will be obliged to get other work and go into other business. But we shall never admit that it will make it harder on the "butcher, the baker and the grocer." There may be more butchers and bakers and grocers, but I want to show you there will be no hardships resulting from that fact. There are 5,000,000 slaves to drink in the United States, leaving out the countless "moderate" drinkers. They spend $2,500,000,000 a year for drink, which they ought to spend for meat and bread and groceries and clothing. Now when $2,500,000,000 is spent in addition in the "butcher's and the baker's and the grocer's" business it will entirely offset, nay, it will greatly reduce the hardships of this increased competition. What about that, Mr. Whisky man? If you can't see that you are certainly narrow-minded. We haven't any saloons in Boone county (and don't believe anything you say will put any here) and yet I don't suppose the butchers and the bakers and the grocers" are suffering. I know several who think that there is more competition between saloons and the grocery business than between themselves and any additional grocers resulting from our voting out whisky.

This week the Recorder is "blocked off" with matter pertaining to the question of prohibition which is a dead issue in Boone county, a territory in which the whisky question has been everlastingly settled. Besides the copy used this week the Recorder is in receipt of enough more to occupy at least another page, therefore in order to play no favorites the Recorder hereby declines to handle any more copy either for or against prohibition, and kindly suggests to those who have been sending to it a plethory of copy on each side that they furnish it to some of the several publications that is in sympathy with their views on the question, and makes a speciality of matter for or against prohibition, thereby reaching a field in which their labor will find material to leven, while the Recorder will fill, as best it can, its mission as a local paper.

Now there comes that old argument that has been exploded long ago. "Don't forget that National prohibition would mean the loss of $325,000,000 annually in revenue to the United States government, or one third of its income, which sum Prohibitionists would not make up," says the "answer." If the government does get that much income from liquor tax each year, the gradual elimination of the liquor traffic will make it easy for the government to change its source of income, all this not happening in a day. The government, if it is farsighted enough, is going to make provisions for itself. Then the government has no right, morally or anywise, to receive its income in such a manner. Whiskey tax is "blood money." It is a disgrace that this government has been run by such disgraceful method for so many years. In licensing liquor it is licensing crime, and no righteous person believes in licensing crime. Who would consent to a license of murder? And yet this government indirectly licenses murder. Men under the influence of liquor murder, shoot, rob, steal and commit all kinds of crime. Men who use liquor gradually kill themselves and by their neglect those who are dependent upon them. Again putting man's productive power at $1000 and supposing the average loss of efficiency is only one half, the loss of production for these 5,000,000 drunkards would be $2,500,000,000, showing that the direct money loss to the country (not the government) is $2,500,000,000. You say that we Prohibitionists wont make up the deficit to the government of $325,000,000? Whether we will or not, we could do it if we would and then make by the deal over $2,000,000,000 (that figure 2 followed by 9 ciphers means 2 billion.)

The writer also says he is opposed to "immoderate" drinking. If you are, you ought to live up on the side of temperance, because your opposition will never amount to a "hill of beans," as long as we have the open saloon. There is very little relation, moreover, between the subject of overeating food and "immoderate" drinking of liquor. Very few people die from overeating food as compared with the number of those who die from overdrinking of liquor. A man once without any provocation whatever, and under the influence of liquor, drew a revolver on me, only a child at the time, and would have shot me had I not acted promptly. If he had been suffering from indigestion I don't believe he would have done such a thing.

Now in regard to moving pictures and the Prohibition movement: There is no connection between moving picture censorship and Prohibition, unless we should say that men who drink are so destitute of morals that they prefer immoral picture shows. That is the case Prohibition and movie censorship go hand in hand. But I believe there are men who do not believe in Prohibition who don't care for their sons and daughters to visit places where vile and immoral pictures are shown. Sensible people believe there should be a rigid censorship of films. There is great delight and amusement and instruction to be gotten from clean photo plays and scenery. We do not want to abolish moving picture shows, because they can be profitable. It is more than a censorship of saloons that we want. It is their total abolition. Because with all the laws regulating them, with all the taxes imposed upon their proprietors, saloons can never be made respectable, much less profitable.

In regard to the "employment question" that our opponent refers to: The editor of the W. C. T. U. news quoted some results of an investigations made to ascertain the attitude of the great iron and steel producing concerns in Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Illinois toward alcoholic drink and drinkers, in which it was shown that these corporations were opposed to the drink habit and the open saloon. In some concerns drink is absolutely forbidden, in others there are certain positions that drinking men cannot hold, in all the total abstainers are promoted above the moderate drinker. The writer of the answer speaks thus: "There isn't one considerate big business man in the whole United States of America, who will 'fire' an employee who is capable of doing good work, just because he happens to take an occasional drink." Now I wonder if there are any big business men in the iron and steel industry? We people here in Boone county have some intelligence, now! You cannot make a definition of a "considerate big business man" according to your narrow preconceived ideas.

I hardly need to refer to the suggestion that "in these near Prohibition days we may expect to find an extremely radical boss ordering his employee to kiss his (the employees) wife, on the theory that osculation is unsanitary and tends to injure the workers health and consequently his business efficiency. When kissing his wife has the same effect on a man as liquor does, may we not expect, and rightly so, to have prohibitory laws against the same.

I think the writer is trying "to put one over on us" sure enough when he tells us that the "dry" South is practically a "wet" South. I don't believe there are quite as many lawless citizens in the "whiskey element" even as he would have us believe. Surely not all the men who were in the saloon business have become criminals. I admit there are some bad men in the saloon crowd who would disobey the sacred law and trample under foot the state governments to make a little money. But they are not all bad men, we hope.

In refuting his statement that the southland is poorer in resources and richer in crime than it ever was before, and all because of Prohibition, for one thing I am going to quote the following from a reliable source: "There are fat years and there are lean years today, even as there were in ancient times. The year just past was one of the leanest years that the South has experienced since the war. The present year promises to be one of the best. Staticians tell us that the Southern States will have more money to spend from Oct. 1, 1915, to April 1, 1916, than in any preceding year. There are twelve million bales of cotton to be sold at about $50 a bale. There are cereals, cattle, fruits and manufacturers in large quantities which are bringing good prices. The gross increase in the income of the Southern States is approximately three hundred million dollars. Last year was a bad year. But what was the cause? The hard times were evidently not caused by Prohibition. If we can't ship our cotton abroad is that caused by Prohibition? If we can't sell black-leaf tobacco to Germany, is that due to Prohibition? I can't see the connection between the South's cotton and tobacco business and whiskey, unless it was that the Serbian, who killed the Prince was drunk when he did it. This act, you know, was "the straw that broke the camel's back." If he was drunk they needed Prohibition in Serbia. So don't talk about last year's poverty in the south being due to Prohibition, or you will get into trouble.

The man who wrote the article in question doesn't like representative governments. He doesn't believe that when a legislature passes a law it is virtually the act of the people. I suppose I have not been taught correctly as to the nature of representative government. Surely accordingly to a "whiskey" definition the legislative body is not a representative body at all. But of one thing I am sure. If the people in the five states mentioned in which the legislatures passed the laws of Prohibition wanted them repealed, all they would have to do would be to elect men to the legislature who would repeat them. They haven't done so. What can you say to that Mr. Wunder?

As to Kansas: Please read in the issue of Feb. 17, what Gov. Capper says on the subject of "What Kansas does not have." Then read Mr. Wunder's affirmations in regard to the same. Weigh the statements of Governor of Kansas who knows with the statements of Mr. Wunder and whiskey who know, but dont tell you. Choose between the two. If there are any Federal statistics to bear out what Mr. Wunder says, they must have been gathered before the days of Prohibition. Mr. Wunder suppose you look at the date attached to your "statistics."

Then, Mr. Wonder, "triumphs over all," when he ends his "answer" by saying "Prohibition does not prohibit." Because he says it, it is so, of course. But suppose it is so sure enough that "Prohibition does not prohibit." What then? Laws against murder are not always obeyed. Murder is committed every day. The conclusion is, "We will do away with the laws of murder." Never! Then we will not do away with the laws of Prohibition. In concluding, Mr. Editor, I thank you in advance for your courtesy, but that I may further convince any gainsayers, I quote the following to show the advance we are making, at least in one direction.

"The New York Tribune, one of the largest and most influential daily newspapers in the United States, has recently issued an announcement that after April 1, 1916, it will not carry advertisements of any alcoholic liquors," and may I add that I hope, no advertisement of the liquor interest in any form.

Yours very truly,
SOLON T. HILL.

Mulled Cider.

This is an excellent bedtime drink when one feels that he has taken cold or just after coming in from a wetting in the storm. Pound half an ounce of stick cinnamon and ten or twelve cloves until bruised. Put into a saucepan with half a grated nutmeg, cover with a half pint of boiling water and infuse on the back of the stove for 15 minute. Strain, add sugar to taste and stir into a pint of hot cider.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

CONTROL OF ORCHARD PESTS

Certain Fungous and Bacterial Diseases Which Are Best Fought During the Winter Season.

In the management of the orchard, especially the apple and pear orchard, there is a period after the fruit is gathered, and perhaps after other crops have been safely harvested, that is most convenient for doing some of the careful work in the control of certain diseases and pests. There are certain fungous and bacterial diseases, particularly pear blight and apple canker, which are best worked upon at this time. These diseases are principally controlled by the eradication methods rather than by spraying.

Pear blight is a bacterial disease which works mostly in the fleshy, growing, tender parts of the tree, including the blossom clusters, young twigs, and the bark of larger branches, and even on the body, collar, and root system of the tree. Under certain conditions the bacteria spread into the wood to a considerable extent. The disease attacks the pear, apple, quince, and other related fruits.

Pear blight eradication is quite a careful piece of work. It requires close attention on the part of the orchardist or careful training of the help who may be engaged in it. Remember that thoroughness is essential for success. It is not necessary to determine in all cases whether the blight is alive or dead on the lower margin, although somewhat helpful as a guide in determining how low to go. In actual practice it is better to cut out all the dead limbs and all the blight, anyhow, regardless of whether it is a dead case or not.

The blight eradication should always precede the pruning. Other pruning for shaping up the trees may be done, if preferred, before leaving the trees, or may be postponed until some convenient time later, but of course, before the buds push in the spring.

Apple cankers form dead spots on the twigs and branches of apple trees, and occasionally extend down on to the bodies. There are several different types of apple cankers in various parts of the United States. Occasionally two or more kinds may occur on the same tree. They are caused by fungi growing comparatively slowly in the bark and killing it. They often enter in the twigs, fruit spurs, or blighted areas killed by pear blight, but may infect entirely independent of these sources. Frequently locust scars, pruning wounds, or other injuries furnish the point of entry, but some kinds of cankers infect directly into the bark.

The blister canker, common in the middle West, is particularly severe after winter killing or after the trees are weakened are extended droughts.

The principal method of controlling apple cankers is identical with that used for pear blight.

SPRAYING TO CONTROL SCALE

Mixtures Must Be Prepared Properly and Used at Right Strength—Oil is Easily Applied.

In order to completely control the San Jose scale pest the spray mixtures must be prepared properly and used at the proper strength and applied so thoroughly that every particle of the infested tree is covered with the solution. Since the solutions kill only by contact, each individual scale must be hit if the pest is to be controlled. A few scales which may escape by faulty spraying will reinfest the trees the following summer.

The oil sprays are usually more easily applied, for they tend to spread better. Whether the lime-sulphur or the oil spray is used, they should be applied from all directions, so that there is no chance of any portion of any of the limbs and twigs escaping the treatment. A beginner usually attempts to thoroughly cover the inner limbs, and if he is not careful he will leave the tips of many of the twigs, where thousands of scales will escape treatment. A nozzle throwing a fine spray is to be preferred over the coarse nozzle used for controlling the codling moth during the spring and summer.

Posers for Prohibition.

Austere Invective is hurled at us by the "National Prohibitionist" because we accuse the Prohibition Party of practical forgery in circulating what purports to be a verbatim account of Abraham Lincoln's stand in favor of prohibition. Their only defense is that one old man alleges that Lincoln made this statement to him just before he died—a flimsy enough foundation, even if we had no real knowledge on the subject. From boyhood to age Lincoln was interested in temperance, and yet he is nowhere on record, either in his own writing or in any authentic history, as speaking one word favorable to prohibition. Look, moreover, at what actual evidence we have. There is his famous speech in Illinois, explaining how much better than violence are education and persuasion. There is the liquor license which his own store took out. There is the ill-concealed impatience of his reply to the clergyman who bothered him about the drinking habits of General Grant. This is also something much more conclusive. Our sweet friends, on the "National Prohibitionist," who call us such ugly names, have only to examine the records of the Legislature in Illinois. On December 19, 1840, it was moved to enact by amendment that "No person shall be licensed to sell vinous or spirituous liquors in this state." Abraham Lincoln moved to lay this amendment on the table. A week later an attempt was made to pass a provision that a liquor license could be refused if a majority of the voters in a town, district or ward protested. Abraham Lincoln voted against this restriction. On January 13, he voted again to the same effect. We shall await calmly the "National Prohibitionist's" reply. Abraham Lincoln believed drink to be probably the greatest single curse upon the earth. How it should be decreased was a question of reason and experience. If he lived to-day, our guess is that he would, like most wise men, approve of prohibition in certain neighborhoods, condemning it in others. The present is not bound by our dead statesman's views. It is bound, however, not to state those views falsely; and we hope therefore, never to see circulated by the Prohibitionists another document citing Abraham Lincoln as an upholder of their creed.—Collier's May 15, 1909.

How a Nation Is Made

A nation is made great, not by its fruitful acres, but by the men who cultivate them; not by its great forests, but by the men who use them; not by its mines, but by the men who work in them; not by its railways, but by the men who build and run them. America was a great land when Columbus discovered it; Americans have made of it a greater Nation.

In 1776 our fathers had a vision of a New Nation "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." Without an army they fought the greatest of existing world empires that they might realize this vision. A third of a century later, without a navy they fought the greatest navy in the greatest navy in the world that thay might win for their Nation the freedom of the seas. Half a century later they fought through an inparalleled Civil War that they might establish for all time on this continent the inalienable right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. A third of a century later they fought to emancipate an oppressed neighbor, and, victory won, gave back Cuba to the Cubans, sent an army of schoolmasters to educate for liberty the Filipinos, asked no war indemnity from their vanquished enemy, but paid him liberally for his property. Meanwhile they offered land freely to any farmer who would live upon and cultivate it, opened to foreign immigrants on equal terms the door of industrial opportunity, shared with them political equality, and provided by universal taxation for universal education.

The cynic who sees in this history only a theme for his egotistical satire in no true American whatever his parentage, whatever his birthplace. He who looks with pride upon this history which his fathers have writeten by their heroic deeds, who accepts with gratitude the inheritance thay have bequeathed to him, and who highly resolves to preserve this inheritance unimpaired and to pass it on to his descendants enlarged and enriched is a true American, be his birthplace or parentage what it may.—Lyman Abbott in Outook.

LAMB A FINE HUNTER.

Former Assessor John Ingles sold a lamb to J. D. Evans the other day because it insisted on chasing foxes and wouldn't stay at home. The lamb's mother early in its life disowned it and Mr. Ingles gave it to a dog which was raising a litter of hound pups. The lamb sucked at the breast of the dog, grew up with the pups and waxed strong and fleet of limb. It rejoiced in the sport of the dogs and withal became quite a gay young thing. It ran rabbits to its heart's content, outstriping the dogs, but not knowing what to do with the rabbit when caught. The lamb would butt hogs to beat the band, and when the dogs treed a coon it would stand at the foot of the tree and try to bark. Finally it got to chasing foxes and staying away from home so much, Mr. Ingles thought the safest plan was to sell it.—Cynthiana Democrat.

MILK FEVER IN COWS.

Disease Attacks Only Animals of Improved Breeds—Symptoms, Prevention and Treatment.

Milk fever, also known as parturient apoplexy, not only is peculiar to the cow but attacks only the cows of the improved breeds and of deep milking strains. It chiefly affects cows that have been developed in the direction of early maturity, rapid fattening, or a heavy production of milk. The victims are not always fat when attacked, but they are cows with great powers of digestion and which have been fed heavily previous to the onset of the disease. Cows are seldom affected until they have reached full maturity and are at the most productive period of their lives—that is from five to eight years of age.

In heavy milking cows all the food eaten in excess of that required to make up for the normal waste of the system is turned into milk. When the flow of milk ceases, if the animal is fed heavily, the excess of nutriment from the food has no avenue of escape, and is consequently stored up in the glands and in the blood, causing the animal to become unnaturally plethoric, or affected by excessive nutrition. After the delivery of the calf, the blood which has been supplying the fetus is suddenly turned into the circulation of the mother, and if she does not begin the secretion of milk promptly the plethora of her blood rapidly increases.

The disease usually manifests itself within two days after the borth of the calf, altho in rare instances the cow becomes affected prior to calving. Great uneasiness is one of the first noticeable symptoms. The cow steps about restlessly and refuses to eat or drink. She may soon begin to show signs of abdominal pain. Paraylsis begins to be manifested within a few hours, being indicated by a staggering, uncertain gait. The patient now becomes quieter, rapidly weakens, and finally goes down and is unable to rise. The head is drawn around to one side, usually the left, producing an attitude that is not often seen in any other disease. The animal soon becomes quite unconscious.

The temperature, at first elevated, tends to become lower as stupor and coma progress. The bowels may become torpid or completely paralyzed, and unless improvement is brought about they are not likely to operate again. The bladder too, is paralyzed and fails to expels its contents. Action of either bowels or bladder, or both, is always a favorable symptom.

The torpor of the digestive organs nearly always cause grave disorders; the paunch becomes the seat of fermentation, producing gas and excessive bloating. There are frequent belchings of gas or food, which reaching the paralyzed throat, pass in part into the windpipe, causing inflammation of the air passages and lungs, which condition often becomes the immediate cause of death.

For this disease prevention is more important than treatment. Among the most effective means of prevention may be mentioned a restricted diet for a week or two before calving and for at least four days afterwards. Free access to salt and water is important, as the water serves to dilute the dense rich blood and salt encourages the naimal to drink. The water should be warmed suitably, as iced water may have a bad effect. A cow that is in a very plethoric state, or that was attacked by milk fever at her last calving, should be given a purgative dose, one pound of epsom salts 12 to 24 hours before calving is due. A most important precaution in a plethoric cow is to avoid drawing any milk from the bag for 12 to 24 hours after calving. Daily exercise is of importance, and the value of the open air can not be overestimated. Rich clover pastures should be avoided.

It is a good practice to give a dose of purgative medicine if the air treatment, to be recommended later, is not available. Epsom salts, two pounds, carbonate of ammonia one-half ounce, nux vomica one-half dram, is a good preparation to use at this juncture. The bowels and bladder should be emptied, the former by hand and the latter by the use of a small rubber tube. Bags of ice may be applied to the head. Benefit is often derived from the administration of 20 drops of tincture of aconite every four hours. The application of water, as warm as it can be borne by the hand, to the back and loins acts by removing the blood pressure from the vital organs.

In view of the great superiority of the inflation of the udder with atmospheric air as a curative for milk fever, medicinal treatment is seldom attempted at the present time. By former methods of treatment the losses were very great; but by the use of the air treatment in skillful hands, it is claimed that more than 96 per cent may be saved. A large syringe or injection pump is used a pump for inflating bicycle tires serves the purpose nicely. The whole apparatus should be sterlized before it is used. Boiling for 20 minutes will afford suitable sterilization. The intake opening is filled with sterilized cotton, while the milking tube is attached to the delivering tube.

The teats of the cow should be carefully washed and dried after which the milking tube on the pump or syringe is inserted into each in turn, while an assistant dissends each quarter of the udder with air, without continuing the process after the udder is fully expanded. The tube is now withdrawn and a broad tape is tied around the free end of the teat to prevent the escape of the air. The tube should be disinfected by dipping in a three per cent solution of cresol compound or carbolic acid after each application. Should no indications of improvement be apparent at the end of two hours, the udder should be inflated again.

WORMS AND FLIES' EGGS ARE EATEN BY HUMAN.

Other Articles Relished Include Rats, Lizzards, Earth and Decomposed Fish.

War stringencies have called forth a number of unusual foods, among them a bread made largely of potato flour, artificial pristine cakes, green bonemeal preparations, togetner with innumerable foods manufactured in the laboratory in a tabloid form. So soup cubers, pudding powders, meat essences and vegetable extracts—always more or less more prominent in the kitchen of the European housewife—have, according to reports from the belligerent countries, received a tremendous stimulous through the war. War may create scarcity of the articles in a community's accepted menu, and yet there may be plenty of food about for those who eat it for example, there may be an abundance of snails and grasshoppers on hand, while a people, thoughtless of these delicacies, starve for meat. Showing somewhat of the range of foodstuffs when we consider the world by and large, a bulletin just given out by the National Geographic Society at Washington enumerates a few of the freak foods enjoyed in other countries. It reads:

"There is no accounting for the freaks of human appetites. The Roosevelt story of how he got the best work out of men with sharpfield teeth by promising them the choicest bits of raw hippopotamus and rhinocerous steak for speed in skinning, will be recalled by many who read the articles in the magazines at the time of his African expedition. Capt. Robert H Bartlett, commander of the Karluk, which carried provisions to Artic waters, says that on his return from Herald Island to northern Siberia he found raw polar bear meat tasting better than any piece de resistance he had ever tasted in the home country.

"The Frenchmen like his snails and wonders how any one who accepts oysters can refuse them. In Canton, China, rats sell for fifty cents a dozen, and a dog steak brings more per pound than a leg of mutton. The Chinese mandarin pays $30 a pound for the birds' nests from which his soup is concocted. In parts of the West Indies the palm worm is stewed in fat, while certain African tribes are as fond of caterpillars as an American is of reed birds on toast. The Turks are as disgusted with oysters as we are with the fish the Corsican relishes.

"Eating earth, or geography, is a common thing in many parts of the world. In some parts of Europe a butter is made of fine clay, and in other regions various kinds of earth are sold in the open market. The Persians use some varieties of soil in making their sweetmeats, while in Mexico the eggs of certain species of flies are used by the Indians in making food paste which is regarded as a great delicacy.

"Some of the arctic tribes allow their fish to decompose when it becomes to them the same savory delicacy that Limburger or Munzer cheese is to us, while in point of true fragrance, the palm remains to the fish. The Arabs and many other of the near eastern peoples, prepare their bread in sheets almost as thin as tissue paper and find these crisp, tasteless things pleasing. In Central America, where creeping things are regarded as clean and reasonable, the lizzard, the Iguana, forms a choice article of food. Among the tribes of southern Russia, mare's milk soured into an acrid, strong-tasting beverage constitutes the chief article of diet, and the westener, who at first finds it nauseating, comes to form a strong attachment for this drink. In Syria, Mesopotamia and in Palestine the locust now and then graces the table in a roasted condition, and those who have eaten him pronounce his meat full of the most acceptable flavor.—Washington Star.

A REASON FOR BALDNESS.

The Part Tight Hats Play In Killing Off a Man's Hair.

In the American Magazine Dr. Arthur R. Reynolds, former health commissioner of Chicago gives the following reason for baldness:

"The hats that men wear are the cause of their baldness above the hat line. Women also wear hats but their hats are fastened to their hair and do not grip the head as men's hats do. All other causes of baldness, such as infections, seborrhea, etc., affect both sexes alike and are, in fact, more difficult to treat locally in women than in men because of their long hair.

"How does the hat affect the growth of hair in man? By compressing the arteries, the veins, the lymphatics and to some extent the nerves that supply and nourish the hair. It is not because the hat is hard or soft or that it keeps the head too hot. It is because the hat band compresses the vessels and starves the roots of the hair. Caps may do the same thing, but caps, as a rule, do not grip the head so tightly as hats do

"Baldness usually begins at the summit of the crown toward the back part, at the distant and weaker part of the vessels furnishing the circulation. In such cases the pressure has been on the vessels on the side of the head. Sometimes the baldness begins above the forehead and is the high fore head type of baldness. In these cases the pressure has been upon the vessels of the forehead. Some times the head is bald low down in the back where the pressure has been upon the vessels in this region. When the head is completely bald on top the pressure has been on the entire vascular supply of the scalp."

EXTRA SESSION RESOLUTION

Requesting Governor To Issue Call for Taxation Legislation

PRESENTED TO SOLONS

Closing Hours of General Assembly Finds Legislators on Duty Day and Night. Woman Suffrage Put on Shelf.

Frankfort, Ky. (Special)—Resolutions have been presented both in the Senate and in the House requesting Governor Stanley to call a special session of the Legislature to pass a revenue and taxation bill. The resolution was offered in the Senate by Senator Speer, an administration leader who declared that such a bill could be considered and passed in 30 days. A limit of 30 days is suggested in the resolutions.

Woman Suffrage won in the Senate when that body passed the Combs equal suffrage bill, 26 to 8. It was killed in the House when the Representatives, by a vote of 46 to 45, refused to adopt the motion of Representative Hobbs to put the bill on its passage. Several efforts have falled in the House to bring the bill out of the committee's hands and it is now certain that this amendment will not pass at this session.

* * *

Such incidents as the attempt to split Pike County and the investigation that followed it; the investigation of Representative W. B. Harvey growing out of a chambermaid's allegations and Representative Joseph Phumphrey's charge; the assertion of Representatives Harvey that "a distiller had contributed $25,000 to Govcrnor Stanley's campaign fund"; former Representative Elwood Hamilton's affidavit to the effect that Colonel E. H. Taylor had confided as much to him, and Colonel Taylor's very positive denial of Hamilton's statement, and the prohibition and various liquor questions are cited as the reasons for obstructing business legislation at this session by both administration leaders and the so-called insurgents.

All Senate bills that have passed have been given their first reading in the House, which put the House in a position to consider any Senate bill which has passed before the session adjourned. The Senate has passed about twice as many bills as the House.

* * *

IN THE HOUSE.

Senator Zimmerman's bill providing for the appropriation of $68,000 to pay one half of the claims for the cattle killed to eradicate the "foot and mouth" disease passed 62 to 19.

Without a dissenting vote the House of Representatives passed the workmen's compensation act.

The House concurred in a Senate amendment to the Greene bill appropriating $5,000 annually for two years to the Kentucky Illiteracy Commission. The Senate passed the bill 27 to 0.

The House resolution authorising Governor Stanley to appoint a commission to investigate feeble-mindedness among the residents of Kentucky, was adopted, 23 to 0.

Representative Murphy's bill to provide for a Clerk of the Police Court in cities of the second class passed, 73 to 2.

Representative O'Brien's bill to amend Section 694, Civil Code, so that holders of prior liens can bring suit to enforce such liens before inferior liens fall due, passed by a vote of 62 to 2.

Representative T. R. Jones's bill, to require graded school districts to maintain high schools or pay tuition, was passed unanimously.

Representative Hutchcraft's bill, to provide for school boards of five members in fourth-class cities, passed without opposition.

The bill of Representative E. D. Smith to permit an appeal from Circuit Court in annexation proceedings by fourth-class cities was passed.

The House concurred in Senate amendments to White's bill to authorize the Department of Education to employ assistants, and Representative Cook's bill to permit fiscal courts to name bi-partisan commissions to handle rond bond issues.

The bill of Representative Frank J. Brown to regulate the fees of Magistrates, County Judges and Police Judges was passed, 67 to 2.

The bill of Representative Barrett to license boxing exhibitions under the supervision of an Athletic Board of Control passed without discussion by a vote of 48 to 27. The bill legalizes ten-round no-decision bouts. Clubs desiring to give exhibitions must pay an annual license of $500. The salaries of the members of the Athletic Board of Control are paid from the funds thus collected.

The House unanimously passed the bill of Representative Murphy to authorize school boards in cities of the second class to create insurance funds. Representative Duncan's bill to regulate the packing and grading of apples also was given a unanimous vote.

Representative Furnell's bill to provide for the collection of delinquent taxes in fourth and fifth-class cities passed unanimously.

Representative Pumphrey's bill to make the initial carrier liable to the holder of a bill of lading for the cargo carried was passed without opposition.

Representative Dorman's bill to construct streets on the ten-year payment plan in fourth-class cities passed with only five dissenting votes.

The administration suffered a distinct reverse in the House in the defeat of the joint resolution introduced by Representative Perry, providing for the creation of a Kentucky Tax Commission. The resolution was voted down 49 to 38, after considerable debate. The Republicans voted against the resolution almost unanimously.

Representative W. M. Webb's bill to authorize the guardian of an infant, or the committee for an idiot or lunatic, to lease mining rights passed unanimously.

The bill of Representative Hobbs to appropriate $5,250 for the benefit of the Normal and Industrial School for Negroes passed the House by a vote of 61 to 17. Mr. Hobbs made the only speech on the bill.

The House passed the bill of Representative Young to authorize regents of normal schools to issue certificates as teachers to pupils.

The House passed the bill of Representative Crowe providing that when corporations filed amended articles they must pay the legal organization tax, if they have not already done so.

The House passed the bill of Senator Helm, creating a State Railroad Commission power to regulate the rates of telegraph, telephone and express companies. The bill has passed the Senate and will become a law when it receives the Governor's approval.

The bill of Representative Duncan to authorize the State Board of Election Commissioners, which is Democratic, instead of the Secretary of State, who is Republican, to designate the newspapers of state-wide circulation in which the official election returns shall be advertised, was passed, 51 to 33. The bill was amended to provide that the Election Commission shall cause official returns to be published in "such newspapers as are willing to print them free of charge."

Representative Spahn's itinerant merchant bill was passed by a vote of 66 to 11. This measure, which is indorsed by associations of merchants, provides for a license of $250 on itinerant merchants and requires them to give bond in the sum of $1,000.

The House passed the bill of Representative McMurray prescribing a uniform form for warehouse receipts.

IN THE SENATE.

The semi-monthly pay bill, fought for many sessions by the railroads, was pushed through the Senate by Senators Strickiett and Williams by the vote of 32 to 2.

The Senate concurred by a vote of 18 to 17 in the House amendments to the Knight-Meyers workman's compensation bill. These House amendments restoring sections 73 and 74 to the bill and making it read as it was originally drawn, were fought bitterly.

Governor Stanley and Attorney-General Logan now have it in their power to enforce the liquor laws in Kenton and Campbell Counties. The substitute for the Greene anti-screen bill, which was requested by Governor Stanley and Attorney-General Logan, passed the Senate, 35 to 2.

Senator Huffaker's bill to provide for the working of convicts on the public roads, in accordance with the constitutional amendments adopted last year, passed the House, 49 to 24.

Senator Robertson's bill to permit non-resident children to appear in stage performances, amending the child labor laws, passed 41 to 16.

Senator Helm's bill to provide for the submission to the voters of any county of the question whether the county government shall be changed to the commission plan at any general election was passed, 65 to 1. Under the present laws this question can be submitted only once in eight years.

Senator Huffaker's bill to revive the fire insurance laws of the state passed unanimously.

The "Jim Crow" bill of Senator Knight, requiring street car companies to furnish separate divisions for white and colored passengers, passed 18 to 12. The bill only applies to cities of the first class.

The Senate passed a bill appropriating $15,000 for the Eastern State Hospital at Lexington, to be expended for repairs on the ward for negroes.

An appropriation of $75,000 is made in the bill for the benefit of the Central State Hospital at Lakeland. This money is to be used for a sewerage system, the Hospital Trustees having been indicted for alleged pollution of the streams in Jefferson County, caused by an inadequate sewerage system.

Senator Helm's bill to regulate redemption of script and time checks issued for wages passed, 24 to 2.

The bill of Senator Porter to permit combined bank and trust companies to be organized in counties having 20,000 to 40,000 population, with a capital stock of $30,000, passed, 22 to 5.

Senator Combs' pure food bill passed, 29 to 0.

The bill prohibiting fradulent advertisements passed, 17 to 2. This bill is now in force in 31 states. The bill was introduced by Representative Perry.

Representative's Radcliffe's bill to require co-operative or assessment life and casualty companies to have a $100,000 guaranty fund before doing business passed, 21 to 0.

The House bill of Representative Cook to permit fiscal courts to appoint commissioners to handle road bond issues passed the Senate, 24 to 0. The bill calls for the appointment of four commissioners to handle the funds derived from bond issues for improving roads. The board is to be bi-partisan.

An amendment adopted provides that all counties which already have voted bond issues, and where the bonds have not been issued or sold, may operate under the provisions of the act.

The "blue sky" law, regulating investment companies, was passed, 24 to 5. Those voting against the bill were Senators Helm, Huffaker, Speer, Strickiett and Thompson.

The bill of Senator Scott to regulate drainage, which covers a defect in the 1912 act, passed, 31 to 0. The emergency clause was stricken from the bill.

Senator Speer's bill amending the statutes creating an Examining Board of Nurses passed, 32 to 0.

Not a dissenting vote was cast against the bill of Senator Littrell to authorize the payment of the bonded indebtedness of the Western Normal School. The school is authorized to apply $5,000 annually in appropriation to this indebtedness until paid.

Representative Treadway's bill to provide for three state depositories passed the Senate, 18 to 7. The bill was amended so that state depositories must have capital and surplus of $50,000. The State Banking Commissioner is not given the privilege of examining national banks if they are selected as state depositories.

The bill of Senator Thompson to require courts to pass on all demurrers before ends of terms passed, 23 to 1, Senator Huffaker opposing it.

The bill of Senator Knight to change the name of the Kentucky Institution for Education of the Blind to Kentucky State School for the Blind, and provide $20,000 annually, was passed, 27 to 0.

The bill of Senator Arnett regulating corporations and prohibiting railroads from buying stock in competing lines passed, 20 to 0. Senator Strickiett explained the bill and urged its passage.

The bill of Senator Evans, giving the County Judge the deciding vote in a deadlock in county school boards over filling a vacancy on the board, was amended by State Senator Combs, giving the appointment to the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, and the bill passed, 23 to 1.

Senator Strickiett's bill providing that in cities of the second class the Police and Fire Departments shall be put under civil service passed, 23 to 0.

Easy sailing was accorded Senator Taylor's bill providing for the establishment of district auditoriums and authorizing county and district taxation for this purpose. Thirty Senators favored the bill and none opposed it.

By a vote of 18 to 9 the bill of Senator Rogers to change the date for payment of taxes to June 1, and make them delinquent the 1st day of March following, passed. An amendment adopted gives the sheriff one year in which to settle with the state and county.

Special Notice.

The Farmers' Mutual Telephone Directory says, I handle any kind of rubber tire; and that I have the exclusive agency of the Republic Rubber Tires. That contract just cost me $200 of which of some of my customers will attest. I guaranteed those tires and I filled same to the letter. Now, right here I do most solemnly promise and swear that I will never again change the old and tried for any new thing whatsoever. Furthermore, that I will not use any Rubber Tire except Kelly's Springfield—the first rubber tire ever made and the best. I ought to know for surely I paid last year to find out. It is just like a boy changing the old girl for the new or a man leaving his aid and tried wife for a new one. Now, isn't it a fact that they always go back to the old and tried love, is it not so boys? That's what I have done with Kelly's Springfield Rubber Tire—gone back to my old love. While they cost me more money they will cost my customers $12.00 per set or $3.00 per tire; these tires I give a guarantee on for being as represented. They will not stuff out nor will they peel, but will wear smooth like a good tire should.

Now, in regards to repainting: I have tried to get a quick system and do good work, but I find it a failure so I give it up and must stick to the old system. All my work I guarantee to be as represented. I do anything in the carriage line. Bring me your work if you want it done right. I solicit your trade.

Farm for Sale

I will sell at public auction at the Court House door in Burlington, Ky., at 1 o'clock p. m.,

Monday, April 3rd, 1916,

the Thomas S. Whitaker farm of 300 acres, situated in the north end of Boone County, on the Ohio River, and on the waters of Garrison Creek. This farm is improved with two barns in fair condition and with a good dwelling house.

SPLENDID STOCK FARM.

The farm is specially adapted for stock raising as it is well watered and borders on the Ohio River for a considerable distance, insuring ample water for stock all seasons of the year.

GOOD, FERTILE SOIL.

The soil is fertile and capable of producing splendid crops of corn, all kinds of grain, tobacco and alfalfa. The produce on the farm for the year 1915 amounted to nearly $2,000.

TERMS OF SALE.

This farm will be sold to the highest bidder, either for cash or on a credit of six and twelve months, at the option of the purchaser. If sold on a credit the purchaser will be required to execute notes for the purchase money, secured to the satisfaction of the undersigned, said notes to bear interest at the rate of six per cent per annum until paid.

Possession of the farm will be given as soon as the purchaser complies with the terms of the sale. For further particulars communicate with or call on

Got Through in Two Weeks

Judge Sidney Gaines returned from Owenton, Owen county, last Sunday, having completed a two weeks' term of the Owen Circuit Court, last Saturday night. The term would have been held another week had the business required it. Judge Gaines gave entire satisfaction at the courts held in Grant and Owen counties, and the promptness with which he disposes of business received numerous compliments from the bar and others.

Will Build a New Infirmay

A committee of the Carroll Fiscal Court met yesterday to receive bids for the construction of a new infirmary building upon the poor farm. The plans call for a large two-story brick, with wards for hospital, operating room, an isolation ward for infectious diseases, a colored department, and the entire building will be equipped with electric lights, heating and modern plumbing system. Three bids were received, all of which were close to, but under $10,000.—Carrollton News.

An Old Rebel at Large

John Crisler, the old rebel who resides in Picasant Valley neighborhood, was a caller at this office one day the past week. He has wintered well, sleeping ten hours out of each 24 and having an appetite for three good meals a day. Speaking of the wind storm on Monday night preceding his call, he said the wind blew harder that night than it did on the night of the 7th of last July, felling a great m any trees the July storm did not phaze.

Hydrophobia Alarmingly Prevalent

A recent examination of dogs' heads from widely separated sections of the State shows an alarming prevalence of hydrophobia. Under the authority conferred upon it by law, the State Board of Health hereby requests and directs all persons owning valuable dogs to keep them upon their premises or to have them carefully muzzled, and sheriffs, chiefs of police, constables and the people generally are hereby requested and directed to destroy as painlessly as possible all unmuzzled dogs running at large with a view to the prevention of hydrophobia. Failing to observe this request is punishable by fine before any magistrate.

Who would have thought that the tin can is a menace to the public health? The expert malaria investigators of the U. S. Public Health Service have found however that discarded tin cans containing rain water are breeding places for the mosquito which is the sold agent in spreading malaria. A hole in the bottom of the empty can might have resulted in the saving of a human life. Certainly it would have assisted in preventing a debilitating illness. Empty tin cans have no business about the premises any way, but if you must so decorate your back yards, see to it that the can has a hole in the bottom.

Hold Steady.

Once when Lincoln was president, the story goes, a delegation called on him to protest against somehting he had done. It was shortly after the time when Blondel gave the world a sensation by pushing a wheel barrow ahead of him as he walked a tight rope over Niagara Falls.

"Gentlemen" said Lincoln, "if this man Blondel were crossing the falls and carrying in his wheel barrow the most precious possessions of our land; if he was trying to bring those treasures safely across the torrent for all the people; if you were holding guy ropes to keep taut the rope on which he walked, and if when he got to the middle of the stream he would make what looked to you like a misstep or an unwise movement, would you let go of your ropes and shout at him that he was doing wrong, or would you hold steady and just pray for him? Now gentlemen, I am trying with all my heart to carry through to safety the dearest possessions of the American people, and when I make a movement which seem unwise, I beg you not to unsteady me but to hold the ropes tight and pray for me."

Whenever we read of anyone trying to embarrass or selfishly oppose Woodrow Wilson we think of that story. No man since Lincoln has borne so great a weight of public burdens, and how intelligently, how bravely, how nobly he is striving to bear through to safety our national welfare, and our national honor! And how small and mean are those who are not praying for him and trying to steady the rope.—Higginsville Jeffersonian.

ROAD BUILDING

USE OF CONVICTS ON ROADS

Passed Through Period of Hysterical Wrangle Into One of Actually Successful Accomplishment.

"The use of convicts on the public roads has passed through the period of hysterical wrangle into a period of actually successful accomplishment and almost universal acceptation," stated E. Stagg Whitin, whose new course in practical penal problems at Columbia university was recently announced.

Doctor Whitin holds that the underlying motive in convict road building must be to secure the great efficiency for the state out of its possessions. But the convicts and the roads are property of the state, and the working of convicts upon the roads should eliminate many elements of waste in the administration of road and prison departments.

"The efficiency of the convict on the road gang," he continued, "differs greatly in different gangs. There is no doubt in my mind that the application of the efficiency records in use at the present time in the Wisconsin road camps for free labor will tend even more perceptibly to raise the efficiency of convict labor.

"Incentive must be created before good work can be produced. Coop any of us up in a stuffy, unsanitary jail for several months, arraign us for trial amid the excitement of what we misname as justice, and then take a few months of breaking our spirit in prison surroundings and there is little likelihood that the thing we call ginger will be very apparent. There is definite need of building up if the convict is to return to society and make good.

"The great need," Doctor Whitin concluded, "is for the foreman of a convict road gang to throw his shoulder to the task and inspire his gang with the desire to be like him. The problem lies in securing such men as foreman of the road gangs."

The graduate department of highway engineering at Columbia university has been in close touch with the national committee on prisons and prison labor, which is located on the campus, for a number of years. This work has been carried on under the joint direction of the department and the prison committee. Doctor Blanchard, professor of highway engineering, sees the great opportunity for the highway road work, and, as he stated in a recent article in the Columbia Spectator; "The humane element must be a factor in the education of the highway engineer of the future." This will be supplied through the co-operation of the national committee on prisons and prison labor and the work under Doctor Whitin at Columbia university.

OIL PRESERVES COUNTY ROAD

Surface Rendered Impervious to Water and Crown Is Almost Like Asphalt—No Signs of Wear.

The only road in Berks county, Maryland, which is strictly a "county road" is the stretch of five miles between Douglasville and Yellow House. By this is meant that it is neither a state nor township road, but is entirely under the jurisdiction of the county authorities.

Recently the road was treated with a coating of crude oil, and no one doubts the wisdom of this action. The road is now not only dust-proof, but the surface has been rendered impervious to water. The crown is almost like asphalt, and there are no signs of wear or tear.

The Value of Roads.

It cost France $612,000,000 to build the best system of roads in the world. For many years it has reaped untold wealth, enjoyment and benefit from them, and now those same roads have become the greatest single factor in saving the republic from destruction by invading enemies. Certainly if any sane man doubts the profit or advisability of the best roads and the most of them, science affords an object lesson that none can fail to comprehend.

PRETTY SHADE FOR CANDLE

May Be Made From Remnant of Silk and Trimmed With Ribbon of the Same Color.

Our sketch shows a particularly decorative little candle shade, that can be easily made from a small remnant of green or rose-colored soft silk, and some narrow ribbon of same color.

A cardboard shape must first be prepared to fit over the wire, and this can be done by cutting out a strip of thin cardboard, bending it into shape and fastening it together at the edges with three small paper fasteners. This is shown accompanied in the small sketch on the right of the illustration.

The soft silk is just tacked to the upper edge of the cardboard and then arranged in graceful folds on either side and gathered upwards so that it forms, in a way, a number of tiny festoons. At the points on each side where it is gathered up and tacked to the card the stitching is hidden by a ruche of narrow ribbon; in the sketch the ruche appears in the center in front of the shade, the other ruche being at the back and, of course, out of sight.

To complete the shade, it is trimmed at the upper and lower edges with a ruche of the same ribbon.

RUGS IN THE LIVING ROOM

Should Be Selected for Their Durability as Well as to Please the Eye.

A class of rugs very commendable for their durability are the Wiltons. The patterns of these are copies of the Orientals, and will fully meet the wishes of those who admire the old Persian designs. Some of them have been taken from museum pieces both in coloring and ornament, and through expert knowledge and modern methods of coloring and weaving we are given astonishing reproductions of these old fabrics so suitable for library, living or dining room use. They are among the most desirable rugs on the market.

The familiar Axminister, a little less durable and lower in price, can also be had in first-class reproductions of the Orientals, in golden browns and greens, brightened with touches of red, and with an occasional note of black to give the proper accent to the whole. Other patterns with tan ground, the borders of which show the pear design with other Persian figures, are particularly pleasing; the coloring rich, yet soft and subdued.

BUTTONS IN GREAT VARIETY

Almost Any Kind Is In Order, and Some of Them Are Exceedingly Pretty.

Ivory buttons are of every shade seen in dress fabrics, including navy and royal blues, dark reddish plums, nut and African browns, Russian green and many more in plain and mottled effects in various shapes to match the mixtures in cloakings and dress materials. Combination buttons are of black and white, blue, red and other colors. Small fancy buttons of white pearl are half moon, square, oblong and many round ideas with different cut centers.

Very ornamental buttons are used on wide belts worn on coats. Many cloth coats are trimmed with self-covered buttons with a black edge. There are covered buttons with a fancy center and plain rim, such as a plaid silk center and plain woolen rim. A new idea is a pearl center and fabric edge.

Many a dress, coat or waist may be changed in appearance by putting on new buttons and a new collar. Small lace buttons are used for the lace striped cotton fabrics.

Homemade Fruits.

Because the little bunches of handmade tomatoes, apples, cherries, etc., were so expensive, I decided to make them of raw cotton, china silk and crepe de chine scraps. With oil paint and gasoline a girl can have a very stylish hat trimming. Take a piece of cotton and stuff it into a round scrap of silk, then draw the edges tightly. Run the needle up through the center and back again and make a strong knot. Touch up the fruit with the reds, browns and yellows of apple tints; the same process is gone through for the various fruits desired. Sew the fruit to a piece of milliner's wire and run the wire through a rubber stem taken from an old bunch of artificial flowers.—From the Delineator.

Muff's Substitute.

The very newest tailored costumes are shown without a muff, but they are trimmed with huge or medium sized collars of fur and deep cuffs, which when the bands are clasped together look exactly like a muff.

DAMAGING EVIDENCE

By LESLIE CONNER.

One by one the men in the bank returned from their vacations with tales of prowess and skill which varied according to age and circumstances, from Mr. Witherspoon, the president, to Johnny Doubleday, who ran errands.

Barrymore was last. "But not least," thought Virginia Dale with amusement.

Dick departed to the Canadian woods, and returned, as Virginia had predicted, with a story of two wonderful bucks and a moose. The heads were at a taxidermist's and when they were ready the moose was to hang in the bank.

In due time the head arrived. It really was wonderful, with antlers like the boughs of an old oak.

Virginia stopped her work a minute to watch the hanging. Dick turned at the same instant and their eyes met. Something in the girl's expression made Dick flush. After that, she was doubly sure she was right, for Dick had all the appearance of guilt.

A few weeks later, she went into a hardware store to buy a pair of scissors. As she entered, the window display held her, for as a background for a lot of firearms, cartridges and hunting knives, were hung the heads of all kinds of animals.

"That is a fine collection of animals," she said to the salesman.

The old man scratched his head. "Yes—'tis. Mr. Mooney's been a heap o' years collectin' them things. An' it was a dern sight finer before he sold the moose. I didn't want him to do it."

"Could you—do you know who bought it?"

After a rummage in the safe. "Yes, here 'tis. November twenty ninth. One hundred and seventy-five dollars. Richard D. Barrymore."

The next day Virginia went to shop in a city sixty miles away. She boarded an interurban car to return in the afternoon when she saw Dick Barrymore just ahead. The only vacant seat was right behind him and she took it. Dick occupied a seat alone and Virginia knew that the buckled bag beside him contained twenty thousand dollars.

By twos and threes along the road, the car was discharging its passengers. Dick slept.

Hardly anyone was left but themselves. Virginia discovered that even the conductor had disappeared somewhere up front. "If I were dishonest, I could easily appropriate that bag and get off at the next stop."

Then a little imp of mischief perched on a curl just over her ear. "Do it anyway," he whispered, "and give him a scare." And another imp moved her arm over the seat and closed her fingers around the handle of the bag. Shaking, she lifted it over the back and when the car stopped at Truesdale Virginia got off with Dick's satchel and twenty thousand dollars.

Early the next day she set out for the bank, arriving before any of the men. She locked the bag in her own closet and waited. But, to her perplexity, there was no commotion.

Virginia felt that she must be losing her mind. But, determined to carry her point, she took the bag home again that night.

The bell rang at eight, and she fairly gasped with relief when Dick Barrymore came in.

"Good evening, Miss Dale. I've come, if you don't mind, for my bag."

She started.

"I was only pretending sleep. There was a rumor I was to be robbed. There wasn't anything in the bag but a few stones."

Dick became very serious and looked at her oddly. "Are you sure you meant to be honest?"

"Why, Mr Barrymore!"

"Well, I have no way of knowing."

"But surely you know me better than that I—oh, you must know I am honest."

"But you don't think I am?"

She flushed and looked away quickly. "I never thought you'd steal, no! But I just had an idea that—oh, that old moose head had worried me so. You just bought it, so there!"

"I killed that moose with my own hands."

She looked her scorn.

He laughed. "You poor little soul! It was a mean revenge of mine to torment you so. Why, dear, I love the very ground you walk on. Virginia, can you ever forgive me enough to care for me just a little?"

"Per—perhaps! If you promise not to play any more jokes."

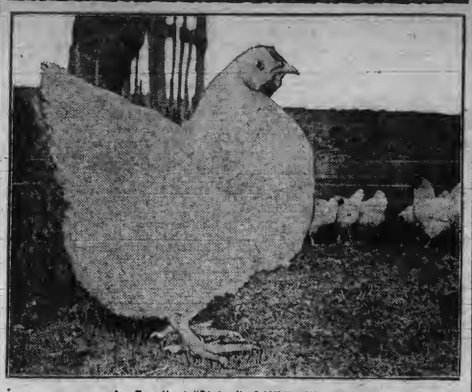
But She'll Get Home First!

A short time before Christmas Grace, aged four, of Newburg, Ind., was taken by her aunt to Evansville to do some "Christmas shopping." They went on the interurban, and had a double seat to themselves.



In the course of the afternoon they encountered the young man to whom the aunt was engaged, and he accompanied them to the depot when they were ready to start home. Grace's suspicions were aroused, and sidling up to her aunt she asked in a low and rather ungracious voice:

"Is he going home with us?"

"Yes, I think he is," replied the aunt.

"Well," sighed Grace Jeannette, recalling the double seat on the interurban, "I see where I'll have to ride backwards!"—Indianapolis News.

MAKING PREPARATIONS FOR SPRING WORK

An Excellent "String" of White Wyandottes.

Perhaps you have been raising poultry for many years but with indifferent success—just fooling along with a few hens, of many different breeds, feeding any old thing, in old, tumbledown houses, alive with mites and lice, and unclean.

Maybe you have wondered why you have not had the success that some of your neighbors had and perhaps are discouraged and ready to say there is nothing in the poultry business.

This is true if you continue in the same old way, but if you will follow a few simple rules, which every successful poultry raiser must follow, you cannot help being successful in just the degree of painstaking care with which you carry on the work.

In the first place you must have clean, well ventilated poultry houses. These do not cost much and on the average farm they can be constructed of old boards and by the labor of a handy man, in one or two days.

The houses must be provided with clean nests. Build the houses whenever possible, facing the south, leaving the front open except the covering of small mesh wire to keep out predatory animals.

If you intend to use incubators and brooders provide a comfortable brooder house which can be closed up to shut out the cold, damp drafts of early spring. Set your incubator in a warm place—in the attic, the cellar, or in some room well protected.

Next, we want to impress you with the fact that you cannot raise good chickens from poor eggs. If you are satisfied with the mixed breeds, good, bad and indifferent, there is little advice to give you as to their management.

If you propose to raise good chickens, fowls that will lay the greatest number of eggs, or produce the greatest number of pounds of meat, select your breed, and then buy purebred eggs. You can only get these by buying from breeders whose integrity is unquestioned, and who are ready to guarantee that their eggs will produce birds true to type.

Insist upon having eggs from hens and not from young pullets. Eggs from a hen that is fully grown and matured will naturally produce more birds and stronger birds than eggs from pullets who are still in a state of growth.

Sometimes it is true that pullet eggs hatch out well, but they do not produce birds with the vigor and stamina that come from mature eggs. And you will find that the chicks from pullet eggs will be more subject to disease and more will die.

If you have a good breed and raise your own eggs, separate the best hens of your flock and select the best eggs from these. Never set an egg from a hen that is puny, or that has had a touch of disease at any time, or that is any way deformed, no matter how slightly.

If you use an incubator, you must watch it day and night, and after you have learned all that the manufacturer tells you in the directions on the machine, you must use your own common sense and comply with the varying conditions of climate.

When the youngsters come out of their shell they, too, must be watched every day and be cared for in every detail all the time. Young chickens cannot be raised by any person who is frequently away from home for long intervals. One must be on the job all the time.

The most important thing in starting young chicks is to refrain from feeding them a single atom for at least 36 hours. Nature has filled their little stomachs before they left the shell and if they are stuffed as soon as they appear, many will die.

Give them plenty of water and after thirty-six hours feed them lightly on fine rolled oats or coarse cornmeal. Then, just as soon as they show strength and vigor, let them run on the tender, short grass for a little while every day.

Watch for lice from the start, and if any are found on the heads or under the wings, touch the spots lightly with lard or vaseline.

Having started right by following the above directions, your success depends upon the fidelity with which you manage the flock until they become fledged or are ready to be sent to the market.

PRINCIPAL RATION FOR EGGS

Cracked Corn, Wheat and Heavy White Oats Are Three Chief Ingredients of Mixture.

One of the principal rations used in one of the most successful laying contests of the year consists of:

	Pounds.
Cracked corn	60
Wheat	60
Heavy white oats	40
Barley	20
Kafir corn	10
Coarse beef scraps	10

We believe that plump oats, wheat, barley, cracked corn and beef scraps would give about the same results, writes M. F. Greeley in Dokota Farmer.

Six thousand eggs to the farm, is the way our statisticians have it, or about 70 eggs to the hen. And this with a goodly number of trap-nested birds producing over 200 eggs, not a few over 250 to 286. Too many roosters, old hens, late, good-for-nothing chickens and culls generally are largely the cause of this low average. Let's all try to raise it.

Since utility, and not quite so much foolery, governs the selection of prize fowls now much more than it did, the so-called moss-back farmers are taking more interest in poultry shows; and not only that but they are taking more birds home with them when they go than when birds were judged wholly by stripe, comb and feathers. Sensible farmers, refusing to be fooled, have brought much of this change about.

Test Hatching Eggs.

In selling eggs for hatching, it is a wise and a safe rule, no matter how healthy your birds seem, not to assume the eggs produced are fertile, or that they will hatch. The safe plan is to test them at home. If a setting from any given mating hatches reasonably well with you—then go ahead.

Keep Front Open.

Don't, because of freezing weather, close up the chicken house front! Cold weather is just the time to keep the front open. But stop the cracks at the back, sides and in the roof. Drafts and leaks are the trouble breeders.

HENS PRODUCING MOST EGGS

Comparison Made of Hen-Hatched Chickens and Artificially Hatched —Incubator Is Favored.

Experiments conducted by the New York State College of Agriculture, extending over a period of three years, disproved the theory that hen hatched chickens are of higher vitality than those hatched in incubators. The first year the hen matched pullets laid more eggs than the incubator hatched ones. The second year the incubator pullets succeeded, both in number and in profits, as they laid more regularly during the season when eggs were high priced. During the third year the balance was still more in favor of the artificially hatched hen. Also, she was in better condition.

The chicks were hatched from eggs of the same quality, and fed and housed in the same manner. The experiment will be continued for many years, so that more accurate conclusions can be arrived at. So far, the chicks, hatched by incubator from eggs laid by hens hatched from incubators, have proved more steady and valuable egg producers.

WHY CHICKENS CATCH COLDS

Too Close House Has Same Effect as Drafts and Exposure — Fowl Does Not Sweat.

Drafts and exposure are causes for chickens taking cold, but a too tight house will bring about same results.

The fowls come out—not sweating, for a fowl does not sweat—but fairly steaming from the heat of their own close bodies.

The cold air strikes them and they take a quick chill.

Sometimes it is their heads and eyes that first show the effects of that chill, sometimes it is the throat or lungs.

Eggs Absorb Odors.

A fresh egg will absorb odors as readily as fresh milk. Mustiness of moldy growth in egg cases or fillers will taint the egg and lower its quality.

FARM ANIMALS

EFFECTIVE REMEDY FOR LICE

Important Question Right Now Because Pest Is More Troublesome In Winter Than Summer.

(By R. C. ASHBY, University Farm, St. Paul, Minn.)

It has been estimated that a 150-pound hog has 92,000 drops of blood. Suppose he is supporting 1,000 lice and each takes one drop of blood per day. What per cent of his blood will be lost daily, and who will pay the bill?

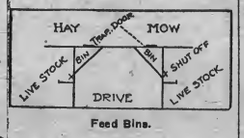
The question is important right now, for lice are worse in winter than in summer. The hogs pile up closely and spend much time in their beds. The lice take advantage of the situation and breed rapidly.

To remove the lice is neither difficult nor expensive. Dipping or spraying with coal-tar compounds is dangerous in winter, but three other treatments are available. These are:

1. Equal parts kerosene and machine oil mixed together and applied with an oil can, brush or swab.

2. Crude oil (thinned with kerosene, if too thick), applied with a brush or as a spray.

3. Powdered staphisagria dusted on the pigs, or steeped as a tea and applied with a brush or as a spray.



For a small bunch the first treatment is the most convenient, but when one has many hogs the crude oil is cheaper. Be sure to apply behind the ears and in both flanks. The lice prefer folds of the skin.

Clean the beds and pens thoroughly, also. If these are thoroughly sprayed with the oil, there should be no further trouble from the lice. If the hogs sleep in straw sheds, one can keep them free from lice by treating them every two weeks. Try it!

FEED BINS MADE CONVENIENT

Can Be Built Beneath Hay Floor Where Stock Is Kept—Much Time and Labor Is Saved.

Handy feed bins can be built beneath the floor of hay drive where stock is kept below the hay. Slanted as shown, the grain falls into the spout leading into a box to catch the waste, says a writer in Western Farmer. A shutoff slide fits into end of spout. The spout may be made to empty into alley or where most convenient. This saves labor and time, because you fill the bins through trap doors in floor above and there is no lifting at any time.

FEED FOR FATTENING STEERS

Result of Interesting Experiment at South Dakota Station With Silage and Mill Products.

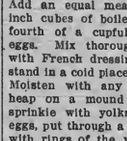
The South Dakota station reports a test made in which three lots of yearling steers of four head each were fed during a 145-day feeding period, each lot receiving all the silage the steers would eat and 12 pounds of a by-product, this being for lot one oil meal, lot two cotton seed meal, and lot three dried distillers' grains. The average daily gains per head were 2.45, 1.95, and 2.17 pounds, respectively; and during the first ninety days 2.69, 2.08, and 2.48 pounds. The estimated cost per pound of gain was 5.86, 6.44, and 5.5 cents.

In two other lots grain was substituted for one-half, by weight, of the silage fed in the former lots, lot four receiving oats and lot five, corn. The former lot made average daily gains of 2.18 pounds per head, the latter 2.09, and during the first ninety days 2.3 and 2.01 pounds, respectively, costing 6.88 and 8.22 cents per pound of gain. The average amount of gain for the 146-day feeding period was as follows: Lot one, 19.7 pounds of silage and 1.2 pounds of oil meal; lot two, 21.2 pounds of silage and 1.5 pounds of cotton seed meal; lot three, 20.8 pounds of silage and 1.3 pounds of dried distilled grains; lot four, 10.9 pounds of silage and 4.7 pounds of oats; and lot five, 11.6 pounds of silage and 5.9 pounds of shelled corn.

Danger With Alfalfa.

Avoid letting horses overfeed on alfalfa hay, as there is danger of causing kidney trouble. A rule that has been followed successfully in feeding alfalfa hay is to give one pound of hay for every 100 pounds of horse weight.

Time for Watering Horse.



Water taken into the stomach of a horse is bound to go in quickly. If given after feeding, it will carry much undigested food with it. Before meals is the time for watering.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

Salt your food with humor, pepper it with wit, and sprinkle over it the charm of good-fellowship. Never poison it with the cares of life.

FISH DISHES.

We may now have nearly all varieties of fish canned which formerly were to be obtained only in certain localities. Usually fish is less expensive than meat, is a valuable food to built tissue and is usually easy of digestion.

Herring Salad.—Cook salt herring in boiling salted water to cover, fifteen minutes. Drain, cool, and separate into flakes; there should be a cupful. Add an equal measure of one-third inch cubes of boiled potatoes and a fourth of a cupful of hard cooked eggs. Mix thoroughly and moisten with French dressing; cover and let stand in a cold place until well chilled. Moisten with any cooked dressing, heap on a mound of crisp lettuce, sprinkle with yolks of hard cooked eggs, put through a ricer, and garnish with rings of the white of egg with bits of parsley.

Shattuck Halibut.—Wipe a one and a half pounds chicken halibut with a piece of damp cheese cloth. Put into a buttered fire-proof dish, sprinkle with salt and pepper and arrange five thick slices of fresh tomatoes over the fish. Sprinkle the tomatoes with a third of a cupful of green peppers, shredded and bake twenty-five minutes in a moderate oven, basting four times during the baking with butter and liquid from the pan.

Baked Fish.—Wash a four-pound fish and sprinkle well inside with salt. Put it in the ice chest for two hours. Stuff it with crumbs seasoned with butter, grated onion, lemon juice, the grated rind, salt and pepper. A few oysters may be added if enjoyed. Sew up the fish and place in a dripping pan to bake. Cover with slices of bacon and reduce the heat after the first twenty minutes; bake until the fish is tender. The last few minutes of baking the pork may be removed, the fish sprinkled with crumbs and browned in the oven.

Creole Halibut.—Make a well-seasoned tomato sauce, strain it and pour over a two-pound slice of halibut, sprinkle with a dozen cloves and bake in a hot oven forty minutes. Baste every five minutes with the sauce and garnish with parsley.

HELPFUL IDEAS.

Spend an hour or two each week in preparing the menus for the week.

You will be pleased with the freedom from the constant strain of wondering, planning and guessing what you are going to get for dinner. It is a most fascinating game and one much more gratifying than that of "solitaire"- or a puzzle picture, for you are doing something really worth while, besides entertaining yourself. If for no other reason than economy a woman should follow this system, for you will be surprised with the saving in your buying, as you can plan for left-overs and combinations that will give variety without extra cost.

For example if you are serving green peas as a vegetable one day, take out two or three tablespoonfuls to be used as a garnish for a salad or a neat dish. By placing these leftovers in a cool place and planning for them the meals are made much more attractive.

A cupful of tomato saved from a can can go over some sliced roast beef, sliced potatoes, a little gravy and a sprinkling of onion; garnish with the peas and bake. This is a dish called Spanish, but will be made pro-American in any family that tries it once.

Spend a day, a month, looking over all clothing. See that hooks and eyes are in place, take out any spots, brush and press skirts, put in fresh ruching in necks or collars and cuffs. A small wardrobe well kept will mark you for a better-dressed woman than a large one carelessly and badly kept.

A list for the guest room should be typewritten and kept where it can be consulted to see that all such things are in readiness for the coming guest. Cards and stationery in the desk and a few stamps will be a source of comfort, for they are so often needed. Sewing materials, pins, shoe horn, safety-pins, button hook, whisk broom, hand glass and, of course, the necessary toilet articles such as towels, soap, wash cloths and bottles of listerine, hand lotion and cold cream, these last will mark you are a thoughtful hostess.

DAIRY

MILKING THREE TIMES DAILY

Custom Among More Advanced Dairymen of Denmark—Practice Prevents Congestion of Udder.

What are our dairy cows for? Do we keep them as lawn ornaments, or as a source of milk supply? Shall the dairyman drive his cows from door to door, as dairy cows and goats are driven in some countries, milking as much and as often as his patronage demands as long as his supply holds out, or shall he use more improved methods? Shall he milk once a day, as was the practice some hundreds of years ago, and is yet the custom in some places, or shall he milk three times, as is the custom among the more advanced dairymen in Denmark? Shall the cow be given the opportunity to show her capacity by the removal of her milk product as often as seems necessary, or shall we dry her down to suit our convenience in milking?

As our population and the cost of food products increases, milk as one of the most valuable of food products will also increase in price, and in the near future it will be as customary for dairymen to milk cows three times a day during the earlier portion of the lactation period as it is now to milk but twice. Indeed, owing to the wonderful milk-producing qualities of Holstein-Friesian cows, in order to avoid congestion of the udder it is the common practice among those having the better cows to milk three times daily for many weeks after freshening.

VALUE OF CREAM SEPARATOR

Expert of Missouri Agricultural College Says 25 Per Cent More Cream Secured From Milk.

"The farmer who uses a cream separator obtains as much milk from four cows as is obtained from five cows where cream is raised in a pan," says C. H. Eckles of the Missouri College of Agriculture. The separator method gets 25 per cent more cream from the milk and this will pay for a separator in a year in a dairy herd of ten or more cows. As the cream is separated while fresh and sweet, ripening can be controlled and butter of much better grade can be secured than if the cream is raised by gravity. The use of a separator lightens the work for the housewife. The machine is kept in a small room adjoining the barn and only the separator parts are brought from the house. These, instead of numerous pans and crocks, are returned to the kitchen for washing after the fresh skim milk has been fed to the calves and pigs.

A well-made separator will last for years, in spite of the fact that it is put into service twice a day. The separator should run from four to six years without repairs, if reasonable care is used.

COWS REQUIRE MUCH WATER

Practice of Watering Herd But Once Daily Is Not to Be Recommended —Three Times Is Better.

It is a mistake to be satisfied with watering the herd but once a day. If they can be induced to drink twice or three times a day, it should be done. Cows need much water.

It has been found that the average milch cow requires about 81 pounds of water a day while in milk (nearly ten gallons), and about 54 pounds while dry. Of this, the cow in milk takes rather more than two-thirds (say seven gallons) as drink, and the rest in her food, while the dry cow takes rather less than two-thirds as drink, and a little more than one-third in the food.

TO REMOVE WARTS ON TEATS

Rub Affected Parts Daily With Castor Oil or Goose Grease—Cut Off the Large Ones.

Warts on a cow's teats will disappear after a time if the affected parts are rubbed once or twice daily with best castor oil or fresh goose grease.

A large wart, having a narrow base, should be snipped off with scissors, and the bleeding stopped by applying powder or solution.

If it starts to grow again, cauterize the part with lunar caustic pencil.

No "Booze" for Big Business.

A workman for the Illinois Steel Company in Chicago recently secured a better job in Pittsburg, and before he left his fellow-workmen gave him a banquet at a hotel with twenty-five foremen and clerical workers as guests. There was a cocktail at every plate. When the men left the table not a cocktail had been touched. This story is told by a writer in The Sunday-School Times, to show how the anti-liquor campaign in industry is working out. An investigation, says Mr. C. W. Baines, in the Philadelphia weekly, was recently made among the great steel and iron concerns of Ohio, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois to ascertain their attitude toward alcohol, and the corporations, some operating more than one plant, and with an aggregate capital of over a billion dollars, were included. The report says Mr. Baines, is not meant for a Sunday-school document. It is rather, "a cold-blooded business and economical deliverance, intended to determine industry's hostility toward alcoholic drink and drinkers, which has been very indefinitely discust in the public press; to throw an illuminating ray of light on its attitude toward the movement for abstinence and prohibition in commercial life." It does not concern itself with the moral aspects of the drink-question, but, it insisted, "we must not have our Sunday-school boys ignorant of the attitude of our business-princes toward the imbibers of bad booze." Of the 140 corporations 113 replied to the inquiry. Mr. Baines thus classifies the returns:

"1. Of the 113 answers only six permit the use of alcoholic drink in their shops or plants.

"2. One hundred and seven firms the world's greatest steel and iron producers, absolutely prohibit the use of strong drink in their works. Almost without exception, they testify that the abstainer is more efficient, more reliable, and that teetotalers alone ar considered when promotions are made.

"3. One hundred companies prohibiting drinking during working hours report that they are also doing 'everything possible to prevent drinking by employees out of working hours.' One corporation discharges any man who enters a saloon going to or from work; another suspends such an employee one week for the first offense, and for the second he is, usually discharged.

"4. Eighty-three of the 113 concerns when employing or promoting men discriminate against those who use alcoholic liquors even tho they use liquor outside of working hours only; absolutely refuse to promote men who drink; there the most moderate use of rum is fatal to a man's chance of promotion.'

"5. Sixty-three corporations have undertaken constructive abstinence-work, to determine the delet erious influences of the moderate use of alcohol upon a workman's efficiency, producing power, and reliability.

"6. Ten concerns not only prohibit drinking during work hours, but absolutely prohibit employees drinking at all times.'

Of some sixty statements in these replies the following are said to be typical:

"When it becomes necessary to reduce the force, regular drinkers are the first ones let go."—Lockhart Iron & Steel Company, Pennsylvania.

"We do not allow any liquor on the premises, discharge immediately any man under the influence, preach abstinence through foremen and bulletin-board literature, and we are succeeding famously. Most important is the fact that our men also see the good of it."—Interstate Steel & Iron Co., East Chicago.

"The efficiency of a man is reduced in exact proportion to the amount of alcohol he drinks. The total abstainer ranks above the moderate drinker in reliability and efficiency in all classes of work nearly as much as the moderate drinker does above the heavy, regular drinker."—The Follansbee Furnace Co., Follansbee, W. Virginia.

"The moderate use of liquor tends to impair efficiency and reliability, and we do not knowingly employ men who drink, nor advance them to positions of authority if they are employed."—The Crane Company, Chicago.

In this industrial antialcohol campaign, we read further, electric signs and posters play no part—

"Over the main entrance to several steel plants can be seen such large electric temperance-teaching transparencies as:

DID BOOZE EVER DO YOU ANY GOOD?

DID BOOZE EVER GET YOU A BETTER JOB?

DID BOOZE EVER CONTRIBUTE ANYTHING TO THE HAPPINESS OF YOUR FAMILY?

"Throughout another plant this bulletin, signed by the general superintendent and approved by the president, is posted in conspicuous places:

"For the promotion of safety and welfare it is hoped that all employees will avoid the use of intoxicating liquors.

"Under the rules of the Joliet Works any employee who uses intoxicating liquor while on duty will be discharged.

"In making promotions in all departments of the plant superintendents of departments and foremen will select for promotion only those who do not use intoxicating liquor."

This movement, according to Mr. Baines, has attracted the attention of the liquor trade papers, one of which has called "the steady and increasing tendency of big corporations to encroach upon the personal liberties of workers" one of "the most pregnant signs of the times." And The Brewers' Journal is quoted as saying:

"There are even companies and individual employers who threaten to discharge for drinking alcohol at any time. They do not care if that is social and economic slavery. Their main object is to protect their pocketbooks."

A Boy's Pockets.

The contents of a boy's pockets are pretty good indications of the boy's character.

The boy who loves nature will fill his pockets with pebbles, shells, bark of trees, bugs, worms, in short, with anything that he desires to study. One boy of my acquaintance went to school with a couple of snakes in his pockets, but to his great sorrow the reptiles shared the facte of Mary's lamb.

The boy with a mechanical turn of mind will be pretty apt to treasure a six-inch rule, a pencil, and some bits of wood, wire and twine. He will also be apt to have a half dozen queer contrivances, the result of his inventive genius.

The idle thoughtless boy will put anything and everything into his pockets, without regard for "rhyme or reason." Articles wholly worthless will predominate.

The degenerate, and the boy who has fallen into bad company will treasure cigar stubs, cigarettes and matches, broken pipes, tobacco, bad pictures and bad literature.

The teachers in our great public schools realize clearly that to know a boy you must first know his pockets. They have made astounding discoveries, some that were tragical indeed.

What kind of a boy do your pockets indicate?—Exchange.

A dispatch from Frankfort states that only a partial distribution of the March payment due the teachers will be made by Superintendent Gilbert. This condition is brought about by the law which prevents the transfer of fines and forfeitures of dog tax and other revenues to the State school fund until the end of the fiscal year June 30. The total amount of the March distribution due the teachers is $556,000 and of this amount $190,000 will be disbursed.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

The milk and butter to make the demonstration at the institute held here recently was furnished by W. Lee Johnson, and the butter, tested 93 per cent, which is a remarkably good showing and was very favorably commented on by the demonstrator. The instructor gave some very valuable suggestions regarding feeding and caring for cows, and very strongly recommended the use of silos on the dairy farm.

The Cincinnati Southern Railroad Company is arranging to build a string cement retaining wall on the north side of its tracks through the town of Walton. In making the double tracks for the road the banks were cut into such a depth that the earth has been sloping and endangering the property, and it has been determined that nothing but a strong retaining wall would remedy the trouble. At the property of Dr. D. M. Bagby, the bank is caved considerably. It is estimated that the improvement will cost about ten thousand dollars. Work will begin as soon as the material can be placed on the ground.

"Aunt" Polly Pope, one of the oldest residents of Kenton county, died at her home at Nicholson, March 4th, in her 87th year, from the infirmities of age. Mrs. Pope was beloved by everybody for her loving disposition and kindly nature, and her many years of usefulness were marked throughout by acts of kindness and charity, and her life was blessing to many. For forty-eight years she was a faithful member of Hickory Grove Baptist church, and her christian life was one of fortitude and forbearance. She leaves three daughters, and two sons; one sister and two brothers, to mourn the loss of a kind and indulgent parent and loving sister. She had forty-four grandchildren and 45 great grand children. She was an aunt of Dr. Lee Bird of Latonia. The funeral took place Tuesday at the Hickory Grove Baptist church, and was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends and relatives. Rev. A. K. Johnson of Walton, conducted the funeral service preaching a very appropriate discourse over the remains, after which the body was placed in the embrace of Mother Earth to await the resurrection morn.

Rev. Everett Wade Bedinger died at his home at Anchorage, Jefferson county, Monday, March 6th, in his eighty-sixth year, and the remains were brought to his old home at Richwood, where the interment took place last Wednesday afternoon. He was born in Kenton county where the town of Erlanger is now situated. He leaves a widow, his second wife, and twelve living children, six by each wife. His first wife was a Miss Lucas, of Jefferson county, Virginia, and his second wife was a Miss Billmyer, of the same county and State. Dr. Bedinger has a large number of relatives in this county and Cincinnati. His mother was a daughter of David Everett Wade, one of the earliest settlers in Cincinnati, settling there in 1790. The deceased was a son of Dr. Benj. Franklin Bedinger a celebrated physician and a member of a family that played a leading part in the early history of Kentucky. He graduated from Yale College in 1851, and in 1858 received his degree from the Theological College at Danville, Ky., and was ordained a minister of the Presbyterian church, his first charge being at Richwood, this county. At the outbreak of the Civil war he went to Virginia and joined the Confederate army and was in many hard fought battles, and at the close of hostilities he held the rank of captain. In 1870 he returned to Kentucky and became pastor of Anchorage Presbyterian church and head of Bellwood Seminary. He gave up his church work in 1885 to engage in evangelistic work in the State, but retired from active work in 1893, though he had since filled pulpits in many churches in the absence of the regular pastor.

For men who got away to a false start on a pipe or home-made cigarettes Prince Albert has a word or two for what ails their smokeappetites!

Forget you ever tried to smoke, for Prince Albert is so different, such a fine flavor, so cool and cheerful and friendly, you'll get a new idea of smoke joy! The patented process fixes that—and cuts out bite and parch!

And this little preachment is also for men who think they're on the right track. All to be said is that the sooner you lay out a nickel or a dime for a supply of Prince Albert, the sooner you'll make a discovery that'll be worth a lot to your peace of mind and tongue!

Get the idea of smoking all you want without a comeback—that's P. A.!

Buy Prince Albert all over the civilized world! Toppy red bags, 5c; tidy red tins, 10c; pound and half-pound tin humidors—and that classy crystal-glass pound humidor with sponge-moistener top that keeps the tobacco in such fine shape—always!

On the reverse side of this tidy red tin you will read: "Process Patented July 30th, 1907," which has made three men smoke pipes where one smoked before!

THE GRIM REAPER

Calls to His Reward Another One of The County's Best and Most Substantial Citizens.

Jerry Beemon, in his 79th year, who resided at the top of the Gunpowder creek hill, about two and a half miles out on the Burlington and Florence pike, died of diabetes last Friday about 1 p. m. His wife, who was a Miss Utz, died about ten years ago. Two children, C. E. Beemon and Mrs. J. W. Quigley, survive him. The funeral was preached at Hopeful church at 11 a. m., last Sunday, and was attended by a concourse of relatives and friends, as large, if not the largest that ever assembled at Hopeful on a like occasion.

Mr. Beemon devoted his life to farm pursuits at which he labored incessantly and was quite successful. He was a quiet, intelligent gentleman, a good neighbor, a kind and indulgent father, and one of the county's best and most substantial citizens. He was a member of a generation that has about passed from the scene of action in this county and among which were numbered many of the county's best and noblest citizens. REMARKABLE FEAT OF AN AUTOMOBILE.

By special arrangement with city officials and permit from chief of police, A Hudson Super-Six was sent over California Street Hill from Montgomery Street to Fairmont Hotel at noon, Feb. 12th, at high rate of speed on high gear. This is a very long, steep hill, the steepest part being four blocks in length, leaving from the heart of the financial and banking district, up to the city's finest and most prominent hotel located on the crest of the hill, and the highest point in San Francisco. The Hudson Super-Six was the first and only car ever having gone up this hill on high gear. Very few cars have ever made it in second gear.

Advance announcement of the event had been made in morning papers and eight or ten thousand people gathered to witness the performance. The run was most spectacular in character, with policemen at each crossing holding the traffic, along with a battery of cameramen and moving picture machines, as well as newspaper men.

The play Joshua Blodgett, which was postponed on account of the death of a near relative of two of those participating, will be given Saturday evening April 1st, at Library Hall, Burlington, Ky.

OWEN COUNTY'S GOOD ROADS

Meeting Largely Attended at The Courthouse.

Last Saturday he representative farmers and business men of the county met at the court house to discuss ways and means of repairing the roads of the county and to devise plans for assisting the county and state in this great task. It was very evident that the people are in earnest and are willing and ready to raise considerable sums of money by local subscription to enable the county to avail itself of the full amount of State Aid. This is the spirit that will bring about the improvement in our road system that has been so long under discussion. Everybody interested in good roads should not hesitate to subscribe liberally to the cause, as it will not only expedite travel, and transportation of commodities and farm products, but will increase the valuation of the land very materially. What are you going to do when the subscription committee waits upon you? Are you desirous to put Owen county on the map with well improved highways, or are you indifferent to this matter which so vitally concerns the welfare of the county? Let us go to work and get our full amount of State Aid, and have roads that will be a pride to all who have contributed and invaluable asset to the county at large.—Owen County Democrat.

Only Imagination.

County Road Engineer Charles Goodridge tells this one on himself: Some years ago he was attending a sale during a season of mud and water, and to protect himself he wore a pair of rubber boots. Along about the middle of the day he stepped on a plank in which was a long, rusty nail that pierced the sold of the boot extending far enough through to inflict an ugly wound in his foot. It was with considerable trouble that the nail was extracted from the bottom of the boot which he did not remove from his foot, also he realized that the blood was flowing freely from the wound the pain from which increased as the day passed, and by the time the sale was over he had become quite lame. He hastened home to have the wound treated, although it had never been examined. By the time he reached home he was very lame and had visions of an attack of tetanus, and as he entered the house he called to his wife to bring him a pan of warm water and the bottle of turpentine quickly. He seated himself and began removing his boot and had succeeded by the time his wife complied with his request, when they began to search for the wound made by the rusty nail and to this day they have not succeeded in finding it. Only imagination.

Scared Away.

An attempt to rob Quigley & Beemon's general store at Limaburg was made about 7 o'clock last Thursday night. The party or parties who attempted the job had succeeded in opening a window in the rear of the building, when James Petitt, who lives about thirty yards from the store, heard them, and started to secure the assistance of a neighbor in an effort to capture the thieves, who, in some manner, by means of a look-out no doubt, discovered what was being done, and took their departure. The robbery was attempted just about the time Mr. Jerry Beemon, the father of one, and the father-in-law of the other member of the firm was dying at his home half mile away, and for that reason it is believed local talent was attempting the burglary. The store was closed early that afternoon on account of the serious illness of Mr. Beemon, and it is supposed the would-be burglars were aware of that fact and expected to be able to do the job and not be molested, as the attention of everybody in the neighborhood would be directed to the home of the dying man near by.

All Over the County.

Petersburg has begun spring gardening on a small scale.

Belleview is mourning the outlook for no base ball club this year.

Rabbit Hashers are working day and night on their steeds preparing them for Rising Sun Jockey Day.

Big Bone is awaiting the hum of the water bottling plant soon to begin operations there.

Beaver is looking forward to Mrs. Ossman's spring millinery opening.

Verona is gazing with pride upon her handsome school building.

Walton is booming along at the head of the procession.

Union is figuring on several new bungalows.

Florence is whooping it up for the new fair.

Erlanger is awaiting the coming of the traction road.

Cost of Joy Rides Reduced.

Some of the local autoists have been figuring on the cost of Sunday joy rides with gasoline at 40 cents a gallon, and even at that price they say they can save money as compared with last year, because of the reduction of toll and the lid being on in Kenton county.

State News.

Nearly $3,000 in prizes will be given in the Jersey cattle exhibit at the next State Fair, Kentucky having taken over the National Cattle Show given up by Chicago.

Mrs. C. D. Dinwiddle has sold from two cows 1,430 gallons of milk and $198.50 worth of butter. Is there anyone in the county who can beat this with two cows? The milk and butter she sold in two years amounted to $510.—Franklin Favorite.

Gene Hopson, a negro on trial at Princeton, for bootlegging and malicious cutting, acted as his own lawyer and made two speeches to the jury. On the first charge he was acquitted and on the second fined $60.—Hopkinsville Kentuckian.

Mrs. William McCoy, of Sadieville, is the owner of a hen that deserves the blue ribbon as the champion "hatcher" of the world. This hen has hatched 14 chicks from a setting of 14 eggs on the 14th day of March for three years in succession.—Georgetown News.

One of the largest corn shipments from this county was made the first of the week, when the corn product of L. C. Hibbs was bought by J. F. Hamby and shipment made of more than 5,000 bags, or approximately 12,000 bushels, ranging in price from 65 to 65½ cents per bushel at the landing here.—Livingston Enterprise.

Henderson. — Receiving a flat refusal from the Fiscal Court for a commission to expend the proceeds of the road bond issue in the event it is successful the Good Roads Association will go before the people of the county in an endeavor to force the Magistrates by public opinion to change their action and provide for the commission to handle the funds.

Mr. B. F. Brian, of Colesburg, informs the Mirror that he killed a garter snake three and one-half feet in length, which had come to the surface of the earth to enjoy the warmth of the sun. Mr. Brian is of the opinion that whenever snakes make their appearance that it is a strong sign that winter has about broken and that spring is at hand.—Elizabethtown Mirror.

That hemp in this county is higher than the proverbial "cat's back," and perhaps higher than was ever known in the history of this product, was well illustrated the other day, when Mr. H. H. Hager, of this county, bought one load, just an ordinary farm wagon load, which he has sold to Spears & Co., of this city, that brought him the sum of $448. We call this "going some."—Lancaster Central Record.

Mt. Sterling, March 20.—For the first time in many years cattle from North and South Carolina, Tennessee and Alabama were on the local market today for sale. Twenty-five hundred head were offered of common quality. They were in heavy demand and sold by the head as high as 11 cents a pound, with many sales at eight and 10 cents. Three hundred mules were offered, selling at from $100 to $260 each. The market was one of the strongest ever seen here for the quality.

Luther Holmes, of Mt. Vernon, is one of the county's best hog raisers. He aims to raise hogs for the money and never has failed to bring the bacon home. Last week he sold seven fat hogs that averaged 188 pounds at 8½ cents, or a total of $115.50. These seven hogs were from one litter of pigs. The sow had nine pigs and he raised seven. He has made a record with this brood sow during the past year that is hard to beat. He has sold $185 worth of hogs, and put four in his meat larder. We doubt if this record can be beaten in the county.—Falmouth Outlook.

The Chicago Tribune, which pro claims itself "the World's Greatest Paper," has a leading article on preparedness, of which the following paragraph is a fair specimen:

"With a few honorable exceptions the United States Senate is a composition of ignorance, selfishness, personal avarice, political greed, stupidity, blatancy, flamboyance and asininity as to be equaled only by the same compo sition to be found in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress."

The trouble with this writing is that it is false, and further that it is feeble. The writer no doubt believed he was excelling Junius or Swift. It convinces no one and it moves no one except to disgust.

Great has been the fall of the Tribune since Joseph Medill made it a power in the land, respected and feared by both parties. It may be that thirst for war "doth work like poison in the blood." At any rate, some influence has brought the editor of the Tribune to a condition of irresponsibility reached by no other editor, not even the editors Hearst employs.—Louisville Post.

Advice to Leap Year Girls

Cleveland, Ohio.—To all daughters of Eve who have leap year intentions the vocational guide and well known bachelor, William J. Kibby, today offers advice concerning the habits, characteristics and dispositions, of various sorts of men, which is intended to help the girls win their hearts desire without suffering rebuff in the process. A good deal of what Kibby says is based upon phrenology. A man who has thin straight lips is branded as a cold blooded, stony hearted creature upon whom the dearest girl's appeal would have no affect. This sort of a man will do his own proposing, run his own wedding and rule his household; and he'll do it more with his head than his heart. But if the man of your choice has full, wellformed lips, Kibby says you may depend upon his capacity for an inclination to love. He also is susceptible to the right sort of feminine approach. Kibby says the way to tell when the one you love loves you, is by the coloring of the under lip when he is with you. Every human emotion gives some physical demonstration when it is aroused. The evidence that love has been aroused is given by the deep crimsoning of the upper lip. If it is perpetually pale when he is with you, he does not love you. If it is crimson and you want him, grab him quick; he won't run. A man with a broad, square, massive forehead is a good business man; he can plan ahead, has good business judgment. If the crown of his head is high and round he is absolutely conscientious, too; and if the back of his head is well rounded out he will love his home, his wife and his children and show them consideration above everything else in the world. The man whose head is flat on top, flat and almost even with his ears in the back and narrow of forehead shortened on the front; whose lips are thin whose eyes are cold, will not make a good husband in any sense of the word, says Kibby. The longer a man's jaw bone, the greater his capacity for affection, according to Kibby. All these things are applicable to women as to men, in the expert's opinion.

1. Don't propose to a man with thin lips. He will scorn you.

2. Don't propose to a man who has just a thin upper lip. He will scorn you.

3. Don't propose to a man whose head runs straight up from the back of his neck. He loves neither home nor wife.

4. Don't propose to a man with a super critical eye. He'll make you sorry.

5. Don't propose to a man who has a restraint, quiet, indifferent manner or a purely selfish disposition.

6. Propose to a man who has full but not too full lips. He will love you.

7. Propose to a man who has a good sized bump at the base of his head. He's a good family man and loves wife and home.

8. If you love a man who has a twinkle in his eye, propose to him. You'll get him, too.

9. If you love a man who has a frank, open manner, you'll probably get him, too.

10. If you want a money maker, get one whose forehead is broad and long. He will bring home the cash every time.

Held to Grandjury

L. S. Corbin, of Lexington, was arrested on a charge of conducting a lottery. At his examining trial he was bound over to the grand jury. The warrant was sworn out on an affidavit by Mr. Deward Wills, following a number of complaints by local merchants. The man was released under $100 bond. Judge J. M. Benton, former Circuit Judge of this district, was retained by Corbin as counsel and this was Judge Benton's first case in this city since he returned to the practice of law. It is charged that Corbin was solicitor and collector for a Lexington clothing firm, which conducts an alleged lottery. The plan, it is charged, consists of each subscriber to a club paying 30 cents a week with the privilege of drawing each week for a suit of clothes. The warrant specifically charged Corbin with "assisting and abbetting in carrying on and conducting and promoting a lottery and gift enterprise." The penalty on conviction is a heavy fine and a term in the penitentiary. Corbin claims he is innocent of the charge. He says he has been operating here for the Lexington firm during the past fifteen weeks.

Essay on Sunrise

Sunrise is what people are always sentenced to be shot at.

In some cases this is the first time that the victim has either seen the sun rise or been shot at.

If he has been half shot the night before he does not see the sun rice.

Those who have seen the sun rise speak very highly of it.

But we do not let them fool us.

Associating with the sun rise it is poetically presumed to make men better.

But look at the milk man.

Getting up with the sun is a much overestimated stunt.

To begin with the sun is neither benefitted nor impressed with our efforts.

It doesent help him to get up to have us rise at the same time and he goes right off and leaves us, anyway.

For our part, we think it is excruciatingly bad taste to stand and rubber while anything gets up.

The orb of the day has little enough chance for privacy, as it is with everybody gawking while he goes to bed.

The Fight at Verdun

(A description written by Lord Northcliffe, the famous publisher of the London Times.)

I would begin by saying that in this great struggle night and day all sense of time and being is submerged. The only thing that seems to put a check upon the activities of the fiercely contending forces is a heavy fog, and night, of course, stops the flying men, upon whose observations so much of the effect of the modern artillery fire depends. But at night there is a great deal of sniping.

It is at night that most of the tricks of war are played by one enemy upon the other. At night the rear of the front on both sides is alive with the bringing up of shells, food and men who have been resting. At night brave men crawl out and occasionally succeed in bringing back wounded who would otherwise freeze to death or die of exhaustion.

At the first glimpse of dawn begins the terrific music of the guns. Both sides began this war with guns, the greatest proportion of which were of three-inch caliber. The French seventy-fives, the German seventy-sevens and the English three-inch are, roughly, the same.

Of these, the French seventy-fives, and the men behind them are the best in the war. I have watched the effect of the simultaneous firing of batteries of four of these guns on a given point more than three miles away, and it is such that men are swept down as wheat before the reaper.

The French gun has no recoil. I have seen one fired with a glass of water placed on it as an experiment, and the water was not spilled.

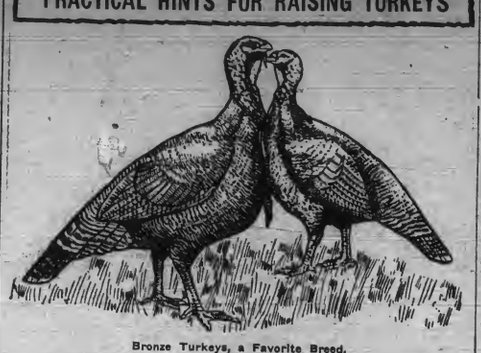
As the war has progressed the size of the guns has been doubled, even tripled. Shrapnel shells, which burst and throw fragments over wide areas, have been partly superseded by shells filled with all sorts of new explosives.

People do not realize that war is changing every day, and that the machinery of war is improving every day.

The gunners themselves are becoming more expert. As a rule, by comparison with the infantry, they are not killed in anything like such numbers, so that there are scores of thousands of artillery men today who have been practicing in the real school of war since August 1914.

With the improvement in artillery and explosives, however, has come an improvement in methods of defense—deeper trenches, some thirty-feet down; higher parapets, steel shelters, steel helmets, communicating trenches thru which the men can run about and get away from the front trenches almost as rapidly as rabbits, so that the rate of killing is not now much greater than it was at the first battle of Ypres, when the men had not learned the power of modern artillery or how to stop asphyxiating gas.

The projectors, which commenced by using chlorine gas, now are using gas of a chemical with the composition of which I am not acquainted. It has curious effects. One, for instance, is that it poisons any food with which it comes into contact, causing death thereby. Another is that it seemingly has no effect on the moment of inhalation, but may kill the men two days after he has breathed it.



Lent

Enters Lent once more, a solemn season for those who observe it in the ancient fashion, a useful period for those who regard it in accordance with modern custom. Originally forty days before Easter sanctified by the Roman, Eastern and Greek churches, it has been adopted in similar form by some other churches, while nearly all Christian people take cognizance of it to common advantage. To the religious, Lent is a season of very real meaning, a hallowed period. To the more worldly but respectful it comes if not as a time of religious piety, at least as one of sober restraint. Frivolity is set aside, less strenuous forms of relaxation are indulged. Minds and bodies tired by social activities are given a rest. It isn't a season of retreat for such, merely of quiet refreshment. Society finds new amusements less garnish than usual. Kindly thoughts are welcomed and entertainments partake of charitable enterprises. What of my neighbor? is the spirit fostered and the poor are made richer through the ministrations of the more fortunately placed. Merely a fad? perhaps. But what of it? Why quarrel with any of the means through which good works are done?—Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

Aquatic Food Plants.

The collections of aquatic food plants secured in a recent expedition to China are of special interest. These include water chestnuts, water nuts, and a number of aquatic bulbs, as well as the water bamboo. The Chinese, the department's explorer found, have mastered thru centuries of experiments the process of using swamp lands for the raising of food crops, and their success is believed to point to commercial possibilities for some of our swamp regions where reclamation by drainage is not practicable. The kauba, sometimes called wild rice or water bamboo, now to be made the subject of experiment, is a vegetable of taste somewhat between grass and asparagus. The swollen stalks of the plant are eaten much like our asparagus. The ordinary bamboo, contrary to the pfevailing opinion, is not an aquatic plant, and for successful cultivation calls for fertile and well-drained soil.—Weekly News Letter.

PRACTICAL HINTS FOR RAISING TURKEYS

Bronze Turkeys, a Favorite Breed.

(By MRS. A. WOOD.)

Young turkeys are not any harder to raise than chickens, if one is careful never to inbreed and keep them free from lice and mites.

I set all the eggs under chicken hens so as to keep my turkeys laying. When the eggs pipped I put them in the incubator, which was set with chicken eggs. Every egg that pipped hatched and they did not harm the other eggs in the least.

It wasn't an unusual thing to have every egg of a setting hatch, and never more than one that didn't hatch.

I never let the young turkeys run with the turkey hen because she takes them too far from home, and it is easier to keep them free from lice when they are raised by hand.

I do not feed the poults for 24 hours after hatching. Then I don't have any trouble teaching them to eat. Soak bread in milk and squeeze it dry for them for two or three days, then feed fine cracked corn mixed with clabber cheese.

I never feed black pepper, as so many do, nor very many hard-boiled eggs; and I raise more turkeys than those who do, in this neighborhood.

Then let them have as much freedom as possible, for they like to pick bugs and tender grass. If they are kept at night in a house that has roosts, they will soon fly on them and do better than if left on the ground. It is necessary to keep these coops or roosting places clean and disinfected, for lice and mites are sure death to young turkeys.

Coarse sand should be provided for them, also plenty of shade, and ashes for their dust bath.

In preparing turkeys for market they should not be fed too liberally during the first few days, but after they have become used to confinement should be given all they can eat up clean.

Only the very early hatched birds will be large enough for the earliest holiday market, and selections for this market must be very carefully made. The largest birds in the flock should be placed by themselves in a large pen. They should not be closely confined. A large shed, with tight sides on the north and west, with the south and east sides covered with poultry netting, makes a good fattening pen. It must be covered, as the birds must be kept perfectly dry. The pen should be provided with low roosts in the back part, and it should be placed in a secluded spot at some distance from other poultryhouses or barns, as turkeys are very shy birds, and if excited by a noise or other animals or strangers, will not readily take on fat.

The feeding trough should be placed on the outside of the pen so that they can be easily cleaned and filled without continually entering the pen. This work should be done quietly and at regular intervals. The troughs should be kept scrupulously cleaned. Nothing is better than galvanized iron for this purpose, as they can be scalded, and in this way made perfectly sweet and clean. Wooden troughs absorb a great deal of moisture, and it is almost impossible to keep them as clean as they should be.

It requires from three to four weeks to put young turkeys in fine condition. They should be pushed from the start because a turkey, like a hog, is a losing proposition after it has attained its full growth. The birds should be marketed just as soon as they begin to slacken up in gain, because beyond a certain point in weight they cannot be pushed.

COLONY HOUSES FOR CHICKS

Portable Buildings Enable Farmer to Change Brooding Yards From One Season to Another.

The portable colony house can be used for brooding little chicks in the spring, for housing growing stock in the summer, and for mature stock in the winter. This house is 8 feet deep by 12 feet long. By placing it on runners it can be moved.

Every farmer should raise his chickens by means of portable houses. This enables him to change his brooding yards from season to season and also permits him to move his chickens to the edge of a corn field as soon as they are large enough to roost.

Where chickens are range-raised in this way the farm lanes, corn fields, wheat fields after the grain has been removed, etc., can be utilized. Here the shade, green food, bugs, worms, grasshoppers, etc., furnish conditions conducive to a rapid, healthful growth. A house of this kind enables the farmer to separate his young stock from the old, for, when the two are raised in the same yard, conditions are unsanitary and the young stock suffers because of being overrun.

At the University of Missouri chicks are brooded in these houses by means of portable hovers. Heat is removed as soon as possible and the chicks are kept in the same house until they are put into winter quarters.

CHARCOAL FOR FARM FLOCK

Keeps Digestive Apparatus of Fowls in Good Condition—Good Ventilation Is Necessary.

A dish of charcoal placed where the flock can reach it at all times will do considerable toward keeping the digestive organs of the fowls in good condition. The charcoal absorbs poisonous gases and juices and often prevents serious trouble.

Fowls cannot be healthy unless they can have plenty of pure air to breathe. This calls for a well-ventilated poultry house. There is no one best breed or variety of fowls for any purpose. The usefulness of any flock depends almost as much on the way it is fed, bred and cared for as upon the variety.

Not Good Feed for Fowls.

There may be some excuse for feeding sloppy food to hogs, but it will not "work out," except to the disadvantage of the birds and their owners, in poultry practice.

Cause of Soft Shells.

Soft-shelled eggs are often caused by fowls being confined, becoming overfat, and from lack of mineral matter.

IT SELDOM PAYS TO DOCTOR

More Important for Beginner to Know How to Prevent Disease Among Fowls Than to Cure.

It seldom pays to doctor a fowl which has been seriously sick for any length of time. If you should be successful in curing the disease, it would not be safe to use this bird in the breeding pens, writes Dr. C. R. Watson of Miller, Neb., in Farmers' Mail and Breeze.

It is much more important for the beginner in the poultry business to know how to prevent disease than how to cure, or attempt to treat it. In the majority of cases, disease can be prevented by good care and management in the exercise of ordinary common sense. Should your birds become diseased, examine your methods of management, premises, houses, feed and method of feeding, and remove the cause.

Clean up the premises, disinfect, whitewash the houses, scald the drinking vessels or wash them in an antiseptic solution. In case your birds become seriously ill, the best thing to do is to kill every sick bird and burn the carcass. There is one rule that you should follow; that is never to let a sick bird die on your premises. Kill it and burn the carcass before it reaches that stage.

GRIT AIDS HEN'S DIGESTION

Money Spent in Commercial Grit Is Good Investment for Any Poultryman to Make.

An ample supply of commercial grit on farms where poultry has been kept any length of time is money well spent.

In fact, a sack of commercial grit costing 75 cents at any of the country stores is a good investment for the poultryman to make.

Grit furnishes the biddies grinders and if your means of masticating your food supply were taken away, Mr. Farmer, how soon would you be taking treatment from the physician for indigestion?

Iowa Louse Powder.

A louse powder recommended by the Iowa experiment station is made by mixing three parts of gasoline and one part of sulphur. To this is added one part of Portland cement or plaster of paris to take up the liquid. The mixture is then spread on a board for the volatile portions to evaporate. The powder remaining after evaporation will put the lice to rout.

Recent Confinement.

Remember that turkeys are of a roaming disposition and must not be kept in confinement.

FOR THOSE FOND OF HONEY

Missouri College of Agriculture Has Published Some Recipes That Will Be Found Useful.

Brown Bread.—One-half cupful of honey, one and a half cupfuls of sour milk or buttermilk, three cupfuls of graham flour, one teaspoonful of soda. Nuts and raisins may be added if desired.

Soft Gingerbread.—Half a cupful of sugar, one cupful of extracted honey (or sorghum), half a cupful of butter, one teaspoonful each of cloves, ginger and cinnamon, two teaspoonfuls of soda dissolved in one cupful of boiling water, two and a half cupfuls of flour. Add two well-beaten eggs the last thing before baking.

Honey Muffins.—One pint of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, sifted four times; yolks of two eggs beaten lightly, one and a fourth cupfuls of cream. Beat thoroughly, then fold in lightly in the beaten whites of two eggs and two tablespoonfuls of extracted honey. Bake in muffin pans and serve while hot.

Apples pared, cored and set into a dish with sugar and water, to bake till tender, but not broken, are delicious served with custard poured over them.

Buns.

One pint milk, one ounce yeast, one-half pound flour, one teaspoonful sugar; rub the flour through a sieve, cream the yeast and sugar together and add lukewarm milk; strain this mixture into the flour and beat well. Cover the basin with paper and set in warm place (on the fender) to rise for one hour. In another basin put 1¼ pounds of flour, one-quarter pound butter, two ounces candied peel, two eggs, one-quarter pound sultanas or currants, one-quarter pound sugar. When the sponge in the first basin has risen, beat in all the dry ingredients from the second basin with two eggs. Thoroughly mix and beat them for about five minutes. Set this sponge to rise again for about 1½ hours. Then shape the mixture into buns and bake on a greased tin for one-half hour. When cooked and while still hot brush them over with a little milk and sugar to glaze them.

Fine-Grained Cake.

Have mixing bowl warm and the chill taken off the milk. Use finest grade granulated sugar. Use measuring cup and follow directions carefully. One-third cupful butter, three-fourths cupful sugar, two eggs, one-half cupful milk, one and one-half cupfuls bread flour sifted before measuring; return to sifter and add two teaspoonfuls cream tartar and one of soda. One teaspoonful lemon extract. Soften butter, add sugar and stir just enough to blend, add well-beaten eggs, and beat until light colored. Stir in milk, then sift in prepared flour and beat at least five minutes to make fine grained. Add flavoring, bake in a slow oven.

Chocolate Rice Cream.

Wash the rice (Carolina rice of good quality) and cook gently in milk with a piece of stick vanilla and some sugar until thoroughly swelled and tender. Remove the vanilla. When cool stir in enough cream to make the rice like a thickish, lumpy looking custard. Place in custard glasses and scatter powdered chocolate over. To four ounces of rice allow one and three-quarters pints of milk and four tablespoonfuls of sugar. Use a double milk saucepan and cook long and slowly.

To Prevent Cheese Hardening.

The addition of a raw egg to the mixture of grated cheese and cream for cheese wafers prevents the cheese from hardening when cold. My plan is slightly to butter crackers, or dip them in melted butter, place in pan and put a spoonful or more of the cheese mixture upon each one. Sprinkle with paprika and place in heated oven after turning off the gas. They are delicious hot, and are good cold, and can easily be reheated.

Baked Sweet Potatoes With Cream.

Steam four large sweet potatoes for ten minutes; take out and peel, slice lengthwise half an inch thick; put into baking pan, spread each slice with butter, sprinkle powdered sugar over them, pinch of salt, pour over half a cupful of cream. Set in oven to heat through.

Cooking Hint.

To prevent citron, raisins or currants from sinking to the bottom of your cake have them well warmed before adding them to the batter.

The telegram was handed to Knapp at the desk when he got in from the club a little past twelve. He looked at it in surprise and some bewilderment. Sturdevant? That was one of the bunch of Californian cousins who had entertained him during his visit to the fair last summer. He couldn't recall any Ted.

The Overland Special pulled in on time. There were few passengers. He stood with a couple of other persons watching the stragglers come along the platform until a girl stopped before a stout, gray-haired old chap next to him and exclaimed:

"Don't you know me, Cousin Jack?"

"I—I believe that I'm Cousin Jack," said Knapp, lifting his hat and looking down into the brownest eyes he had ever seen. "I was looking for a boy."

"For a boy?" She laughed. "I suppose you did get us all mixed up. I'm Theodore, but they call me Ted. We're the Santa Barbara cousins."

Knapp couldn't remember any Santa Barbara connections.

"Are you going to school here?" he asked.

"Not here. In Boston." She stopped short, staring up at him blankly.

"They told me what you ought to look like, and you don't at all. Hair rather gray and a little stout, and eyeglasses. Are you sure you're Cousin Jack Knott?"

"I'm Jack Knapp, and I live at the St. Ambrose, and I surely have cousins in California." He remembered there was a Mr. Knott at the hotel. He called up. Mr. Knott had gone on a southern trip two days before. He broke the news to her with a twinkle in his eyes.

"I'll have to be a proxy Cousin Jack. Now, listen. Your train leaves at 8:10. That's a long while to wait. I engaged a room for my boy cousin, but he hasn't turned up. I'm going to call up my sister, Mrs. Durant, and you'll go up there."

"Oh, I couldn't," she faltered. "Indeed, I couldn't. You're very kind, but I—I don't think I'll leave the station."

"Then we'll stay right here."

It never occurred to either of them that it was already St. Valentine's day until while pacing back and forth through the terminal they came face to face with a large display of valentines. It seemed years since Jack had ever even remembered St. Valentine's day. Somehow, now he found himself telling her of his rather lonely childhood, brought up in a boys' military school, sent later on to a technical preparatory school, and finally to college.

"Then what happened?" she asked eagerly.

"Nothing except that I came in for too much money and failed to follow my good star." She caught at the undercurrent of bitterness in his words.

"But you're not old—"

"Thirty-four."

"Suppose you live to be eighty-four, and find out you've wasted fifty-four years just looking down your nose and wishing something had happened that's different? You said you had lots of cousins, too, boys and girls, aren't they? If I were you, I'd send them valentines tonight, checks, you know, call them 'heart's desire valentines.'"

"Will you direct the envelopes?" asked Jack. "I'll write the checks if you will."

Surely it was the oddest kind of a Valentine celebration.

"Those are precious old aunts," Jack explained, a bit sheepishly. "It's all kinds of fun, isn't it? Will they understand?"

"Go pick out Valentine postcards to go inside," Ted told him, writing busily. "It's after four already. Doesn't the time just fly?"

Jack went after the postcards. If anyone had told him he would spend the night at the Grand Central terminal in company with Ted of Santa Barbara, diligently sending Valentine checks to all neglected relatives, he would have called it a fantasy. Yet here it was—a lark, but surely the happiest he had known in years.

"By Jove, I begin to feel bewitched," he told her. "Can I send you a valentine, proxy cousin? Let me send you one to your Boston address, can't I?"

"Not the same kind. I don't need any, kind sir," Ted teased. "You may send me a proper sentiment, though."

After the express pulled out he started up Forty-second street. A florist's shop was just opening.

"I want about half a bushel of violets sent to Boston on the next train. Have you got a very small box I can seal and inclose?"

While the violets were being packed, he slipped a ring from his little finger. It was one he had worn through school, before wealth had hit him. He had told her of it as they sat side by side, told her he loved it because it seemed to stand to him for all his boyhood hopes.

"To my Valentine," he wrote on his card.

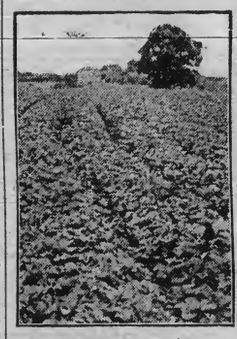
Horticultural Advice

SET STRAWBERRY IN SPRING



Best Time for Work Is When Plants Are Dormant and Soil Is in Condition to Work.

(By N. M. EDGERTON.)

Under ordinary field conditions fall setting of strawberry plants is not to be recommended. The nature of the plant should make this clear.

Except under the most favorable condition, plants set in August or September will not establish themselves in time to grow and develop perfect fruit buds, and hence a full crop of fruit from fall-set plants the season following is out of the question.

It is said that plants set in the fall

Many Berries Result From Matted-Row System, But They Are Likely to Be Small—Berries Do Not Ripen as Well as When They Obtain More Sunlight.

will bear a part of a crop the first year. This is true, but the gain is more than counterbalanced by the loss in the second crop.

While the bed is being fruited thorough cultivation is impossible. Pollen secretion and seed production will have so drawn upon the vitality of the plants that the runners from them will lack in vigor and strength.

Set in rows three and a half to four feet apart and two or three feet in the row, it is easily seen that the yield from such a small number of plants cannot be large.

The crop of the next year will also be much smaller than that from a spring-set bed. We may harvest in 16 months one full crop from the spring-set bed. From the fall-set bed in 21 or 22 months we may harvest two very inferior crops.

The best time to set strawberry plants is as early in the spring as the ground can be worked. We much prefer to do the work of transplanting while the plants are still dormant.

As an aid in keeping plants dormant until late in the season we cover the ground, while it is frozen or covered with snow, with straw or other material. In this way plants may be held back one week or more.

This is a point in strawberry culture the importance of which is fully appreciated only by the few.

TO COMBAT SAN JOSE SCALE

Best Time Is When Trees Are in Dormant State—Spray Before Buds Open in the Spring.

When the trees are dormant is the best time of the whole year to combat the San Jose scale, as we can apply spray materials of sufficient strength to do effective work without the trees being injured through their foliage. The lime-sulphur solution is the best remedy of which I have knowledge, says a writer in Green's Fruit Grower. It is very important that the spraying be done before the buds begin to open in the spring, and especially is this true in spraying peach trees.

Winter is a good time, too, to war against borers. In this work care must be taken not to girdle the tree, and the grain should be cut across as little as possible. If a sharp-pointed wire is used to probe the burrows it will not be necessary to use the knife nearly so much as would otherwise be the case.

WINTER DAMAGE IN ORCHARD

Ice and Snow Accumulate on Branches, Causing Them to Break—Dehorning Is Necessary.

Sometimes during winter ice and snow freeze to the branches of peach trees and crush the branches. At other times snowbanks accumulate around young peach trees and break down the branches.

When such things happen all you have to do is to dehorn the trees, or at least cut back the branches of all broken parts beyond the point where the bruise or break has occurred. Peach trees will form new heads after being dehorned sooner than most other trees.

A Bank that is going after business, and going in the right way.

HOW? By promptness in serving its customers.
By courteous attention to their banking needs.
By readiness in meeting their requirements, and, above all
By perfect security of the funds intrusted to its care, having over $100.000.00 to secure depositors.
We have the largest Capital and Surplus of any Bank in this county, and are amply able to accommodate our patrons, and are willing at all times to afford them every accommodation justified by the rules of good and safe banking, whether their accounts are large or small.

Too Much for Her.

A little girl who was enrolled in the extension department of the Y. W. C. A. was asked by one of the secretaries of the association why she no longer attended the technical grammar class. "Well," replied the girl, "I always thought a conjunction was a place where trains stopped. When I learned it was a word that connected other words the class was too much for me."

Scientific Improvement.

A chemical hygrometer, said to be much superior to the psychrometer for measuring relative humidity, provides means of determining the moisture content of the air by volume measurements before and after contact with sulphuric acid, which completely absorbs the water vapor present in one contact. A reading can be made in less than two minutes.

Optimistic.

Sniper—"I've knocked the spike orf of 'is bloomin' 'elmet—'e's took the top orf o' my bloomin' ear—and it's my shot next!"—London Opinion.

Cost of Criminality.

Maintenance of prisons in England costs $2,330,000 a year.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for failing hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

To Fly the Flag.

The proper way to hang a flag from a flagstaff is on halyards, or ropes, by which it may be raised and lowered, and which allow it to follow the direction of the wind. The union should be in the upper corner next to the pole; the direction of the wind, of course, controls the direction of the stripes.

Tobe's Grievance.

"Every time my fellow townsmen read of a gold brick being purchased anywhere within five hundred miles of here," grumbled Tobe Sagg of Coshkonong, "they hunt me up and state that they notice I have been traveling again."—Kansas City Star.

Optimistic Thought.

An hour well spent is worth a week wasted away.

BOONE CO. RECORDER
W. L. RIDDELL, Publisher.

Erstwhile Boone County Man.

W. F. Moore, of Sherman, has sold his farm, the old J. T. Points homestead, containing 287 acres, to Jewell & Settle, of Lexington, for $25,000. The deal which had been pending for several months, was closed Tuesday. The new owners get immediate possession of the farm, but Mr. Moore will retain his residence in the house for a while, or until he secures another place in which to move.

Mr. Moore purchased the farm five years ago for $16,000. He realizes a profit of $9,000 on his purchase and has had the use of the farm for that time. He has made considerable improvements, however, and the land is in better condition than it ever was.

Mr. Moore was formerly a resident of Boone county, moving here from that county, and has made many warm friends in and around Sherman. He is acknowledged to be one of the live wire farmers of the county. He owns considerable other real estate in the county, but has his eye on a small farm near Sherman, which he will probably purchase, so the county will not lose him as a citizen.

While the new purchasers paid Mr. Moore a big profit on his place, it is considered a bargain, as its location is excellent and the increase in land values during the past five years has been considerable.—Grant Co. News.

First Time in Thirty Years.

With little noise the Sunday closing bid was clamped down on Kenton county yesterday and as a result the city was dry on the Sabbath for the first time in thirty years. The country district followed the city's example with one exception, this being a road house near White Villa, which was reported as doing a large business. As the place is operating without a State license special action will be taken, according to a report from the Sheriff's office.

From all reports the saloon keepers in Covington accepted conditions gracefully. Window blinds were down showing the interiors of bars, although it was reported that one cafe in the neighborhood of the City Hall was dispersing drinks in the rear of the building. Captain Sam Martin made an examination of several places, but found "nothing doing."

Poolrooms throughout the city did a large business selling soft drinks and cigars, as many Ohioans visited Kentucky to see, as one said, "if the oasis had gone dry."

The many clubs that have been incorporated during the past few months were largely patronized and those running without incorporation papers had a large play. The latter use the locker system.

Up until a late hour not a single arrest had been made by the police for drunkenness or disorderly conduct.—Monday's Commercial Tribune.

Boone County Needs a Farm Agent.

I will use this means to let you know I want a Farm Agent for Boone county.

None of us farmers know so much but what we may learn more.

It will be a great help in more than one way.

We read what Mr. Bird did for Crittenden county. Why can't some one do as much for our county which badly needs such help?

We farmers don't work together enough. We must work together, have a good Farm Agent to tell us how, and when is the best time to do things so that we may get our fertilizers etc., cheaper. We may get better results after our hard labor, that we may raise more alfalfa and be better prepared to keep our stock thru the bad winters.

Why should we depend upon our own opinion of farming and year after year live just the same without improving or prospering but little, and let our neighboring counties, who have Farm Agents, get so far ahead of us?

We must have help. Let us now start together, have a Farm Agent, be classed with our neighboring counties, or, still better, that we may be proud to say we live in Boone county.

Respectfully,
ARTHUR DEAN.

Arthur Dean purchased a good work horse from Will Readnour.

Mrs. Morris and Mr. Blessing moved back to the city last week.

Mr. B. K. Sleet and family spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Dean.

Grateful to Lawmakers.

Frankfort, March 19.—From every angle of criticism Gov. Stanley believes the 1916 General Assembly is deserving of the commendation of the people of Kentucky. He issued a statement to that effect to-night, in regard for constitutional limitations upon the amount of help it could employ, in the scope of legislation for the welfare of the whole Commonwealth, in the faithful redemption of party pledges and scrupulous care not to repudiate any of those pledges, the Govern or is of the opinion the session will stand conspicuous in the history of the Commonwealth.

It appropriated less money than any session as far back as 1906, excepting 1914, and exceeded that one only by reason of the expenditures to pay half the value of stock killed during the campaign, to eradicate the foot and mouth disease; it employed less than a third of the help as a saving of nearly $12,000 and enacted more laws and more big laws than the session of 1914.

In dealing with the work of the first session of the General Assembly since the accession of his Administration, Gov. Stanley went into an exhaustive review of its work and record.

Jack Offutt, aged 8 years and James, his brother, six years old, were playing Monday evening on the bank of Lynn Camp creek. At this point the water is very deep. Jack slipped down the bank into the creek, and, as neither could swim and the bank is perpendicular, he went to the bottom several times. His little brother Jas. did not cry or run for help, but seeing an old log a few feet below, he climbed out on it and, putting his arm around the log, he reached down and pulled Jack out. They were a sorry-looking pair when they reached home, and James was overheard telling Jack that he would not take a thousand dollars for him.—Corbin Times.

D. C. Hancock, a veteran of the Civil War and a follower of the Southern Confederacy, had on exhibition at the court house in Uniontown a relic of the days of '60. It was an old drum picked up on the battlefield, and has been in his possesion ever since. It has figured conspicuously in many campaigns of the county, especially of the courthouse race. Dabney says that on that memorable day in which Uniontown went down in defeat, he had his drum, and following him was a crowd, hundreds strong, who cast their vote for Morganfield.

Christian county voted a $400,000 bond issue for good roads by a majority of 3,127, the vote being 4,601 for the proposition and 1,480 against. With this money is is estimated that more than 200 miles of praseut pike can be reconstructed and about fifty miles of new pike built, which will carry all the chief roads to the county line. All the work will be done under the state aid law, by which one-half the cost will be refunded out of the state road fund.

The squeakers have been making merry about the ponds and marshes.

Several droves of wild ducks have been seen going north the past week.

Gardeners are anxious to get busy in their truck patches. Very few if any potatoes have been planted, and some think potatoes will not yield unless planted during the dark of the moon in March.

On this Side of the Line Again.

The sun has crossed the line on its annual journey north to escape the southern summer. In other words spring is here, but there is little or no evidence of the fact in so far as the work done on the farms is concerned.

Erlanger Fair Grounds Sold.

The Erlanger Fair Grounds were sold by the Master Commissioner of the Kenton circuit court at the court house door in Covington, last Tuesday. The property was knocked off to Attorney Samuel Adams, of Erlanger, for $8,800. The bank at Independence was the principal creditor, and its claim was secured by a mortgage. There is no doubt but what a fair will be held at Erlanger again this fall.

An Impassionate Article.

In this issue appears an article by Atty. John L. Vest, of Walton, in regard to the proposed $200,000 bond issue for the purpose of building roads and bridges. Mr. Vest has taken pains to give the reader some figures that will shed considerable light on the proposition from a different angle from any yet considered. Mr. Vest has endeavored to conceal nothing in regard to the proposition, let the result of his presentation be what it may. He presumes the proper course in not endeavoring to put anything over on the voters in regard to what the proposition will cost the taxpayers, and while he is in favor of issuing bonds he is willing that the voters study the proposition and then act as they think to the best interest of all.

The Farmers' Mutual Telephone Directory says, I handle any kind of rubber tire; and that I have the exclusive agency of the Republic Rubber Tires. That contract just cost me $200 of which of some of my customers will attest. I guaranteed those tires and I filled same to the letter. Now, right here I do most solemnly promise and swear that I will never again change the old and tried for any new thing whatsoever. Furthermore, that I will not use any Rubber Tire except Kelly's Springfield—the first rubber tire ever made and the best. I ought to know for surely I paid last year to find out. It is just like a boy changing the old girl for the new or a man leaving his old and tried wife for a new one. Now, isn't it a fact that they always go back to the old and tried love, is it not so boys? That's what I have done with Kelly's Springfield Rubber Tire—gone back to my old love. While they cost me more money they will cost my customers $12.00 per set or $3.00 per tire; these tires I give a guarantee on for being as represented. They will not stuff out nor will they peel, but will wear smooth like a good tire should.

Now, in regards to repainting: I have tried to get a quick system and do good work, but I find it a failure so I give it up and must stick to the old system. Farm for Sale

I will sell at public auction at the Court House door in Burlington, Ky., at 1 o'clock p. m.,

Monday, April 3rd, 1916,

the Thomas S. Whitaker farm of 300 acres, situated in the north end of Boone County, on the Ohio River, and on the waters of Garrison Creek. This farm is improved with two barns in fair condition and with a good dwelling house.

SPLENDID STOCK FARM.

The farm is specially adapted for stock raising as it is well watered and borders on the Ohio River for a considerable distance, insuring ample water for stock all seasons of the year.

GOOD, FERTILE SOIL.

The soil is fertile and capable of producing splendid crops of corn, all kinds of grain, tobacco and alfalfa. The produce on the farm for the year 1915 amounted to nearly $2,000.

TERMS OF SALE.

This farm will be sold to the highest bidder, either for cash or on a credit of six and twelve months, at the option of the purchaser. If sold on a credit the purchaser will be required to execute notes for the purchase money, secured to the satisfaction of the undersigned, said notes to bear interest at the rate of six per cent per annum until paid.

Possession of the farm will be given as soon as the purchaser complies with the terms of the sale. For further particulars communicate with or call on An auto load of Covingtonians took dinner at the Boone Hotel last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Riddell entertained the Literary Society last Friday night.

The local baseballists were limbering up their arms last Saturday afternoon.

The robins and blue birds have destroyed their reputations as being harbingers of spring.

Rev. Nelson filled his regular appointment at the Burlington M. E. church last Sunday morning.

Considerable provender has been used this winter but livestock has come through in fine condition.

Agents for agricultural implements have begun canvassing the farmers, introducing improved machinery.

Walling and Jackson were hung in Newport for the murder of Pearl Bryan nineteen years ago last Monday.

Hon. W. W. Cleary, Judge of the Kenton county court, died in St. Elizabeth's hospital, Covington, last Monday in his 62d year.

Town councilman R. S. Crisler, had the bad place in the street near Hubert Rouse's repaired last week. It was approaching the impassable.

Asa McMullen shipped 18 fat hogs to the Cincinnati market, one day last week. The bunch averaged 200 pounds and he received 10 cents a pound for them.

The sheriff has begun summoning grand and petit jurors for the April term of the Boone Circuit Court which begins the second Monday in next month, the 10th day.

The weather this month has been hard on the growing small grain. A small crop was sowed in this county last fall and the probability is its yield will be very small.

William Clore had the large maple shade trees in front of his residence trimmed one day last week. It had been many years since they were trimmed and they had very large tops.

Kentucky has 168 officers and 2,329 men members of the state troops ready for action in Mexico, if needed. This is more than any Southern state, except Georgia and Virginia.

The lid was on good and tight, last Sunday in Covington and Kenton county, but in Newport and Campbell county saloonkeepers were not observing the law in many instances.

According to the calendars spring began last Monday, consequently the equinoctial storms were then due, but they may be omitted this year much to appreciation of all.

Jesse Kirkpatrick is about ready to resume work. His period of illness was a most opportune time. He has a large lot of work before him for this year and he is anxious to begin it.

Deputy Sheriff L. A. Conner was in Belleview precinct Tuesday, attending to some court business and posting notices of the holding of the election on the road bond issue May 8th.

Albert C. Johnson, who operates W. N. Hinds' farm near Walton, reports that his 34 ewes have 64 lambs; three lambs dead; of three sets of triplets all the lambs are living and doing well.

Master Robert Clore has a pet lamb which he taught to suck one of his father's milk cows, and he is very much of the opinion that this is the proper way to raise motherless lambs. Why not?

Judge Sidney Gaines is holding the March term of the Gallatin county circuit court. If the business requires he can hold a twelve days term, but it is generally disposed of in three or four days.

Master Commissioner Maurer and County Surveyor Conley, surveyed the land sold a few court days since in the Barlow case and was purchased by Jesse Kirkpatrick. The land is on Gunpowder creek near R. J. Underhill's.

It is pretty well settled that Charles Clore, whose death was reported last week committed suicide, by shooting himself behind the right ear with a single barrel shot gun which was found lying near him. The right side of his face was badly mangled.

"Jockey Day" in Rising Sun.

The first Monday in April has been designated by the Rising Sun merchants as "Jockey Day," when a large number of horses from far and near will be assembled there and offered for sale. If the weather is favorable the Sunners expect a very large crowd of visitors on that occasion.

Illiteracy in Boone County.

According to the report of the State Illiteracy Commission Boone county has 310 illiterates, Robinson county with 278 being the only county in the State that has fewer. Boone's per cent if illiteracy is 4.1 while that of Robinson is 3.9. Campbell county's per cent is 1.9, Kenton, 2.7 and Jefferson 5.6. The per cent in the State is 12.1.

Rice-Grant Marriage.

Joshua Rice, 72, and Mrs. Susie Grant, 63, of Belleview, were married on the 18th inst. Mr. Rice is a native of this county but has been a resident of Illinois many years. It is the second matrimonial venture for each of the parties, the groom's first wife being a Miss Ryle, and the bride's first husband, W. W. Grant. The bride and groom have a large circle of friends and relatives who wish for them many years of happiness.

Sheep Bitten by Dogs.

About three weeks ago W. B. Ambrose, of Ryle, had his flock of sheep invaded by dogs. Several of the sheep were bitten about the face by the dogs and one of them so severely that it died at the time. The others, it was thought at the time would get well, as they were slightly bitten and scratched about the face and head. They were given the necessary attention and every care, but gradually became ill from the effects of the bites or else the scare they had undergone when attacked by the dogs, and died a week ago. There was one fine buck in the bunch and six ewes. The ewes also had 13 lambs, and these were also lost along with the ewes and buck. While the sheep during their illness, did not manifest the exact symptoms of hydrophobia, they had something closely akin to that from the evidence furnished by their peculiar actions during their illness.—Warsaw Independent.

Auto Badly Wrecked---No One Injured.

The town of Florence was the scene of an auto accident last Sunday afternoon in which one car was badly wrecked, but, fortunately, no one was hurt. J. G. Renaker, of Florence, was driving his car, a Ford, and riding with him was Miss Nell Rouse, a Mr. Anderson and a Miss Carpenter. They were turning from the Burlington pike on to the Lexington pike at Myers' corner when their car was struck by a very much larger car driven south on the Lexington pike by a lady its only occupant. One of the front wheels and its fender on Mr. Renaker's car were badly smashed and other minor injuries done to the machine, while the large car's damage was very little if any. The lady who was driving the large car was very much distressed because of the accident, but Mr. Renaker's gentlemanly conduct towards her was a considerable relief. The point at which the accident occurred is one of the most dangerous local motorists have to encounter because the building on either side of the Burlington pike is so close to the Lexington pike that a machine on one road can not be seen from a machine on the other until they are very close. It is a point at which motorists should exercise the greatest of care for protection against accidents.

Charles Clore's Funeral.

A very large number of friends and relatives were present last Friday at 11 a. m., at the interment of Charles Clore in the Odd-Fellows' cemetery out on the Florence pike. A brief service at the grave was conducted by Rev. Edgar C. Riley.

Mr. Clore was born Jan. 12, 1850, and was a son of the late Churchwell Clore. His wife was a Miss Johnson, who was raised by her uncle and aunt, the late Esq. Joseph C. Hensley and wife, many years ago residents on Ashby Fork creek, this county. To Mr. and Mrs. Clore was born one son, Elbert, who, with his mother, and two uncles, Henry and William Clore, survive.

Charles Clore was a kind-hearted, generous person to whom all his neighbors were attached, and his tragic death produced a shock from which it will take them a long time to recover. No one in the neighborhood can fill his place as to usefulness as a member of the community. Each and everyone had a good word to speak for him, and the feeling of sorrow that pervaded the large crowd as the casket containing his remains was lowered to its last resting place, was intense, and when the benediction was pronounced the crowd dissolved each member returning home with a heart burdened with sorrow, and extending to the bereaved family his or her sincerest sympathy.

C. Scott Chambers, of Walton, had charge of the funeral.

Honey bees have been on the wing every month the past winter. In some instances the temperature changed so suddenly they had to hasten back to the hive to prevent freezing.

Owen Bemon, who lives down on Woolper creek, had a big wood sawing last Saturday, in which the entire neighborhood participated and prepared a very large amount of fuel.

Judge Cason, Rev. Carter and J. C. Revill were the only local wearers of the green observed last Friday, St. Patrick's day.

COME AND LET US REASON TOGETHER.

The millennium will never come until each individual is governed and controlled in every word and deed and entirely by his REASON. So likewise, perfection in the management of fiscal affairs will never come, until each official and voter is governed entirely by his REASON, absolutely uninfluenced by passion, prejudice or selfishness. In this 20th century, with the general dissemination of knowledge; the higher education of the masses; the progress made along all lines in the last few decades, and the advance of civilization generally, men are becoming more and more amenable to reason and logic, and are controlled less and less by their prejudices, passions and selfishness. Unfortunately, there yet remain a few residents of Boone county whose preconceived notions are firm as adamant, and reason and facts play no part in the formation of their opinions. Fortunately, however, these individuals are extremely scarce and the great preponderance, in fact almost all, of the voters of Boone county are open to a fair presentation of the facts upon which they must act in any given matter, and invite a fair, open and frank argument, based upon all reasonable deductions from a given state of facts, and will, after having heard all fair arguments for and against any proposition, reach a conclusion by a process of reasoning, uninfluenced by any selfish interest. To this thinking, reasoning voter this article is addressed, as it is believed that upon their decision calmly and deliberately reached depends the fate of the question to be submitted to the voters of Boone county, concerning the $200,000 bond issue.

The proper determination of the question as to whether Boone co. should issue $200,000 in bonds, demands a discussion from every view point, and such a discussion logically subdivides itself into the three following headings:

1st. A fair inventory of our present situation and condition should be taken. 2nd. What can be accomplished by the proper and economical expenditure of $200,000 if borrowed?

3rd. If borrowed, will its repayment be a burden on the taxpayers of Boone county?

Inventory.

An inventory of the road milage of Boone county shows a total of 373 miles. The total pike milage completed and under construction is 148 miles, 63 miles of which are free, 34 miles built under the $500 per mile plan, 11 miles, owned by one-half private capital, and one-half by the state of Kentucky, and 40 miles strictly toll pikes, owned by private capital.

In addition to the pikes there are approximately 225 miles of mud road, some located in creek beds and other places equally impassible in winter, and some located without any reference what ever to proper grade. A fair inference therefore, 148 miles being pike and 225 miles being mud road, is that something more than half the road milage of the county is impassable during certain months in the winter. This is not a good inventory for Boone county. A good inventory would consist of approximately 300 miles of free turnpike and 73 miles of mud road, removed from creek beds and laid out with some regard to grade, even though it should take a few feet off of some field.

What can be accomplished by the proper and Economical Expenditure of this $200,000 if Borrowed.

For the present leaving out of the question any reference to "State Aid" money, let us see what can be done with $200,000. The 34 miles of pike in which the county has $500 stock per mile has been built at an average cost of approximately $1500 to $1800 per mile in some instances as low as $1,000 per mile. This 34 miles should be acquired by the county at a cost not to exceed $250 per mile, or a total of $8,750, in fact they should be given to the county. The 11 miles owned jointly by the State of Kentucky and private capital should be acquired at a cost of not to exceed $1,000 per mile, or less and if a fair estimate is taken of receipts for the past five years and proper allowance made for substantial repairs, it is doubtful if it should be worth that. The 40 miles of strictly toll road should be acquired at an average cost of not to exceed $500 per mile, or a total of $20,000, and any attempt on the part of any pike company to unload itself on our Fiscal Court at fancy prices, should in no event be tolerated. One-half of the cost of building 150 miles of new pike along modern methods should not exceed on an average $750 per mile. It is true that some will cost over $2,000 per mile, making one-half of the costs more than $1,000, but it is also true that some of this 150 miles will be only nine foot roads, costing not to exceed $1200 per mile, one half of which would be only $600. This average of $750 per mile would make one-half the cost of 150 miles of new pike $112,500.

Recapitulating we have:

34 miles at	$ 250	per mile	$ 8,500
40 miles at	500	per mile	20,000
11 miles at	1,000	per mile	11,000
150 miles at	750	per mile	112,500
Total			$142,000

But lest it be said that the foregoing estimates are too cheap let the prices be raised to the following figures:

34 miles at	$ 500	per mile	$ 17,000
40 miles at	750	per mile	30,000
11 miles at	1250	per mile	13,750
150 miles at	1000	per mile	150,000
Total			$210,750

The above figures are not given with the idea of being accurate, as many items are questions upon which individuals will differ, and no doubt some of such items will be attempted, leaving much to be worked out after it shall be determined that the $200,000 should be borrowed.

Would the Payment of this Money be a Burden to the Taxpayers?

The present county road tax is 40 cents on each $100, which raises an annual revenue of approximately $28,000. This makes a little over $75 for each mile of pike and mud road per annum for repairs and maintainance, which properly and economically used in a systematic way, will care for maintainance, but it can in no sense be counted on in repaying the $200,000. This must be dealt with therefore as a separate item. $200,000 in bonds can be floated at five per cent interest making an annual interest of $10,000. A sinking fund of $730.81 allowing interest at four per cent will in twenty years equal the bonded indebtedness as $1 annually at 4 per cent compound interest for twenty years equals $28.76. This therefore would require an increase in our taxes of $12,703.81 each year for twenty years to entirely repay the $200,000 principal and interest, that is if interest be calculated on the sinking fund at four per cent. The assessed valuation of Boone county is in round numbers $7,000,000, thus making an additional levy of a little over 19 cents on each $100 worth of taxable property in the county, assuming that the assessed valuation of the county remains at $7,000,000 for the next twenty years, which is of course contrary to all human experience and expectation. Assuming, however, that this assessed valuation remains unchanged, the additional taxes would amount to $20 for each $1,000 listed with the assessor. To the man with a farm and property amounting to $5,000 this would be $10, or to the farmer whose farm and stock is assessed at $10,000, the additional tax would be $20. Whether this addition tax will be more than counterbalanced by the additional pleasure; efficiency in marketing; access to schools, churches and other gathering places, must be determined by each individual voter, having in mind all the time that no man can live for himself alone, and prosper, either mentally, physically, financially, morally or otherwise.

In what has already been said, no mention or account has been made or taken of any "State Aid" which will from year to year improve the more important connecting links of road, the law providing that the first of these connecting links built to be those connecting county-seat with county-seat, and after these are built then other important connecting links or thoroughfares to follow. This of course in addition to and independent of the buying and building of roads by the county, but the issue of the bonds increases the amount Boone county will receive from the "State Aid" fund.

In this connection may be mentioned the much talked of "Dixie Highway" to which some objection has been urged. This is nothing more or less than a continuous series of roads from Chicago, Illinois, to Miami, Florida, mapped and platted and given the name of "Dixie Highway." The Lexington pike forms a part of this route, which puts 11 miles of it in Boone county. In some counties the "Dixie Highway" is built of concrete at a cost of approximately $14,000 per mile, through some, it is brick streets; through some, sand-clay roads, while other parts of it are yet, and will be for many years yet to come an ordinary turnpike. Since the adoption of the resolution of the Fiscal Court, providing that the money derived from the sale of the bonds will be spent in the various districts in proportion to the taxes received, it should be apparent to all that the "Dixie Highway" thru Boone county will not be rebuilt of concrete, but merely rendered a free pike and improved in some what the same way as the Florence and Burlington Turnpike. This of course would be one of the "Inter-county-seat" roads leading to Williamstown and would receive "State Aid." There should also be an "Inter-county-seat road built from Burlington to Hamilton and Constance to meet the roads from Warsaw and Covington; then from Burlington to Petersburg and Rabbit Hash, these being points near est to Lawreneeburg and Rising Sun, the county-seats of neighboring counties in Indiana. After these six "inter-county-seat" roads are improved along modern lines by the aid of and under the supervision of the state, the next road to be built will of course be the most important connecting link, which is not a part of the "Inter-county-seat" roads.

In the light of the foregoing facts the question that each voter must determine is: Is the Issue of $200,000 of bonds wise and economic? This comparison may be made for the consideration of each voter. A man builds a house and has funds sufficient to complete it all but the roof and the question arises shall he borrow the money and put the roof on, and repay the borrowed money from time to time, or shall he rather put on a few bundles of shingles from time to time as he can spare the money? Shall Boone county borrow $200,000 and repay it from year to year, or shall we build a few miles of pike each year as we are now doing? Think the matter over, calmly and deliberately, deal with your vote as you would on any other business proposition and leave the exact details to be worked out by a set of officials in whom the voters of the county should have the utmost confidence that they will discharge their duties as they see them, and will not permit one community to unduly profit at the expense of another, for it must ever be remembered that no tax can ever be distributed so as to work exact justice. In conclusion let it be remembered that this $200,000 if borrowed, will not be sent to New York or Chicago in some "get-rich quick" scheme but of necessity it will all be expended in Boone county, furnishing work for laborers, which in turn helps bring prosperity to all branches of industry.

It is hoped that the facts and figures herein set out will furnish a basis upon which each voter may discuss with his neighbors the problem confronting them in an intelligent manner, so that when May 8th arrives, each voter can conscientiously and intelligently cast a vote for the progress of his county.

JOHN L. VEST.

Of Interest to Farmers

The highest price ever paid for wool in Clark county, according to statistics was in 1873 when it went to forty-three cents per pound, but 1916 will surely see it go this high, if not higher, as 40 cents already has been paid for May delivery. The first sale at the above price was made by Jas. H. Thompson a farmer near Winchester, Ky., who disposed of his crop, May delivery to a Lexington dealer. Many Clark county farmers have contracted for 35 cents, believing that at this price, there was big money in the crop. An effort is on foot now to pool the Clark county crop and sell in one lot, just as the hemp crop was disposed of.

Eastern dealers in farm horses are experiencing difficulty in securing the grade of stock that usually falls to their share owing to European army competition. Buyers on that account are taking the 1,250 pound class of geldings that formerly went to farm trade around $140 at $160. Under normal condition eastern dealers were able to secure teams of such geldings and mares at $275, but they now sell singly at $160 and farm dealers are compelled to take a better class than army inspectors accept or fill their requirements from reject stuff, which alternative most of them are accepting.

The less desirable of these rejects are selling at $70 to $95 with a more desirable class at $100 to $125. Farm trade is healthy and there is considerable southern demand for cheap horses under $70 and as low as $25.

Some of the reasons why corn belt farmers raise more live stock are the following:

1. Because it will pay.
2. Because the country needs more meat.
3. Because the soil needs more fertilizer.
4. Because the raising and feeding of live stock on farms enhances soil fertility. Soil fertility is the foundation of agricultural prosperity, and agricultural prosperity is the basis of general prosperity.
5. Because neither corn prices nor land values can be maintained without the raising and feeding of live stock on farms.
6. Because live stock utilizes farm waste and turns it into money.
7. Because live stock condenses values on the farm; can walk to the market or shipping point; can be transported and marketed at less expense, and realizes greater net returns than any other farm products.
8. Because the market demands younger animals for slaughter.
9. Because pure-bred stock is now selling at relatively low prices, and those who stock up first and stay in longest will reap the greatest rewards in improved herds and more profitable returns.
10. Because association with domestic animals on the farm is essential to the right development of the character and practical knowledge and ability of children.
11. Because the presence of live stock inspires a love for the farm and tends to prevent desertion of the farm for the city.
12. Because it is every farmer's sacred duty to leave the farm in at least as good condition as when he found it for use by future generations, and this he cannot do without the fertilizing elements furnished by live stock.

NOTICE OF ELECTION

To be held in each of the Voting Precincts in Boone County, Ky., on May 8th, 1916, on the question of issuing BONDS for building Roads and Bridges.

Orders Boone County Court, Regular Term, Sixth Day March 1916.

Hon. P. E. Cason, Co. Judge, Presiding.

Edgar C. Riley, Etc., on Petition asking for an Election in Boone County, Kentucky, on the Question "Are you in favor of issuing two hundred thousand ($200,000.00) dollars in Bonds for the purpose of building roads and bridges?"

ORDER.

It appearing that at the last regular term of the Boone County Court held on the 7th of February, 1916, Edgar C. Riley and more than one hundred and fifty others filed a petition asking that a vote be taken in Boone County, Kentucky, upon the proposition "Are you in favor of issuing two hundred thousand ($200,000.00) dollars in BONDS for the purpose of building roads and bridges?" and it further appearing from proof heard in open court that said petition is signed by more than one hundred and fifty legal voters who are freeholders in said county, and that said petition was filed earlier than sixty days next preceding the time for said election, and said petition having laid over thirty days, or from the last regular term of this Court until this term, subject to exceptions, and none having been taken or filed thereto, and the court being advised, it is ordered that W. D. Cropper, Sheriff of Boone County, Kentucky, cause a poll to be opened in each and every voting precinct in Boone County, Kentucky, on May 8, 1916, and the Sheriff will advertise said election and the object therefor for at least thirty days next before the date thereof in the Boone County Recorder, a weekly newspaper haying the largest circulation of any paper published in said county, and he will also advertise said election by printed hand bills posted up at not less than four public places in each voting precinct in said county, and also at the Court House door.

It is also ordered that the regular election officers for Boone County hold this election, and that W. R. Rogers, County Clerk, shall cause the Question "Are you in favor of issuing two hundred thousand ($200,000.00) dollars in bonds for the purpose of building roads and bridges?," to be printed on the ballots as provided for in the general election law, Section 1,459 Kentucky Statutes, and it is further ordered that said Sheriff, County Clerk and all the election officers do all that is required by law for the holding and conducting this election.

A Copy Attest:

W. R. ROGERS, Clerk
Boone County Court.

Notice is hereby given that in obedience to the above order I will cause a poll to be opened in each of the voting precincts of this Boone County, Ky., on May 8th, 1916, at the regular voting places in said precincts, and at said election the question, "Are you in favor of issuing $200,000.00 in bonds for the purpose of building roads and bridges" will be submitted to the voters of Boone County, Kentucky, the objects of said election are fully set out in said order which is made a part of this notice.

This March 30th, 1916.

W. D. CROPPER,
Sheriff Boone County, Kentucky.

DESSERTS OF MERIT

HOW ONE CLEVER HOUSEKEEPER UTILIZED CAKE.

Prevented Waste and at the Same Time Furnished Most Delicious Preparations for the Delectation of the Family.

For the holidays I had made a large-sized fruit cake and some small fancy cakes of various kinds. In addition to this supply a friend sent in a huge fig layer cake, so it was inevitable there should be a surplus in the tin box.

My economical spirit rebelled at the idea of wasting good cake, so I donned my thinking cap, and the result was several desserts much enjoyed by the family, writes Jeannette Ross in the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The remains of the layer cake required my first attention as it had become quite dry. I softened it with a little warm milk, just enough to moisten it somewhat; then I poured over the cake an ice-cold custard made of the yolks of two eggs, one cupful of milk, two large tablespoonfuls of sugar and half a tablespoonful of cornstarch rubbed smooth with a little milk. Judging from the family's clamorous demands for a second helping of this dessert, it met with their approval.

I hardly knew how to make use of the small cakes I had left, but a few days later I solved the problem. I poured warm milk over them, as I had the layer cake—then put one cake on the bottom of each plate, with three or four upright around it; on the center cake I put half a preserved peach, and covered the whole with sirup from the jar of peaches, then added a meringue, made from one egg and powdered sugar. This dessert met with as cordial a reception as the first.

Thus encouraged, I wondered how I could utilize the small pieces of fruitcake left. In lieu of a steamer, I put the cake in a colander over a pot of boiling water, covered it with a lid, and, when it was thoroughly soft and heated through, served it with sauce made as follows: One small cupful of sugar, two level tablespoonfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of butter, a pinch of salt, one egg, one pint of milk, cooked together until thick and smooth, flavored with a little nutmeg. When the family sampled this dessert they thought I had made another plum pudding and could hardly believe it was composed of the remnants of the fruitcake.

Pieces of stale sponge cake form the foundation for what, as a child, I called "make-believe charlotte russe." Make small cups or holders of stiff paper, pasting the edges together. Line the sides and bottom of the cups with cake which has been soaked in a little sherry. Fill the centers with a stiff meringue made of the white of two eggs and powdered sugar and decorate the tops with a maraschino cherry. Although grown men and women, my family enjoy this dessert as much as when they were children.

Small pieces of any kind of stale cake can be made into a very good cake crumb pudding, which is made as follows:

Two cupfuls of milk, two eggs, one large cupful of sugar, one cupful of cake crumbs, pinch of salt, small lump of butter. Flavor with a little vanilla and nutmeg and bake. This pudding can be eaten plain or with a sauce made of any thickened fruit juice.

Useful Cupboard.

Where to keep dishes that are in constant use is a question. Some like them on open shelves as a labor-saver, but a really good suggestion is that of a cupboard in the wall between dining room and kitchen, with glass doors on dining room side and a solid one on side near kitchen sink. The work of opening doors is less than that of keeping dishes properly wiped. The lower part of the cupboard may have solid doors, behind which to keep plates, also left-over preserves, crackers and other articles so lacking in decorative effect that one does not wish to display them behind glass doors.

Mock Cherry Pie.

One cupful cranberries seeded (cut across as you would an orange and shake in a colander, seed will fall out) and washed, one cupful sugar, one-half cupful raisins seeded and chopped fine, one heaping tablespoonful flour; mix well, then add one and one-quarter cupfuls boiling water and two teaspoonfuls vanilla; let stand on back of range (not allowed to cook) until you line two pie tins with a light, flaky crust; divide equally fruit and liquid into two pies; bake as mince or berry pies.

Flaxseed Lemonade.

Carefully pick over and wash two tablespoonfuls of whole flaxseed, add three cupfuls boiling water, let cook for two hours, keeping below the boiling point, strain, add sugar and lemon juice to taste. Of great value in throat and lung troubles.

Apple Water.

Core a large sour apple and in the cavity put one teaspoonful sugar; bake until tender. Wash, pour over one cupful water; let stand one hour. Drain, serve hot or cold.

Flour for Burning Kerosene.

It should be a matter of common knowledge, since flour is always within convenient reach, that wheat flour is the best extinguisher to throw over fire caused by the spilling and igniting of kerosene.

POTATOES AT THEIR BEST

Universally Popular Vegetable Will Well Repay All the Care That Can Be Given to It.

There are many varieties of potatoes. Tastes differ as to the most desirable kind. In this country the white potato, when light and dry, is preferred. It is especially suited for boiling, steaming and baking, also for soups and purees. The yellow potatoes are more suitable for salads, ragouts, hash and frying, because they keep their shape when cooked. The sweet potato makes a pleasant and healthful addition to the table. It is rich in starch and sugar and somewhat laxative.

The white and yellow varieties contain a large percentage of water, a fair percentage of starch, a very small percentage of sugar and about one per cent mineral matter. It is to this mineral matter that the potato owes its antiscorbutic properties.

Potatoes cooked in dry heat, as by baking in the oven, roasting in ashes, frying in deep fat, or steaming without peeling are more pronounced and savory than when cooked in water. But the vegetables so cooked must be served just as soon as they are done, or else they will become soggy. On the contrary, boiled potatoes may be kept warm an hour or more after cooking without ill results.

Potatoes should cook in half an hour if ordinary size. Large potatoes should be given five minutes more, and small ones two minutes less. These rules apply to peeled, partly peeled or unpeeled.

The potatoes should be covered with boiling water and brought quickly to a boil. After fifteen minutes add one tablespoonful of salt to every twelve potatoes. At the end of thirty minutes drain off. To make them very white and mealy, after draining off the water, put the cover on, hold it down firmly and give the pot a shake. Next open the window and hold the uncovered pot outside for a few seconds, to let the steam escape. Place the vessel where it will keep warm for a few minutes, covering with a folded cloth, not the lid.

When boiling potatoes in their skins a narrow band of the skin should be removed from the center of the vegetable and small bits from either end.

Steamed potatoes will require forty minutes to cook, the water boiling hard all the time.

Baked potatoes (in their skins) must be pricked before putting into the oven to allow the gases to escape. The oven should be very hot, as a number of cold potatoes will lower the temperature. One hour should be allowed.

Small sweet potatoes will bake in half an hour, large ones an hour or more. Those who like them moist and sweet may bake them two hours.

Economical War Cake.

A fruit cake without eggs was much used in England during the holidays and further popularized by being called a "war cake." It is really very good and undoubtedly economical. It requires one-half pound of flour, two ounces of sultana raisins, one ounce of currants, one ounce of butter, one-half pound of brown sugar, one teaspoonful of carbonate of soda, one tablespoonful molasses, one-fourth teaspoonful cinnamon or mixed spices, one-fourth teaspoonful of ground ginger, one teaspoonful vinegar. Mix the ingredients after creaming the sugar and butter, in a half-cup of milk. Put the vinegar in last and very carefully a drop at a time lest it curdle the mixture. Bake in a moderate oven for an hour and do not cut for a week.

Beef Essence.

Remove the fat from a slice of steak from the top of the round, cut three-quarters inch thick, broil over a clear fire three or four minutes, turning often; heat the broiler to prevent the steak from adhering, as any suggestion of grease must be avoided; remove to a warm plate, cut into 1½-inch squares, gash on both sides, and with a lemon squeezer extract the juices; season with salt. This is nutritious and extremely palatable. Often desirable, given in small quantities, where a condensed form of food is desired.

Cottage Savory of Ham.

Place in a chopping bowl three ounces of cooked, lean ham and chop for ten minutes until it is a smooth pulp. Then add half a tablespoonful of good butter, two tablespoonfuls of Worcestershire sauce, half a saltspoonful of cayenne pepper and half a teaspoonful of mustard. Chop the whole well together for five minutes more and place this paste on a plate. Prepare six small round pieces of toast. Divide the ham preparation evenly on the toast and serve immediately.

Spanish Eggs.

To six eggs and three-eighths cupful strained tomato, one tablespoonful lemon juice, two dozen ripe olives (cut in rings), one small onion, grated; one teaspoonful salt, one teaspoonful celery salt. Cook in double boiler and stir constantly until slightly thickened.

When Roasting a Turkey.

The turkey need not be sewed after the dressing has been put in. Insert toothpicks on either side and string back and forth over the picks. This is easily removed after the bird is cooked.

New Tomato Recipe.

When broiling or frying tomatoes sprinkle them generously with grated cheese before serving and top each portion with a little whipped cream.

Wildcat Promotions.

It is assumed that they will play politics after the war. For instance, some advisers think we shall go far enough if we create an industry in the big staples of the coal-tar dyes—things that run into tonnage, like sulphur black—and let the Germans supply us with thousands of fancy colors used in small quantities. But in that case, after the war, the Germans might refuse to sell fancy colors by the pound to concerns that bought sulphur black by the ton elsewhere.

Those who oppose a tariff show that our total imports of dyes amount to only ten million dollars a year in normal times; that it would probably take ten years and fifty million dollars to establish a real dye industry in the U. S. and that, as the Germans have taken care of us so well in the past, and must sell us something the square the trade balance, they had better have the business as of old. Tariff opponents also question our ability to build up a dye industry, saying that Austria, Belgium, England, France, Italy, Russia and Switzerland have all tried it and failed. Finally, persons who are against a tariff question the motives of those who are for it.

Not long ago the Government published a list of thirty to 40 concerns in the dye business. A manufacturer thoroughly familiar with the situation took that list and divided it into four groups. In the first group he placed all the American concerns honestly making coal-tar dyes, that existed before the war or have developed solidly since. In the second group he put concerns making intermediates for dyes, but not the dyes themselves—these were also a pretty solid lot of business houses. In the third classification he grouped all the inventors who are trying out new processes, most of whom, he thought, were mistaken and impractical, yet honest. Finally there was nothing left for the fourth group but wildcat promoters, with factories of all sorts and projects they were financing largely with the money of the inexperienced investor.

The moral of which is: In all the talk you will hear about dyes during the next months do not lose your head and buy stock in a wildcat dye enterprise. Let those who know the business finance this war baby.

The Country Editor

Verily, the life of the country editor is a path of thornes.

His bread is promises and his meat is disappointment.

His creditor chaseth him by day and the devil grinneth at him in his dream by night.

One subscription on wood and behold it is rotten and soggy and of short measure.

His "exchanges are waded into in a most merciless manner and he dare not grunt.

He whoopeth up the country politician who gets elected and he knoweth him no more.

He puffeth the church fair gratis, and then attendeth it and his puarter payeth for two oysters.

He boometh his town and all things therein, and yet receiveth no support and is a prophet with out honor in his own country.

The young marry and he giveth them a great puff, and they go to housekeeping and taketh not his.

Yea, he is bound with woe and his days are full of grief and vexation.

But sorrow endureth only for a night and joy cometh in the morning.

He plodeth along and endureth in patience, and it is written that he will receive his reward at the judgement.—One-of-them.

Building Boom in Evidence.

New York February 26, 1916.

In not one line of interior business in the United States is there the slightest recession from the activities of the past 10 months, and in many of them the pressure for the greater expansion is very marked.

The magnificent earnings of the leading railways, the continuance of the demands for freight cars, notwithstanding the many thousands of new cars and the other thousands of old cars repaired and put into service during the last year, these are so encouraging that the railroads are ready to place large orders for all classes of materials and supplies, materials and supplies urgently required, but the difficulty now is to obtain these in any reasonable period of time.

These are red-letter weeks and months of earnings for the railway companies, and their new prosperity enables them to become a most powerful and influential factor in the extension of prosperity to other lines of business. Like many of the bankers, many of the railway managers have learned the lesson that "live and let live" is the true motto of dealing with their patrons, and that a despoiled population is inimical and dangerous, while a fairly treated and contented people make for the profit of the loaning and the transportation interest as well as for profit of industrial and commercial interests. There is a wave of good times in this country now.

Mr. and Mrs. John Cook and Beverly Johnson and wife were presented in County Court, Saturday, each charged with keeping their children from school. Both made a plea that their children had insufficient clothing and that they had been sick. Judge Ward dismissed them, this being the first offense, telling them if they made application to the proper authorities clothing would be furnished the children. If they repeat the offense each will be fined.—Georgetown Times.

Stanley Approves Plan.

Frankfort, March 5.—There will be no special session of the General Assembly. This seems to be definitely determined, and a resolution will be introduced in the House to-morrow providing for a tax commission to study the situation and prepare a bill, revising the whole tax system and carrying into effect the constitutional amendment to be reported at the 1918 session.

This programme has Governor Stanley's sanction, and when it is done the last platform pledge will have been kept. It is understood that the opponents of tax reform, like all other anti-administrationists, have masked their opposition behind so-called moral issues, and it is believed impossible to get calm, dispassionate consideration of the tax question at this or an expensive special session. The hope of the administration is that with all the other platform pledges redeemed the people will elect members to the 1918 General Assembly with an eye single to their fitness to cope with the tax question.

In the meantime the bill changing the manner of assessing property and equalizing taxes, giving the State board inquisitorial powers, if enacted, is expected to be a revenue getter, and this, with certain economies put into operation, is expected to carry the State thru this administration without increasing the floating debt.

The $3,000,000 outstanding in interest-bearing warrants, found when this administration came into office, will have to be taken care of to a great extent by the general tax revision law.

The Governor, it is known, had hoped to get the Anti-trust Anti-lobby, Corrupt Practices Bills and other platform measures thru in time to give consideration at this session to tax reform, and in conferences and public speeches he has insisted that the Assembly settle down to consider cooly and deliberately, the financial condition of the Commonwealth. The administration has been able to get through both houses the platform measures, but it has required a strenuous effort and all the executive power and vigor. Not that there was much open opposition, but it has become apparent that it will be impossible to prevent issues that do not relate to taxation from being agitated.

Gov. Stanley intends to appoint careful and conservative men on the tax commission and to give the subject much personal attention. He believes that before the end of his administration Kentucky will have a modern, thoroughly efficient and equitable tax system.

No Advancement In a Generation.

It has been said that city schools taking cities of the first, second, third and fourth class have made some progress inthe past generation, but it is largely a debatable question whether or not the rural schools have made any noticeable advancement. This is a question that may be looked into and decided. The reason for this lagging behind in progress by our rural schools are two in number, one is that the examinations are not rigid enough, and that far too many incompetent teachers are allowed to continue to teach on without attending school and building up in their work; second, there is a lack of sentiment for school work with little determination on the part of many to see that their children get the benefit of a good rural school education.

The salaries of teachers are on the increase in many States and should do so in Kentucky. It were better to have six months well taught school by a competent teacher than to have ten month poor work done by a teacher not qualified for the place.

Trustees and patrons should supplement the school fund some $100 or $200 in each district by popular subscription and than see to it that first-class, well qualified teachers be employed.—Owen County Democrat.

Crop and Stock.

Grant county will increase its acreage of tobacco this year.

Plant beds have been sowed in the Tennessee Dark District.

The tobacco crop in Virginia this year will be 25 per cent smaller than that of 1915.

The recent thawing and freezing has ruined the wheat crop in some parts of Indiana.

In Clark county an effort will be made to increase the acreage of corn this year, although very little has been done preparing for the crop.

In Montgomery county pastures have begun to green up and the large crop of lambs is doing fine, in fact all kinds of livestock is in good condition.

Bracken county growers had sowed no plant beds up to the first of this week. The county's crop will, in acreage, be about the same as that of last year.

In Fayette county good dairy cows bring from $75 to $100. Offers of $15 a bushel is being made for hemp seed, while the fiber is selling for $14 per ton. Corn is selling at $1.00 per bushel.

A Dairy Cow Test Association has been organized in Shelby county, the object of the association is the determining which are the most profitable cows in milk and butter production. Over 500 cows will be placed on test at the start. In this way the breeders hope to improve their dairy stock.

Bell county will vote on a $150,000 road bond issue May 13th, the second in the past 14 months. The first issue of $250,000 is not sufficient to put all the roads in the condition desired.

HUSBAND RESCUED DESPAIRING WIFE

After Four Years of Discouraging Conditions, Mrs. Bullock Gave Up in Despair. Husband Came to Rescue.

Catron, Ky.—In an interesting letter from this place, Mrs. Bettie Bullock writes as follows: "I suffered for four years, with womanly troubles, and during this time, I could only sit up for a little while, and could not walk anywhere at all. At times, I would have severe pains in my left side.

The doctor was called in, and his treatment relieved me for a while, but I was soon confined to my bed again. After that, nothing seemed to do me any good. I had gotten so weak I could not stand, and I gave up in despair.

At last, my husband got me a bottle of Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I commenced taking it. From the very first dose, I could tell it was helping me. I can now walk two miles without its tiring me, and am doing my work."

If you are all run down from womanly troubles, don't give up in despair. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic. It has helped more than a million women, in its 50 years of wonderful success, and should surely help you, too. Your druggist has sold Cardui for years. He knows what it will do. Ask him. He will recommend it. Begin taking Cardui today.
